The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYNUM, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7477) making appropriations to supply deficiences in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for prior years, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Clerk if the amendment which I proposed in regard to the Indian depredation claims is shown to have been adopted by the committee?

The Clerk reported that it had been adopted by the committee.

Mr. SAYERS. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. If a separate vote is not demanded on any amendment, the Chair will put them in gross.

A separate vote was not demanded.

The amendments were agreed to in gross.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SAYERS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

Mr. HEARD obtained unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of J. E. Brown, Fifty-second Congress, there being no adverse report.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. STOCKDALE, indefinitely, on account of important business.

Mr. SAYERS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 27, 1894.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings will be read by the Secretary.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to be a waste of the time of the Senate to read the Journal. Corrections are never made when it is read. I ask unanimous consent that the reading be dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

DEATH OF PRESIDENT CARNOT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following cablegram; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

PARIS, June 26, 1894.

The President of the Council and the Minister of Foreign Affairs, to the President of the Senate, Washington:

The Government of the Republic will communicate to the Senate and to the Chamber of Deputies at their next session the expressions of fraternal sympathy which it has received from the Senate and from the House of Representatives of the great American Republic, but it will not delay until that moment to communicate to you the expression of all its thanks and to make known to you the consolation which the resolutions of the Senate and of the House of Representatives have brought to it in the great grief which has stricken this country.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Attorney-General, increasing his estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for fees and expenses of marshals of United States courts for the current fiscal year from $50,000 to $125,000; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of April 14, 1894, calling for information as to the number of pensioners whose pensions have been suspended or canceled since the 4th day of March, 1893, etc., a copy of a letter and accompanying inclosures from the Commissioner of Pensions, to whom the matter was referred for report, containing the information desired; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of the disbursements for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, made in the States and Territories under the provisions of "An act to apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to the more complete endowment and support of the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, established under the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862," approved August 30, 1890, as required by section 5 of that act; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DIXON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Washington County, R. I., praying that in the passage of any law providing for the taxation of incomes, the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from taxation; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ALLEN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Lincoln County, Nebr., praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BATE presented memorials of Sobel & Co., Connor & Brady, and J. Cooney & Co., of Nashville; of W. H. Wilkerson & Co., Goodman Brothers, Jacobs & Garrett, Kettman & Montedonico, and Emil Nathan & Co., of Memphis; of N. C. Ford & Co., and E. R. Betterton & Co., of Chattanooga; of Fitzgerald & Ashe, Perry & Co., and Betterton & Co., of Knoxville; of Ragsdale & Peck, of Springfield, and of Young & Nobles, of Paris, wholesale and retail liquor dealers of Tennessee, remonstrating against any increase of the tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the present bonded period; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH presented sundry memorials of wholesale and retail liquor dealers of Savannah and Atlanta, in the State of Georgia, remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the present bonded period; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of 15 citizens of Norton, Ohio, praying that a duty of at least 5 cents per pound be placed upon wool; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade and Transportation of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying that an appropriation be made for a national exhibit at the Cotton States and International Exposition to be held at Atlanta, Ga., in the fall of 1895; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

TARIFF BULLETINS.

Mr. VOORHEES. I report from the Committee on Finance Tariff Bulletins Nos. 48, 49, 50, and 51 inclusive, being replies to tariff inquiries in regard to wool and manufactures of wool. I ask that the bulletins be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 2162) to prevent the appointment of cadets to the Naval or Military Academy of the United States from States, Territories, or districts in which such cadets do not reside, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SMITH. At the request of my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON], who is absent from the Chamber owing to illness, I introduce a bill.

The bill (S. 2163) to remove the charge of desertion against James Fay was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WHITE introduced a bill (S. 2164) authorizing the county of Coconino, Territory of Arizona, to issue bonds for the construction of a county building at the county seat thereof; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 2165) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes," approved June 16, 1880; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PERSONS ENGAGED IN PROTECTED INDUSTRIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up Order of Business 448.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution directing the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the Senate of the total number of persons engaged in protected industries in the United States whose wages are or may be claimed to be affected by tariff legislation, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CULLOM. This is the resolution that was up yesterday?

Mr. ALLEN. It is the resolution on which we took a vote yesterday morning.

Mr. CULLOM. We can scarcely act on anything with only half a dozen Senators present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CULLOM. I think I shall have to suggest the want of a quorum before any vote is taken on the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from Illinois will withdraw the demand.

Mr. HARRIS. It is a suggestion that can not be withdrawn when made.

Mr. ALLEN. It has been withdrawn here several times to my certain knowledge.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not remember a single instance since I have been in the Senate when the suggestion has been made and it has been withdrawn.

Mr. COCKRELL. It has never been withdrawn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair considers the rule imperative that when a Senator suggests the want of a quorum the roll shall be called. That will have to be done.

Mr. CULLOM. I would not have made the suggestion, but as I remember the yeas and nays were taken on the reference of the resolution, and if they are desired on the adoption of the resolution we can hardly ignore the situation as we see it here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Hale,	Mitchell, Wis.	Shoup,
Bate,	Harris,	Pasco,	Smith,
Berry,	Hill,	Patton,	Teller.
Blackburn,	Hoar,	Peffer,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Proctor,	Voorhees,
Cullom,	Lindsay,	Pugh,	Walsh,
Dixon,	McMillan,	Quay,	Washburn,
Gordon,	Mills,	Sherman,	White.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. PALMER] is absent from the Senate on account of illness, and he will probably be absent during the day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Thirty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is no quorum present. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Sergeant-at-Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. IRBY, Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, Mr. TURPIE, Mr. MORGAN, Mr. ALLISON, Mr. CALL, Mr. DOLPH, Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. MCLAURIN, and Mr. CHANDLER entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE-PRESIDENT (a 10 o'clock and 20 minutes a. m.) Forty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. HOAR. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution directing the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the Senate of the total number of persons engaged in protected industries in the United States whose wages are or may be claimed to be affected by tariff legislation, etc.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may go over until to-morrow without losing its place. Only seven or eight minutes remain until the unfinished business comes up. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] desires to include in the resolution some other matters, and he is not here at this moment.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MCMILLAN presented the petition of J. A. Herrick and sundry other citizens of Ypsilanti, Mich., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations, be exempted from the proposed income tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CHANDLER presented the petition of Charles Winch and 1 other citizen of Langdon, N. H., and of Clifton A. Metcalf and 6 other citizens of Alstead, N. H., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2034) authorizing the persons herein named to accept of certain decorations and testimonials from the Hawaiian Government, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. GRAY May 25, 1894, intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Rules, reported two amendments intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PEFFER (for Mr. PALMER), from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5459) to pension the minor children of Alfred Phipps, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted on the 21st instant, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and be printed; which was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TURPIE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS FOR INSURANCE PAID ON VESSELS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate as part of the morning business the resolution of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to cause the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to reëxamine the Treasury settlements made in 1884 and 1885 and numbered 5000, 5085, 5201, 5300, 5303, 5363, and 5368, heretofore certified to Congress for appropriation in favor of the respective claimants for insurance paid by them on vessels, and to submit the reasons for the certification, together with a detailed statement of the facts upon which each originated; and report the same to Congress in a manner similar to the report submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, January 31, 1894 (printed in Senate Executive Document No. 98, second session Fifty-third Congress), in regard to certain other Treasury settlements certified to Congress for appropriation at the same time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I wish to correct a date in the resolution. I ask leave to modify it by striking out in line 14 the words "January thirty-first" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "May sixteenth."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

COURTS IN STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. PUGH. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1252) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the times and places to hold terms of the United States courts in the State of Washington."

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment in line 82, after the word "had," to strike out "had the said existing statute not been passed," and insert "as if the same were returnable to or pending in the terms of said courts provided for by this act;" so as to read:

And the provisions of statute now existing for the holding of said courts on the first Monday of April and November in each year is hereby repealed, and all suits, prosecutions, processes, recognizances, bail bonds, and other things pending in or returnable to said court on the days last named are hereby transferred to, and shall be made returnable to, and have force in the said respective terms in this act provided, in the same manner and with the same effect as they would have had as if the same were returnable to or pending in the terms of said courts provided for by this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. PUGH. It was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], who is now absent on account of ill health.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It relates to the courts in the district of Washington?

Mr. PUGH. Yes, sir.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 730) making Labor Day a legal holiday.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3511) concerning the weight of evidence in pension claims;

A bill (H. R. 4507) for the relief of Witherby & Gaffney;

A bill (H. R. 4611) to amend an act approved January 26, 1893, to authorize the construction of bridges across the Hiwassee, the Tennessee, and Clinch Rivers, in the State of Tennessee; and

A bill (H. R. 7449) authorizing the Minneapolis Gaslight Company, of Minneapolis, Minn., to lay submerged gas pipes across the Mississippi River at Minneapolis.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print 8,000 extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 4701) to incorporate the Supreme Lodge of the Knights of Pythias; and

A bill (H. R. 4961) granting certain rights over Lime Point military reservation in the State of California.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of half past 10 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, this bill proceeds upon the theory that the income which a person receives from individual investments ought not to be taxed, unless the amount thereof exceeds $4,000; it also, from the way in which it is now worded, proceeds upon the other theory, which I think must be regarded as an inadvertent one, that corporate investments should be compelled to pay an income tax upon the income therefrom without any reference to the $4,000 exemption. It strikes me that that discrimination was not intended by the authors of the bill, and that with great propriety it might be amended so as to do away with that discrimination. It seems to me some amendment can be easily framed, whereby a person who invests in corporate securities, so far as his individual dividends are concerned, should be entitled to the same exemption as though he had made the investment in a corporation, in a farm, or in any other property aside from investments in a corporation.

I can see no reason for the distinction sought to be made. It may have occurred in just this way: The first suggestion of an income tax came from the President's message and the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury, and, as I have stated before, there was no suggestion of an individual income tax, except in a most restricted form. There was a recommendation, a mild one, in favor of taxation of incomes from certain corporate investments, according to the language of the recommendation. It was argued that corporate investments were more or less a matter of public concern, and that if they were taxed there would be no undue publicity given other than that which now exists.

The theory was that these investments might properly be taxed without injustice to individuals, avoiding all inquisitorial features and other hardships; and it was claimed that such a taxation upon corporate investments avoided all questions of taxation upon thrift, upon industry, upon labor, or upon brains; that it was simply a tax upon money accumulated upon investments already made, and did not tax the labor, or activity, or brains of a citizen.

That was a theory, of course, upon which the bill might have been framed, but the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives and the Finance Committee of the Senate have proceeded partly upon one theory and partly upon the other. They have proceeded to tax the individual incomes, and now they have proceeded in another form to tax corporations, but in the system which they have provided for the taxation of incomes they unintentionally, in my judgment, do injustice to individuals.

For instance, I have $5,000, and I invest it in a partnership for carrying on a dry goods store. If my profit is $3,000, if I may assume that by an investment of $5,000 I could make a profit of $3,000, of course that profit of $3,000 is not taxed, as the individual is entitled to an exemption of $4,000, but if I place that $5,000 as an investment in a corporation, before a dividend comes to me from that corporation the tax is already taken out in advance. It of course makes no difference to a man whose income exceeds $4,000, for he has to pay the tax on his income in excess of that amount; but this injustice is upon those people who have incomes of less than $4,000, the poor people of the country, the widows and orphans, and the men of infirm health, who rely upon the little accumulations which have been given to them or which they have worked for and laid up. Some amendment ought to be suggested here which will make this tax less burdensome to that class of people. The man who has an income of over $4,000 is amply protected in either form of this bill; but it is the man whose income does not exceed $4,000, but whose investment is in a corporation, who is unjustly affected.

Mr. President, I see no answer to this proposition anywhere. I think that some amendment ought to be prepared to reach that difficulty.

There is one suggestion I wish to make in reference to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. I shall vote for it cheerfully if that is the only one we can get which will afford any relief, and that does afford some relief. Still, I can see that it possibly might do some injustice. There are corporations whose capital stock is less than $100,000, the stock of which is very valuable, and there might be very large dividends made to individual stockholders. If we were to exempt them all as a class I think it would give rise to criticism, but I shall vote for the Senator's amendment, if that is the best we can get.

Mr. ALLISON. If we can get anything better, I should prefer it; but I suggest to the Senator that as to all the corporations with a capital of less than $100,000 the stockholders will be relegated to the situation of individuals if they have incomes of $4,000, including the dividends from these small corporations. They will be required to pay the tax, and they ought in such cases to pay it.

Mr. HILL. Perhaps that is so, and in that view the amendment might be proper; but it strikes me that instead of exempting any class of corporations and specifying the corporations which have $100,000 capital or less than $100,000 capital it would be better to proceed directly upon the individual and frame our legislation so as to affect the individual.

I ask the Senator from Missouri whether he has any suggestion to make which would cover this point? All my motive in regard to it is to cover this point if we can. I think it would be better to do that than to proceed by the wholesale exemption to which I have referred.

Mr. President, some such amendment will not injure the bill.

It will perfect it; it will relieve it from the charge of inconsistency; it will relieve it from the charge of inequality; it will say that we make no unjust discrimination against corporate investments. There is nothing so particularly obnoxious about a corporate investment that it should be discriminated against.

The investment in any private business should not be placed upon any better or higher plane than an investment in a small corporation. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] instanced the corporations for dairy purposes in his own State. There are plenty of them in New York State and elsewhere, small corporations in their way, in which farmers have invested a very few thousand dollars, and from which they may derive an income of three, four, five, or six hundred dollars; and they ought to have the benefit of the whole income if of course it does not exceed $4,000; but they are discriminated against by the present situation of the bill. My object is to do away with that injustice and make the bill defensible so far as we can in that particular.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the question that meets us on the threshold of this debate with regard to corporations is whether the same rule should be applied to corporations as to exemptions that is applied to individuals.

The theory of the income-tax law, as I understand it, is that the citizen pays upon consumption under the present system of taxation in the United States. In my judgment it is an unjust and unequal taxation. The poor man pays as much as the rich man, the man worth $5,000 pays as much as the man worth $100,000,000 and in some instances he pays a great deal more, because he buys possibly better clothing and better food. That is a question of taste and of habit. Experience teaches us that the very rich men, if we are to believe the stories that are told about them, are the men most devoted to rigid economy, denying themselves in many instances the ordinary comforts of life.

Under the tariff system, the system of consumption, the poor man, then, as I say, frequently pays more than the rich man. In my opinion, this is not right. If I believed as the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] said in his speech the other day, that the indirect system of taxation represented by the tariff is the best system, I should most unquestionably take his side of this proposition and argue in favor of a tax based upon consumption. I do not believe so. My idea of taxation is that it should be upon property, upon incomes, and in proportion to the protection which the Government actually gives to the citizen.

Why should a man pay not upon his property but upon his wants, his consumption? What argument can be made for a system which ignores the fact that $100,000,000 is protected by the strong arm of the Government instead of $5,000, and imposes the same tax upon both, or the larger tax upon the man with $5,000 worth of property with the exemption of $4,000 in this bill? Why? Because, right or wrong, it was assumed in the House of Representatives, and we adopt now the same exemption, that the consumption of a man, say, with six or seven in his family in the course of the year will amount to about the sum which we have exempted. Does that rule apply to corporations? Does the corporation eat anything? Does it drink anything? In addition to this, does not the corporation receive extraordinary corporate privileges as a gift from the Government?

Mr. HILL. A gift from what Government?

Mr. VEST. From the Government of the United States and from the States, because, while the powers of the corporation may come from the State, it is protected by the strong arm of the General Government, as is every other person. If you ignore the fact that any protection is given by the General Government to the citizens of the United States, you eliminate all the functions of the General Government itself. If the property of the individual is protected under the Constitution by the General Government, the property of the corporation is also protected; but the corporation pays no taxes in the way of consumption, as does the individual. What does it pay to the General Government for the protection that is given to it and its franchises and property? Under the tariff system it pays nothing, and therefore there should be no exemption to the corporation as to the individual.

Mr. President, the House of Representatives adopted the system as to its details which was in the old law of 1864 and which is found in the law of Pennsylvania to-day. It required the corporation to retain out of the dividend upon its stock and bonds, which were paid to the stockholder and the bondholder by the corporation, 2 per cent tax, and to pay that over to the General Government. In other words, it made every corporation a collector simply for the Government and nothing else. That is the law of the State of Pennsylvania to-day, where they tax both stock and bonds.

The bill as it came from the House of Representatives taxed the bonded indebtedness of every corporation, and we have stricken that out, and still there is complaint in regard to the pending bill. Under the law of Michigan I believe a tax is put upon corporations in the same way. Instead of making the corporation a collector simply for the Government, we have endeavored to simplify the bill and, in my judgment, we have strengthened it, by putting the tax directly upon the corporation and then allowing the corporation to adjust its relations with its own stockholders as it sees proper.

We treat a corporation as a legal entity, just as we treat the individual. We say to every corporation in the United States, "You pay no tariff tax, as does the individual citizen, but you shall pay the 2 per cent which we put upon the citizen on account of the protection given to his property." We apply the same rule to corporations, leaving out the exemption, because of course there is no consumption by the corporation as there is by the individual. This is the theory of the bill.

Now, of course (I say of course, because it is apparent upon the face of it), there are hard cases. It is complained that small stockholders in these corporations are made to pay. We do not deal with the stockholders. We deal with a corporation as a legal being, doing business, artificially created, receiving protection upon its property from the General Government like citizens receive protection upon theirs. If it consumed clothing and food and paid the internal-revenue tax and the tariff import tax as does the individual, then the exemption should apply.

Are we to be told now that these corporations, with their enormous corporate privileges, with their enormous surplus funds, with their control of the capital of this country, are to be entirely exempt from the income tax? I hardly think that any Senator will stand here and make any such claim. If we are to apply the theory in the bill to corporations, then the bill as it stands is, in my judgment, correct.

Mr. HOAR. I should like at some time in the Senator's argument to have him state, in regard to one particular class, whether he does not think the bill should be amended to meet the case. I quite agree with everything the Senator has said in regard to what are popularly called corporations, the great aggregations of wealth and capital in the country. What I am about to say may be a repetition of what was said yesterday by others, but still I should like to have the Senator's views.

In my State it is the almost universal practice, and it is a practice which has grown up in England under what they call corporations or associations of limited liability, to go into a joint stock company. Two or three youngsters just out of their apprenticeship go into partnership together and do some little portion of the work of a machine shop. I could name several such establishments in my own city. One is a concern manufacturing particular kinds of toys, and another engaged in the manufacture of bicycles in a small way. And so it is in business of all sorts and kinds, partly, I suppose, because it involves legal safeguards, but the chief reason is that when one of the partners dies or goes out of the company for any reason, the survivors in the corporation do not have to liquidate the concern, and wait a year or two and go through a process of law before they can go on with the business.

That has become, I say, the almost universal mode of doing every kind of little business. There will sometimes be salaries. There will be a frugal salary for the president and the vice-president and the treasurer, but they leave in the concern all they make and go on with it except to derive from it sufficient for a frugal living.

Now, it does seem to me that those who engage in business in this way should not be wholly deprived of the exemption of $4,000 which you give to the individual.

That is the point to which I wish to ask the attention of the Senator, because if he thinks it is not reasonable that such persons should be considered in making an income-tax provision, of course there is no use in drawing an amendment to cover it. But if he thinks it is reasonable that that class of people should have the benefit of this exemption as if they were engaged in business as individuals, then it seems to me an amendment could be submitted which would meet with his approval.

Mr. VEST. It is not a question for me individually to determine. It is in the hands of the majority of the Finance Committee, of whom I am only a single member, and of the Senate. I express my individual opinion and what I suppose to be the opinions of the committee, although I may not be correct in regard to the latter statement. It is true that you can find hard cases under the proposed law as under every other tax law.

Mr. HOAR. This is a whole commonwealth doing business and not an individual case.

Mr. VEST. I have no doubt that the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts is correct, but if you apply the principle which I have endeavored to enunciate—that corporations, in consideration of their corporate privileges and the protection given to their property, should bear their proportion of this common tax placed upon all the people of the United States, then I do not see why the amount invested in the corporation should affect the principle at all.

Let me state a fact which I know personally. In my own State and I take it for granted that the same is true in the other States of the Union, the power of incorporation has created great hardship and in many cases has been accessory to great wrong. Men go in and make up a corporation in order to escape individual liability. Under the laws of my State they can create a corporation, and if there should be a judgment for damages against it, if it should become bankrupt, so long as the stock has been fully paid up the stockholders are not individually liable. In many instances this fact is made avail of by persons in order to escape the individual liability which would otherwise be put upon them.

Why are corporations created? Why have they increased so marvelously in this country with the increase of wealth? It is because corporate powers and privileges are peculiarly favored by capital. Corporations to-day are thicker almost, I was about to say, than individual investors. The vast body of the wealth of the country is in their hands, and it is because of the peculiar privileges given them by the terms of their creation which are favored as I have said especially by capitalists. Now, if we undertake to discriminate between the large and the small corporations we enter into a labyrinth out of which I see no escape whatever. Senators may talk about citizens, about widows, for instance, who have their all in these corporations. We do not deal with them. We deal with corporations as artificial beings, whether large or small. We deal with the individual, and give him an exemption on account of consumption over $4,000.

Mr. President, I can not state this matter better than it was stated by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], a distinguished leader of the Republican party, when he argued the question of an income tax in 1870. I ask the Secretary to read one of the arguments of the Senator from Ohio in regard to this very point.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Now, the question is whether we shall repeal what is left of the income tax by this bill, yielding $17,700,000, the only property tax now levied by the United States of America. Sir, this is a republican Government, where, if we discriminate at all, we ought to discriminate in favor of the poor, in favor of the great mass of the people. "The greatest good to the greatest number" has been a favorite theme of demagogism for a hundred years. Here we have in New York Mr. Astor, with an income of millions derived from real estate, accumulated year after year by the mere family pride of accumulation; and we have alongside of him a poor man receiving $1,000 a year. What is the discrimination of our law in that case? It is altogether against the poor man; we tax his clothing, we tax his consumption.

By the laws of nature, the laws of heat and cold, of hunger and thirst, it requires as much to feed the poor man as it does the rich man. No more dollars need be drawn from the coffers of Mr. Astor to supply his natural wants than are needed to supply the wants of the poorest laboring man in New York, except as to quality; and yet all our national taxes are thrown upon consumption and not upon property. We tax the tea, the coffee, the sugar, the spices the poor man uses. We tax every little thing that is imported from abroad, together with the whisky that makes him drunk and the beer that cheers him and the tobacco that consoles him. Everything that he consumes we call a luxury and tax it; and yet we are afraid to touch the income of Mr. Astor. Is there any justice in that? Is there any propriety in it? Why, sir, the income tax is the only one that tends to equalize these burdens between the rich and the poor.

Mr. VEST. That is the argument of the Senator from Ohio, and in my judgment upon principles of equity it is unanswerable. It is much better stated than I could possibly place it before the Senate.

A great deal is said here about the exemption of $4,000 to individuals. What does it amount to? It amounts to $80 a year in the shape of taxation—2 per cent upon $4,000. We are told now that liberty lies bleeding in the streets unless this exemption of $4,000, amounting to a tax of $80 a year, is given to corporations, who eat nothing, drink nothing, buy no clothes, and who are under the protection of the Government and receive peculiar corporate privileges, which the Government also protects.

Mr. President, analogies have been drawn here between the conditions of corporations under the old law and at this time. During the war, when the excise taxes were levied upon corporations, what did they pay? They paid upon all their output, using the language of the statute, nearly 6 per cent. If a manufacturing corporation turned out manufactured goods, they paid from 4 to 6 per cent without regard to the fact whether they made or lost in the course of their business during the year.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator knows as well as I do that the taxes imposed upon corporations were excise taxes and were levied for the purpose of raising money to carry on the Government.

Mr. VEST. Of course, I know that.

Mr. ALDRICH. Every conceivable industry and every conceivable employment in the United States was taxed at that time, and it was not an income tax at all. The argument the Senator is using in regard to the excise tax imposed upon manufacturing corporations and other corporations at that time has no sort of application to the provisions of an income tax.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Rhode Island allow me to make the application of my own facts, instead of making an argument?

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Missouri will do that, as a matter of course.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Rhode Island asks no question. He simply gets up and makes his own argument, which, with all respect, I must protest against as a custom of the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was fearful the Senator from Missouri might not understand the matter.

Mr. VEST. I think I am a man of ordinary intelligence and know the condition of things during the war and why that law was made. I referred to the fact that allusions had been made to the tax upon corporations during the war, in contrast, or in analogy, at any rate, with the tax which we now propose to put upon corporations; and a great outcry is made here that we are treating these corporations unjustly and harshly. I was proceeding to show, when the Senator from Rhode Island enlightened me as to the history of this country, that between 1860 and 1865 those excise taxes were imposed (I do not care for what purpose; that is not the question) amounting to nearly 6 per cent upon the output of the corporations.

What do we propose to do now? We propose to put a tax of 2 per cent upon their net profits over business and operating expenses. If they have lost in the course of their business they pay nothing. If they have made money they pay 2 per cent. Is there anything wrong in that? Is there any hardship in it?

If the provision in the bill as it came from the other House had been retained, which put a 2 per cent tax upon the bonded indebtedness of corporations, we should have heard from the other side of this Chamber and from this side such a protest as never was heard before in Congress in regard to a tax law.

But that provision has been changed, and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] indirectly, if not directly, taunted us with the fact that we had now exempted the bondholders and relied simply upon their consciences as to whether they pay any tax at all. We concluded deliberately, without regard to the votes which might be received upon the bill, to strike out the tax upon the indebtedness of corporations. Yet that amendment is made one of the instruments now for taunting us with the charge that we have weakened the bill. I said yesterday, and I repeat now, that the bill is far more favorable to corporations than anyone could have supposed it would have been made by the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not do me the injustice to say that I criticised adversely the amendment made by the committee. On the contrary, I stated distinctly in response to a question that I favored it. But certainly I have a right to draw an analogy between that amendment and the refusal to make others of a kindred character.

Mr. VEST. I object to no legitimate conclusion. I am simply pursuing my general line of remark in saying that the bill is as just to corporations as it can be made, upon the theory that the income tax is imposed.

An amendment has been submitted to the committee by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], which exempts the small stockholders. I ask the Secretary to read it, because I desire to comment upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

The amount of any dividends paid to a single stockholder not exceeding $4,000 annually may be deducted by corporations, companies, or associations, not including partnerships, from any amounts upon which they would otherwise be compelled to pay, the tax herein provided for; but the amount of such dividends so received by such single stockholder shall be included in estimating any income he may have in excess of $4,000, and in that event it shall bear its proportion of the tax herein provided for.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is that an amendment proposed by the committee?

Mr. VEST. No; it is an amendment suggested by the Senator from New Jersey. It has not been adopted by the committee. It seems to me evident if that amendment or one similar to it should be adopted that it would be almost impossible of execution.

Here is a corporation which by the bill as it stands is required to pay 2 per cent upon its net profits over and above its business and operating expenses, deducting all losses and the interest upon its bonded or other indebtedness. How is the corporation to settle with each individual stockholder in making up its net profits for the year? It does its business as an entirety. It makes so much money or it loses so much money. It is to pay the tax upon its net profits. Now, if that amendment should be adopted it would be requisite for the corporation, before it ascertains what its net profits are, to set aside certain amounts of money, not to be taken any account of in its business at all. How is this to be done?

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me just a moment? Would it not be easy in this way? Of course every corporation keeps books ordinarily, and by the terms of the pending bill it is required to keep books. Necessarily a corporation can not declare a dividend to one stockholder and not to another. The stockholder can go into the court and compel an equal distribution of the profits. At a certain date the corporation desires to declare a dividend. It simply declares a dividend to its various stockholders, and then when on the 1st of March it makes this declaration as to the amount of its income, it deducts simply the dividend paid to its stockholders. Is there any real practical difficulty about it. The individual stockholder of course can enforce his rights and see that all the stockholders are equally protected in the corporation.

Mr. VEST. It seems to me it makes intricate and complex the business of all these corporations, and opens the door to great indirection, if not to fraud. But, so far as I am concerned, I have stated the reasons why I do not believe any corporation should have an exemption of $4,000. I believe the bill is right as it is now, and that the corporations ought to be made to pay, as they pay no tax upon consumption, without the exemptions. I have no other interest in it except that of a Senator generally in facilitating business and arriving at results; but if the Senate comes to the conclusion that the same rule should be applied to corporations as to individuals, the direct and proper way, it seems to me, would be to apply to corporations without regard to size the exemption of $4,000, which is now given to individuals, because we all know that some of the largest corporations in this country in the amount of business have the smallest amount of capital stock.

I know banks in my own State with $50,000 capital and three or four million dollars of deposits. There are institutions in New England which have very small amounts of capital stock and which handle millions upon millions of dollars in the way of business each year.

The amendment of the Senator from Iowa is dangerous in that regard, because it does not do what I have no doubt he wishes to do. It is not the amount of capital stock which determines the size of the corporation. A corporation is based upon the character and credit of its directors and stockholders.

The largest banks in this country have the smallest amount of capital stock, and that is not a criterion. But when you enter into this maze and labyrinth of details and undertake to go into the counting house of a corporation and examine into all their business in order to frame a statute, you are simply piling up perplexity, and doubt, and difficulty. As legislators for 70,000,000 people we must deal with principles, systems, and general laws, and in my judgment the proposed law, imperfect as it is and as it must necessarily be, is in all its details as accurate, and fair, and just as we can make it.

Mr. ALLISON. I have modified the amendment I offered last evening.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated as modified.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 22, section 59, add the following:

Having a capital, including surplus, exceeding $100,000: Provided, That expenditures for materials or articles purchased for use in manufacture or for resale, and for insurance, taxes, and other incidental expenses paid by any manufacturing or trading corporation, company, or association, shall be considered as operating and business expenses in estimating the profits or income of any such corporation, company, or association.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, when I offered the amendment yesterday I stated distinctly my object in submitting it. It was not in any sense to exempt corporations from their just contribution to any income tax that might be properly imposed upon the people of the United States. The Senator from Missouri does not touch in his argument the point of my amendment. It is that inasmuch as individuals who own no stock in any corporation, but who have an income of $4,000 and who may pay taxes to the extent of $4,000 more upon their property yielding no income, are exempted by the income tax, and at the same time there are in the United States hundreds of thousands of individuals who have small earnings invested in the form of stock in corporations and have no exemption at all, we should make some provision whereby these honest poor men of the country may be placed in a condition of equality with those who have at least an income of $4,000 per annum, and are in comfortable circumstances as evidenced by such income.

If the amendment the Senator from Missouri had read, prepared by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], shall be adopted, it will reach what I have proposed, and my amendment, so far as the exemption of small corporations is concerned, will be unnecessary. It was because I feared that this general injustice would prevail by the rejection of any amendment relieving all small stockholders that I sought to minimize that injustice so far as I could by limiting the corporations that are to be taxed under the bill by exempting all small corporations.

The Senator from Missouri says that the object of the committee in changing the House provision is to tax a corporation directly. Mr. President, that is not proposed to be done by the Senator's own amendment. What is the proposition as to taxing these corporations? They are entities in one sense, but they are composed of individuals who own the shares, and who would be taxed on these shares without this corporate provision, and who are now exempted if their income exceeds $4,000. The Senator says a corporation does not eat and is not clothed. But as respects all the great materials that are embraced within our tariff laws a corporation does consume all the raw materials necessary in manufacturing, if it be a manufacturing corporation, or if it be a railroad in operating that railroad. So a corporation is a consumer except that it does not consume food and clothing and has no shelter.

Mr. VEST. Under the terms of the bill all the materials used by a corporation are taken into the account when it makes up its expenses and its profits. Its usual and operating expenses are exempt anyhow.

Mr. ALLISON. In that sense it is true, but what are the arrangements which have been made by the committee? I hope the Senator will not accuse me of adverse criticism when I speak of them. The Senator in his amendment has exempted the bonded debt of all corporations and all other debts of corporations. Why? He has done that because the individual who holds the bonds and the debts must account for them in his individual statement as respects incomes, and if he has over $4,000 thus invested he pays 2 per cent upon the excess. But if his investment in these bonds and indebtedness does not yield an income of $4,000 he stands exempted.

Therefore the great corporations and little corporations, if you please, as respects their indebtedness, have been relegated to the income statement of the individuals who compose them, or who hold the indebtedness of the corporations. My amendment only relegates the stockholders of the small corporations to the situation of bondholders in large corporations and compels them to account for dividends, as holders of bonds of these corporations now account for the income upon said bonds.

Mr. CULLOM. It ought to apply to all corporations and to the small holders of stock.

Mr. ALLISON. So it seems to me. I stated yesterday that if any Senator would prepare an amendment which would embrace all, I would gladly waive, as I will now, the amendment which I propose.

The Senator from Missouri says they are taxing these corporations. How are they taxing them? They expressly provide in section 59 that where a corporation has paid a 2 per cent tax upon dividends the owner of shares in that corporation may deduct that dividend from his general statement as to income; but the difficulty with that provision is that it only takes care of the individual stockholders who have an income in excess of $4,000. I want the Senator from Missouri to so modify the bill as not to do injustice to the small holders as they do not do injustice to the large holders of stock.

How can we defend ourselves, if it is possible for us to provide a just amendment? I know that we can not make a perfect bill or a bill that in some respects may not do injustice; but how can we justify ourselves in making an arrangement here that does exempt the holders of stock in every corporation having an income of $4,000, and mulcting every stockholder who has stock in a corporation that does not yield him $4,000? To say that we can not do that in some form is to say that we are not able to do justice and equality to the people of the United States in imposing taxes upon them. I have not quarreled with the Senator as respects what corporations ought to do or ought not to do. There is no tax practically upon corporations in the bill that does not make full and final exemption to every man who holds bonds or stocks if his income from such corporation is over $4,000.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. I have received a letter from Mr. Blackstone, president of the Chicago and Alton Railroad Company, begging me to secure if I could an exemption in the income-tax provision of the bill for the small stockholders, such as widows and minor children, etc., holding stock in their corporation. He states that in very many instances the small sums of stock that these persons have is all they have in the world to live upon. I understand the bill does not exempt that class of people in connection with either a large corporation or a small one.

Mr. ALLISON. It does not.

Mr. CULLOM. That seems to me to be an outrage.

Mr. ALLISON. That is all I am struggling for, and it is for that reason, in the absence of a provision which would exempt stockholders in all corporations, that I have undertaken to provide a limited exemption as respects the corporate property held, believing that if we are to do injustice we should do the minimum of injustice in enacting a law like this. If the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey shall be adopted it will cure the evil as regards large and small corporations, but if that can not be done I want to cure the injustice and wrong imposed upon the small stockholders in the small corporations of the country.

I do not agree with the Senator from Missouri that the small corporations, as a rule, are organized for the purpose of invasion. It is true that most of the small corporations are organized with a view of escaping individual liability. For example, a farmer in my State owns 160 acres of land (a small farm, or what would be a small farm in some portions of our country), worth $6,000 or $8,000. He has upon his farm the stock. There are half a dozen other farmers about him. He can not risk all his little six or eight thousand dollars in building up a creamery, if you please. I merely give this as an illustration. Therefore a dozen farmers and one or two men in town, who also have small capital, unite, knowing that if they lose their stock by adverse situations as to trade or business they will only lose the money they have put in, and they will not be houseless and homeless. Therefore it is no wrong on the part of those men to take a small interest in such a corporation, with a view of not being mulcted as respects their whole fortunes by engaging in enterprises which might consume their fortunes.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Iowa indicate by what amendment he would bring about the exemption of those small stockholders? I can see the force of his position, but the difficulty seems to be in a mode of accomplishing what he desires.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Missouri a few moments ago, I think in the absence of the Senator from Delaware from the Chamber, read an amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey. That amendment does reach exactly the provision as respects these small stockholders.

Mr. CULLOM. That is not a long amendment, and I ask the Senator to have the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey read again.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I ask that the amendment be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

The amount of any dividends paid to a single stockholder not exceeding $4,000 annually, may be deducted by corporations, companies, or associations, not including partnerships from any amounts upon which they would otherwise be compelled to pay the tax herein provided for; but the amount of such dividends so received by such single stockholder shall be included in estimating any income he may have in excess of $4,000, and in that event it shall bear its proportion of the tax herein provided for.

Mr. ALLISON. There perhaps may be some difficulties in administering that provision, but I do not think there will be the difficulty in administering it suggested by the Senator from Missouri. A corporation makes up a list of its stockholders and a list of its earnings after it has paid the interest upon its bonded and other indebtedness, and after paying its operating and business expenses. I understand those are to be taken out first. If there is anything left, of course, whatever is left is applicable to dividends unless it be a small reserve fund each year for accidents, etc.

Upon that residuary sum the corporation pays 2 per cent to the Government, but it is entitled to charge that over, and if it chooses to do so, against the dividends of every stockholder, little and great, and it would be obliged to do so practically, unless some amendment kindred to this is adopted. If so, and the corporation finds a stockholder who has a dividend amounting to less that $4,000 that is deducted from the 2 per cent and he does not pay it.

Mr. CULLOM. Suppose a stockholder having an amount less than $4,000, so far as the stock is concerned, has a large income outside, what would be done then?

Mr. ALLISON. It provides that the stockholders then must include that in his estimate or return of income, and that stockholder is placed exactly in the relation the committee has placed the bondholder. In other words, we relegate this question, so far as he is concerned, to the integrity and honesty of the man who holds the stock and makes the return. With an income tax of only 2 per cent, I think the men in our country who will seek to defraud and evade will be much smaller than they were when we imposed an income-tax of 5 per cent.

Now, the Senator from Missouri undertakes to say that he has provided a different provision from those contained in the laws of 1864 and 1868. In a shade they are different, but in essence they are the same. We did not undertake to tax corporations as respects their income in 1864 or 1868. We simply used the corporations as instrumentalities on behalf of the Government to gather in the money. Instead of utilizing and using the collectors and deputy collectors of the country we required them to make return and pay the tax, and they in turn turned on their stockholders, and were authorized to deduct from bonds and from stock as well.

The Senator from Missouri adopts precisely that rule except he provides that these corporations shall also pay a tax upon surplus earned during the year, which will be an infinitesimal amount as respects all the great corporations and the little corporations of our country, because there is nothing carried to the surplus account except in the case of national banks, where they are obliged to carry a certain portion of their earnings to surplus from year to year and perhaps other banks and insurance companies. But as to the great body of the corporations of our country they make dividends covering practically their earnings each year.

Mr. President, some amendment may be made which is better than the one I propose, and I agree that my amendment is only partial in its results; it only reaches a portion of the people who have injustice done them here. It will not do for us to say that in making up this bill no inaccuracies or injustice will occur, but shall we do intentional injustice to a great body of our people, amounting to thousands of people beyond all those who are now included and would pay an income tax under this proposed law? It is the small people, after all, who feel this injustice. What matter does it make to a man who has an income of a hundred thousand dollars per annum if he pays $2,000?

It does amount to something to a mechanic, or a laborer, or a farmer who has a thousand or two thousand dollars of stock in some of these corporations and receives two hundred or three hundred dollars from it, that he is obliged to seek the taxgatherer and pay 2 per cent on those small earnings. Therefore we are doing injustice to the very people to whom we ought deal exact justice. It is for the correction of that evil and injustice that I have sought to have amendments made; and I hope the Senator from Missouri and other Senators will agree that if it is possible for us to deal with this question we shall deal with it.

Mr. HARRIS rose.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Tennessee rises to move to lay my amendment on the table I withdraw it, and I shall offer it again.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator anticipates my object. I rose for that purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not want to delay action on the bill, but this talk about the protection of the small stockholders strikes me as hardly warranted by the fact. Nobody desires to put any income tax upon an association of farmers who are running a creamery or a cheese factory. That class of enterprises nobody cares about embarrassing. I think, as a general thing, they are not of a character to be touched by this bill. They are not corporations, so far as my experience goes, but associations. There are very few people, after all, who are interested in these corporations.

Mr. ALDRICH. The bill covers associations.

Mr. TELLER. If the bill covers associations, then they may be included. In this talk about the poor people of the country owning the railroads and the poor people of the country owning the banks, there is a good deal of nonsense.

Mr. ALLISON. Who did talk about that?

Mr. TELLER. I do not say the Senator did, but that has been talked about a good deal during the debate.

Mr. ALLISON. I certainly have not done so.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Colorado will allow me, I stated what the president of a railroad company told me, that a great many poor people own a very small amount of stock in that railroad; and he asked me, if I could, to secure their exemption from an income tax. I have no doubt of the truth of that statement, and I think we ought to exempt them if we can do so.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. Blackstone's idea of a poor man is very different from the idea some of the rest of us may have in that respect. A man who owns a thousand dollars or ten shares in a railroad would be a nonentity in the operation of the road, and he would not come in for any particular care on the part of any official of the road, judging from the little experience I have had in those matters heretofore. If he owned one hundred thousand shares, or fifty thousand, or something of that kind, he might then be considered; but a man owning $5,000 is of no account, and if he owns $5,000 and receives 4 per cent he gets $200, and out of that $200 he pays $4 to the Government. Is that anything so dreadful and so burdensome? If there are any mechanics, if there are any laboring people who are fortunate enough in this country to have a little railroad stock that pays a couple of hundred dollars a year they are not broken up or distressed very much by the payment to the Government of $4 every year.

Mr. President, there is a good deal more interest just now in the people who own small interests in corporations than I have been in the habit of seeing expressed in the Senate for that class of people heretofore. As a general rule their interests have not been considered worthy of a great deal of attention, and the impression will go abroad in the country that after all, the effort which is being made for these corporations is not in the interest of the little stockholders, but the big stockholders.

It seems to me that a corporation is a proper subject for an income tax. I do not know any way by which you can tax the great corporations that are aggregating to themselves the business of the country and the wealth of the country, unless you tax the man who owns $500, or $50, or any other sum in the corporation. It is incidental to the system. Then if the people who have but little money choose to put it in that sort of business they must take their chances and pay their proportion of the tax. No man in these days with $5,000 or $10,000, who is at all wise, puts it in railroad corporation stock. He knows that he is one of those to be ground out whenever the interests of the great stockholders of the country require that he shall disappear.

He is a nonentity, I repeat, with ten or twenty thousand dollars or fifty thousand dollars of such stock in these days. The stocks of railroads in this country are not for investment, they are for management. The other day one of the leading financial papers had a list of $738,000,000 of stock that had been on the market in this country, the most of it at par, not because it was worth par, but because the manipulators put it there, and undoubtedly unloaded some of it upon people of moderate means, but not very much; and that whole $738,000,000 of stock can be bought for about 10 cents on a dollar to-day, and intrinsically it is not worth 4 cents on a dollar, nor 2 cents on a dollar.

Mr. President, I do not believe there is very much in the argument which has been made. If the provision covers or includes a firm or association that makes cheese or butter, I should like to see it stricken out, and that can be done.

Mr. LINDSAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado a question, with his permission. Has he heard of any farmer who opposes this bill or any provision of it?

Mr. TELLER. I believe that the farmers of the United States without exception are in favor of this income-tax principle. I do not want to see it made objectionable to the farmers. I said the other day, and repeat now, I hope the income tax will become a permanent policy in the monetary system of this country, as it is fast becoming a part of the monetary systems of the world.

It is the most equitable and just system for the collection of revenue that can be devised by man, and I should dislike to see anything put in the provision that would bring no money to the Government and at the same time bring odium upon it. But it is not to be brought into disrepute because a man who gets a hundred dollars of income out of some corporation pays two of it to the Government. One of the common, plain people of the country who is so fortunate as to have an income of $50 a year from a corporation will think he is lucky if he gets out with the payment of a dollar tax. The chances are 40 to 1 that the association will rob him out of the whole of it.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer an amendment. I move to amend section 59 by adding after the word "depositors," at the end of the section, the following proviso:

Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall apply to savings banks which do not do a general commercial banking business, but which have a paid up capital stock that is a special guaranty fund to all the depositors of the bank.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I send up to the desk a telegram received from San Francisco yesterday, which induced me to offer the amendment, and I ask the attention of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], if he will kindly give it, to the reading of the telegram.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 26, 1894.

To Hon. GEORGE C. PERKINS,
Washington, D. C.:

Income taxes should not be collected from savings banks of California. They are mutual so far that none pay fixed rate of interest, and rates of dividends of all are determined by net earnings after payment of expenses and taxes. Four-fifths of deposits are funds of parties not liable for income tax. Such parties exempt directly will pay indirectly. Most of them from meager incomes, while those liable to tax will pay twice, once through the bank and later directly. Permit not this injustice.

San Francisco Savings Union, German Savings and Loan Society, Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, California Savings and Loan Society, French Savings and Loan Society, Humboldt Savings and Loan Society, Mutual Savings Bank, Savings and Loan Society; Security Savings Bank, of San Francisco; Alameda Savings Bank, of Alameda; Home Savings Bank; Savings Bank of Humboldt County, of Eureka; Fresno Loan and Savings Bank, of Fresno; German American Savings Bank, Los Angeles Savings Bank, Main Street Savings Bank and Trust Company, Savings Bank of Southern California, Security Savings Bank and Trust Company, of Los Angeles; Northern California Bank of Savings, of Marysville; Merced Security Savings Bank, of Merced; Union Savings Bank, of Modesto; Oakland Bank of Savings, Union Savings Bank, of Oakland; Farmers and Mechanics' Savings Bank, People's Savings Bank, Sacramento Bank, of Sacramento; Bank of Savings and Loan, City Savings Bank, of Santa Cruz; San Diego Savings Bank, Savings Bank of San Diego County, of San Diego; Safe Deposit Bank of Savings, Union Savings Bank, of San Jose; California Mortgage and Savings Bank, of San Luis Obispo; Pajaro Valley Savings and Loan Society, of Watsonville.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, this telegram is signed by thirty-three savings banks of California, representing over $100,000,000 deposited in those savings banks. My colleague [Mr. WHITE] will bear testimony to the financial standing of those banks. He received a similar telegram, and I feel sure he will corroborate all that I say in relation to those savings banks.

We have in California two classes of savings banks, one purely mutual savings associations, for which the Committee on Finance have already provided; and there is another class of savings banks which have a paid-up capital stock, and the capital stock which has been paid up can not be distributed, can not be participated in by the stockholders, until every depositor in the bank has received his money. It is a special guaranty that those who deposit money in the savings banks shall receive every dollar of it back.

We have these capital savings banks. They are far more popular with our people, especially in our large cities, for the reason that those who live in the country, the miner, the farmer, the lumberman, the mechanic, the sailor, who deposit their earnings in them, want some guaranty besides the mutual association of men who have gathered together and organized a savings bank, perhaps because they are men of pleasing address, with considerable assurance, and have formed an association to receive the funds of those who are willing to deposit with them.

In the early history of our State several of those savings banks went down in the maelstrom of financial disaster. Now we have a bank commission appointed by the State, whose duty it is to annually scrutinize and examine the books of these banks, and when the commission report to the public that a million dollars has been paid into a savings bank as a guarantee fund, it gives assurance to the depositors that their funds will be well cared for.

There is deposited to-day in the different savings banks of California $126,781,530. This sum is distributed amongst 175,672 depositors, making an average deposit of $886 to the depositor. This is a much larger average, I think, than the records will show to-day. I think these figures are taken from the bank commissioner's report made a year ago. At that time idle capital in large sums was placed in the savings banks, which increased their deposits; but to-day the banks in California are refusing to take any very large sums, and the result is that, I think, the average has been reduced below the amount I have named.

I find by a review of the reports of the different savings banks in California that there are 157,745 depositors of less than $1,000 each.

I will give you, Mr. President, a list of four of the largest savings banks in San Francisco, and their average of deposits:

German	$1,016.97
Hibernia	906.04
Savings Union	1,249.12
Savings and Loan Society	1,144.32
The lowest average deposit in all the banks is	87.67
The highest average deposit in all the banks is	1,760.00

We have already exempted in this bill those who have an income of $4,000; that is, a man may have $100,000 and place it in the savings banks, and it brings him in 4 per cent. Under the provisions of the bill he is exempt from taxation; but if an amendment such as I propose is not adopted, the poor widow, the clergyman, the poor mechanic, the clerk, the sailor, the lumberman, the farmer, the working girl, who after years of toil has saved up $1,000, as 157,745 of them have done in California, that person must pay 2 per cent upon his $40 per year. True, 2 per cent upon $40 is not much; but is it just, is it right for this great Government to come to the mechanic, to the lumberman, to the domestic, and say to them, "give us of this," and then exempt the man who has $100,000 or $200,000 or $300,000 from paying anything?

I believe that the income tax is, perhaps, the most just and most equitable tax which can be imposed; but let the States impose the tax, as Massachusetts has done, and as other States have done, if it is necessary to have revenue from this source. Let the revenue which is to support this great Federal Government come from imposing excise duties, levying internal-revenue taxes or from any other source rather than to go with the taxgatherer into the home, into the office, or into the machine shop of the mechanics of the country.

I bow, however, in submission to the will of the majority. This bill will become a law; but to be just, to be equitable, I ask the Senator from Missouri, I ask the committee on the other side of the Senate, to listen to the petition which has been read from the desk representing 157,745 people, who have deposited in the savings banks of California less than $1,000 each, and to accept the amendment which I have offered. I ask my colleague to use his intercession and his influence with the committee for the adoption of the amendment or something which will carry out the object we have in view.

Mr. SMITH. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk to be read, and after it shall have been read I desire to make a few remarks upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from New Jersey that the amendment proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] is now pending.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senate is quite as well prepared to test the merit of that question now as hereafter, and I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from California on the table.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have an amendment which I think is satisfactory to the committee, and which covers substantially the ground that the amendment of the Senator from California does. I ask that it be read for the information of Senators.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to the amendment being read.

Mr. PERKINS. The Senator from Tennessee is certainly a just man, and I do not believe that he will be so unjust as to move to lay this amendment upon the table and deny the petition which has been read, signed by those representing nearly two hundred thousand people, without at least hearing from the committee why the amendment should not be adopted.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee has already heard from the Senator from California, and is satisfied to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. PERKINS. There is another Senator from California here to speak, and the Senator from Tennessee has no right to refuse to give the Senators from California a hearing upon this question.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Tennessee asserts his right, and makes the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent to have an amendment proposed by him read for information.

Mr. ALDRICH. I send the amendment to the desk, so that it may be read.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to letting the amendment be read.

Mr. ALDRICH. I propose to add the amendment to the provisions in regard to savings banks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add:

Nor to that part of the business of any savings bank, institution, or other similar association, having a capital stock that is conducted on a mutual plan solely for the benefit of its depositors, on such plan, and which shall keep its accounts of its business conducted on such mutual plan separate and apart from its other accounts.

Mr. PERKINS. I am willing to accept that as a substitute for my amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. The amendment as I have offered it makes the same rule apply to savings banks which has been applied to insurance companies by the committee, and at the proper time I shall offer the amendment. I think there will be no objection to it, as I have shown it to different members of the committee.

Mr. WHITE. I understand the Senator from Rhode Island does not offer the amendment now?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not now; but I shall offer it at the proper time.

Mr. PERKINS. Then I withdraw my amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from California is withdrawn.

Mr. SMITH. I now ask that the amendment proposed by me may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 22, in section 59, after the word "organized," it is proposed to insert:

The amount of any dividends paid to a single stockholder not exceeding $4,000 annually may be deducted by corporations, companies, or associations, not including partnerships, from any amounts upon which they would otherwise be compelled to pay the tax herein provided for; but the amount of such dividends so received by such single stockholder shall not be included in estimating any income he may have in excess of $4,000, and in that event, it shall bear its proportion of the tax herein provided for.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have neither the desire nor do I feel that under existing circumstances it would be right for me to detain the Senate on a question of this character longer than is absolutely necessary for its proper presentation and debate.

Considerable time has been consumed in the discussion of the questions connected with the income tax, and particularly in relation to those concerning corporations and their relation to their stockholders.

I desire to say that while my position on this particular section of the bill is pronounced and known to the members of this body, I have refrained from taking up the time of the Senate in debate. I have voted in a number of instances against amendments which have been offered on this floor, without attempting to express my views regarding them, because I felt that it was not proper to take up time which we might perhaps use in furthering the passage of the bill. But, Mr. President, I should feel that I was not doing justice to the constituents whom I have the honor in part to represent if I did not call the attention of Senators, particularly of those who sit on this side of the Chamber, to the fact that in passing this bill without some such amendment as I have proposed, they would be discriminating against the widow, the orphan, and the man of moderate means. After I have done that, sir, if it shall be their wish to pass the bill in the shape it stands, I shall at least have felt that I have performed my duty.

The question with me, Mr. President, is not that of corporations, it is not that of the manufacturer, it is not whether the corporation is made up of the men who manufacture butter or cheese or any other commodity, or whether they be associations such as we have in the East and in the North, formed by workingmen combining together, each with a few hundred or a few thousand dollars, as the case may be, and thus forming useful and beneficent industrial corporations.

It is not the question of corporations with which we have now particularly to deal, Mr. President, but the question is whether we are going to sit here as legislators and vote for a bill which discriminates against the widow and the orphan if, perchance, their estate should be invested in corporate stocks, from which they derive their income.

I say that this is not a question of corporations, but it is a question of simple justice. When this bill was made up, with $4,000 as the limit of exemption, that limit should be for everybody, without respect to the question of the source from which the income was derived; and when we say to these people, because they may have inherited property from those who came before them and who have passed away, or because they have accumulated property by their savings which have been invested in these corporate companies, manufacturing, railroad, or of any other character, we shall single them out as against everybody else and tax them 2 per cent. I appeal to the sense of fairness and of justice of the Senate to accept the amendment which I have offered which will rectify what I think to be a great wrong. I do not believe that the Senate is ready or that it will be willing to sustain the provision as it now stands in the bill.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the Senator from New Jersey permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. HUNTON. As I understand the object of the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, it is to exempt from the payment of the income tax all corporations, so far as the small stockholders are concerned?

Mr. SMITH. That is correct.

Mr. HUNTON. Now, I desire the Senator to say, if his amendment prevails, whether in his opinion there will be any large stockholders in stock companies? The very moment the law is passed to exempt small stockholders they will all be small stockholders; the large stockholders will divide their stock between the wife and the children, the uncles and the aunts, and the nephews and the nieces, so that there will be no stockholders of a large character left in any corporation. It seems to me, if the Senator's amendment prevails, it will be practically annulling the income tax on corporations.

Mr. SMITH. In answer to the Senator, I will say that I do not see that his question really affects this amendment. There is nothing now to prevent a man from giving his property to anybody he pleases or transferring his investments in such manner as he may see fit, and thereby escape the payment of the income tax. So I can not see how the proposition of my honored friend from Virginia has practically anything to do with this question.

Mr. President, we, as the representatives of the people, must determine for ourselves whether we are willing to select any particular class of people and say to them, "Because you or those who came before you have invested in certain corporations or industrial organizations, we shall punish you to the extent of 2 per cent." That is the question to be voted on.

So far as corporations are concerned, I desire to say in response to the argument of my respected friend from Missouri

[Mr. VEST] that the great bulk of the organizations in the State in which I reside are made up largely of workingmen and manufacturers of small means who have combined their capital and have grown to be large concerns. This is the case in my State, as it is in other States. My attention was forcibly called to it by a Senator on this floor, who stated to me the other day that his means were small and that he thought the proper thing for him to do was to put what he had in a stock company, so that he might divide what little he had of this world's goods while he lived instead of doing it by will.

For that reason, Mr. President, as much as any other, the majority of the corporations of to-day are formed, particularly the smaller ones. What lawyer is there on this floor who, if one of his clients who had a large business of any kind or character, with a growing family of sons and daughters about him, asked what advice he would give in such a case, would not reply "Place your business in a corporate company, and distribute either by will after your death or while you are living the stock to your family?"

I have taken up more time, Mr. President, upon this question than I feel I have any right to do under the pressure that is upon the Senate for prompt action. I beg pardon of the Senators on a warm day like this for asking them to give me their time and attention, but the necessity of some such action as I have proposed, the justice, the fairness of it appeal to me so strongly that I should feel I was not doing justice to those about me without giving them at least the benefit of my views on this question.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to lay the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HILL. I trust the Senator from Tennessee will withdraw his motion for a moment.

Mr. HIGGINS. I desire to submit a few remarks.

Mr. HARRIS. The very object I had in view in making the motion was to cut off further debate. I must adhere to the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to lay upon the table the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. HILL. I call for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], and withhold my vote.

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JARVIS], and vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon (when his name was called). The pair I have had with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] has been transferred to the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and I vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]; otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. PATTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DIXON. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JARVIS]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. MCMILLAN (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], and withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Allen,	Faulkner,	Lindsay,	Pugh,
Bate,	George,	McLaurin,	Ransom,
Berry,	Gorman,	Martin,	Roach,
Blackburn,	Harris,	Mills,	Turpie,

NOT VOTING—30.

Blanchard,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Smith,
Brice,	Gibson,	McMillan,	Stewart,
Butler,	Gordon,	McPherson,	Vilas,
Call,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Wis.	White,
Cameron,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Wilson,
Carey,	Hoar,	Murphy,	Wolcott.
Chandler,	Jarvis,	Palmer,
Dixon,	Jones, Nev.	Patton.

So the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. HILL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "organized," in line 22, section 59, page 187, it is proposed to insert:

The amount of any dividends paid to a single stockholder, not exceeding $3,000 annually, may be deducted by corporations, companies, or associations, not including partnerships, from any amounts upon which they would otherwise be compelled to pay the tax herein provided for; but the amount of such dividends so received by such single stockholder shall be included in estimating any income he may have in excess of $4,000, and in that event it shall bear its proportion of the tax herein provided for.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered is the same amendment which was offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], except in regard to the amount. The amount named in my amendment being $3,000 instead of $4,000. Upon the amendment I desire to submit a few remarks for the consideration of the Senate.

I decline to allow the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], or any other Senator upon this floor speaking against this proposition, to place me in a false position. I am not contending for this proposition or urging it upon any basis of justice to corporations. I have made no such suggestion. I am maintaining the proposition that no discrimination shall be made in the bill against corporate investments, not because corporations do or do not want it, but because it is right and just to individuals.

Mr. President, I do not now care for the purposes of this argument whether the bill is liberal or not liberal to corporations. That was a strange and peculiar admission made yesterday when the Senator from Missouri, in charge of this portion of the bill, announced to the country and to the Senate, for the purpose, I suppose, of making his bill popular with the people, that this was a most liberal bill to the corporations of the country. I do not defend this bill, neither do I attack it upon any such untenable ground as that. This bill will not commend itself to the people of the country simply because, if it be true, as the Senator from Missouri says, it is the most liberal bill to corporations which can be framed.

Mr. President, it ought to be the object of the framers of the bill to relieve it from just criticism. It ought to be their object to do away with as many discriminations as possible in the framing of an income-tax bill. I concede that some discriminations are unavoidable; I concede that in the very nature of an income-tax bill there must be great wrong done; I concede that you must exempt $635,000,000 of Government bonds from the income tax; I concede that you must do many things which you can not well defend, but which in justice are incident to and inherent in an income-tax bill; but we ought to strive in framing legislation for the country to avoid as many of these discriminations as possible.

Senators the other day defended the exemption of $4,000 to individuals. It is contained in this bill; it is an exemption for which I thought there was no justification. Senators had voted in the past for $1,000 exemption, and I supposed they at least would be willing to stand by their own record in that regard, but they did not do it. I need not point to a vote not very many years ago taken in the Senate, when Senators stood here and voted to make the exemption simply $1,000.

That limited and small exemption had their approval but a few short years ago, but now they come here in this day and age of the world and defend a $4,000 exemption, an exemption which relieves a person who owns $60,000 worth of property, aye, if it be invested in Government bonds it will relieve a man owning $100,000 of Government bonds from income taxation; yet these things are contained in the bill, and Senators swallow them; they take them with one gulp; but when we ask that corporate investments for the benefit of men of limited means shall be placed upon an equality with other investments in property, we are told we are pleading for the cause of the great corporations of the country.

Mr. President, I care little or nothing about the corporations of the country. They have grown up in every State and all over the country. They are so intimately connected with the business of the country that it is impossible to eradicate them, and in framing your legislation you must recognize their existence, and must recognize the propriety of their existence. They develop the country; they combine capital; they induce people to make investments which would not otherwise be made. They have some privileges which indivduals do not have, but, nevertheless, what State has seen fit to annihilate them? What State has seen fit to restrict them? Are not the laws of Missouri very liberal for the forming of corporations? Do not some States make their laws liberal for the very purpose of attracting the organization of capital therein? The States increase to some extent their revenue from taxation by so doing.

It does no good upon a question of this character to get up here and rail against the corporations of the country. They are with us; they are organized; they have their stockholders who have invested in them in good faith under the sanction of the laws of your States and of the Government; and it becomes us as legislators to legislate intelligently in regard to them and their interests.

Sir, as I have said, I am not here to plead for the corporations of the country. This amendment makes no sort of difference to the corporation itself. The corporation is simply made the instrument or means for the collection of this revenue. It is for the benefit of the individual that I am speaking now.

A great deal has been said about the General Government protecting these corporations. A word upon that subject—although in my remarks the other day I had said upon that subject all which I then desired to say.

These corporations are not created by the General Government. Very few corporations in this country derive their existence from the General Government. Ninety-eight per cent of the whole are organized under the State governments. In the main their property is protected by State laws. The General Government has little or nothing to do with the protection of life, liberty, or property.

I have pointed out from the provisions of the Constitution, that there are only three instances in which the General Government can interfere with the domestic affairs of the States. One, to protect them in a republican form of government—a mere declaration of policy; another, to protect them from foreign invasion—not likely ever to occur; the third, to protect them from domestic violence in case the governor or the Legislature shall call upon the Government to do so—a very rare thing in the one hundred years' history of this Government. The theory that the General Government protects your life, that the General Government protects corporations, that the General Government gives them powers and privileges, is a mere fiction. The General Government can not punish crime in the State; it can not interfere with the local government, because it has no jurisdiction.

Have we forgotten that great message of James G. Blaine sent to the Italian Government, when he pointed out the peculiar institutions of our country; that the General Government had no power to punish criminals in the city of New Orleans; that by reason of the nature of our free institutions the State of Louisiana, and that State alone, was competent to try and to convict its criminals; that life, liberty, and property were to be protected by the authorities of New Orleans? It is only when some great riot or some great domestic violence occurs that, upon the application of the governor or the Legislature of a State, the General Government may interfere.

In all other respects and in all other ways the State governments are supreme. The State governments, therefore, are the authorities to regulate corporations; are in the main the proper authorities to tax them, are in the main the proper authorities to determine their exemption.

Mr. President, nobody objects to the bill taxing the undivided surplus of corporations. If a corporation sees fit to accumulate a large surplus instead of dividing it among its stockholders, it can be reached by the bill and nobody objects to it. I simply desire to protect those dividends which in fact the corporation makes to individual owners of stock who do not themselves have an income in excess of $4,000.

No sort of reason which can stand the test of analogy for a single moment has been presented to show why corporate investments should be treated differently from other investments. Are we going to allow some prejudice against corporations to creep in here and to influence our legislation? Can we not proceed upon some broader and higher plane than that?

What is a corporation? It is a creature of State government in the main, created by investments furnished by citizens, having certain corporate powers, enabled to perform business like individuals. A corporation does not subsist merely for the benefit of the ideal corporation; it subsists for the benefit of its stockholders. A corporation which pays no amount of money to its stockholders is a peculiar and sometimes an unusual corporation, although nowadays, in these hard times, perhaps it is the general rule that corporations do not pay dividends.

But in the main corporations are created for the benefit of their stockholders, and the theory of the bill should be to treat all citizens alike and not discriminate against those having corporate investments. If corporations are injurious to the country, if corporations have violated their charters, then the law can proceed against them and abolish them; but so long as they are permitted to exist, so long as people are allowed to make corporate investments, they should be treated like citizens.

Mr. President, it has been said that a corporation is not given the $4,000 exemption for the reason that it does not eat, does not consume anything, requires no clothes, and that the $4,000 exemption is given to the individual because of what he consumes and what he requires for his individual wants. I am not pleading here for any $4,000 exemption to the corporation itself. Bear that distinction in mind. No amendment has been offered here to give a corporation the same exemption as an individual, but I am simply contending that after the dividends are declared and are received by an individual, the individual shall be placed upon the same plane as his next-door neighbor who has received an income from some private business. That is all I claim.

I see no answer to this proposition. You can not answer it by railing against corporations. You can not answer it by complaining of their hardships. You can not answer it by pointing to their wealth. When a stockholder receives more than $4,000 he is eliminated from this controversy. The whole controversy this morning arises, not over the lack of exemption per se of a corporation, but over the exemption which is claimed for individuals who do not have more than $4,000 income. That is the only point involved in the matter.

The Senator from Missouri and some others claim that it is absurd to say the railroad corporations of the country are largely owned by people of moderate means. There are thousands and thousands of shareholders in the New York Central Railroad who are people of moderate means, although the Vanderbilts, it is true, own a majority of the stock. But we are not here especially defending railroads. We are defending the rights and equal privileges of individual stockholders. But are railroad companies the only corporations involved here?

The bill applies to "banks, banking institutions, trust companies, saving institutions, fire, marine, life, and other insurance companies, railroad, canal, turnpike, canal navigation, slack water, telephone, telegraph, express, electric light." Let me comment right here before going further.

In how many towns and small villages in the States have the people of the respective villages formed local electric-light companies and invested their little means and their little savings, from $500 to $1,000, in local electric-light companies, desiring to aid their local villages? It is not so much a matter of investment as it is a matter of pride, and yet they are entitled to their dividends upon those little investments. The proposed law is also to apply to all gas companies, water companies, "street railway companies, and all other corporations, companies, or associations doing business for profit in the United States, no matter how created and organized."

The bill affects every conceivable corporation in the United States. I am not complaining because it affects corporations, but I am simply complaining that you make a discrimination against the poor man, because I have a right to say under the very exemption you have already made in the bill in regard to individuals, that a man who has an income of only $4,000 is regarded as a poor man for the purposes of the bill.

I accept your own argument upon that point. Therefore, when the poor man, instead of putting his money in a certain store, or in a certain factory, takes and places it in the street-car corporations of his own native town, actuated by a matter of pride to help his village, or when he puts it into any other corporation, why should not that investment be treated just the same as if he had made an investment in any other species of property? I tell you there is no answer to that proposition. There has been none submitted here to-day worthy of the name of an argument.

A good deal has been said about Mr. Astor escaping taxes. I am not pleading for Mr. Astor. Mr. Astor's property, allow me to say right here, in the main consists of real estate in the city of New York. Whether he lives in New York or in London he pays State, county, and municipal taxes upon all his real estate. We do not object to your taxing under the provisions of the bill all the rents Mr. Astor receives from this property. We are not pleading for any exemption for Mr. Astor, so far as this particular question is now concerned. We are not pleading for any man whose income exceeds $4,000. We are pleading simply for the man who has corporate investments and whose income does not exceed $4,000. That is the point.

Mr. President, this amendment which has been offered covers the point involved. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], having heard only a part of the argument, came in here and seemed to be rather astonished that anyone should argue against this proposition. He seemed to think that the only question involved was as to whether the amendment covered the point. He seemed to think, and it was a fair consideration, that the only point involved was how to prevent this injustice, whereas on the other hand the committee are not trying to prevent it. The committee, or the portion represented here, are justifying it and attempting to defend the injustice. If the amendment first offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], so far as $4,000 is concerned, does not reach it, and if this one does not reach it, let them suggest some other amendment. It is only this injustice we desire to remedy.

I assure the Senator from Missouri there is no endeavor, so far as this amendment is concerned, to make the bill objectionable. If the bill shall pass, sir, it will have to be defended all over the country. Make our burden as light as possible. I expect as a Democrat to address my fellow-citizens for many years to come, so far as I can conveniently do so, in behalf of the measures of my party. Leave me a few meritorious provisions in the bill which I can justify to my people at home.

Do not close my mouth entirely in regard to all the features and provisions of the measure. Some Senators here who have examined the amendment seem to think it ought to be adopted, and certainly they are friends of the bill and friends of an income tax.

The $3,000 exemption involves the same principle, it is true, as the $4,000 exemption, but nevertheless it is more limited as to amount. It may be said, if the object of it is to help the man with a small investment then $3,000 is of course a better amendment than $4,000. I know of no reason, though, why we should not have the $4,000 exemption.

Bear in mind, Senators, that while upon the face of the amendment it assumes to give a sort of exemption to the corporation by saying the corporation may deduct the dividends so declared, not exceeding $4,000, it is a mere form, a phraseology made necessary by the terms of the bill. But notwithstanding that phraseology, in truth and in fact the exemption is for the benefit of the individual stockholders. No one can deny that point.

I have thus said all I desire to say upon the merits of the amendment. It is an important question, and I say again it is important to the men of small means scattered all over the country. Some Senator in addressing the Senate said, "Well, they" the poor men "only have to pay $50 a year." Sir, that is a severe burden upon a poor man. If you want to do something for him relieve him from the exaction of even $20 or $50 a year. Equality of right, equality of privilege, and equality of exemption are just as sacred to the man who has only $50 to pay as to the man who has $3,000 or $4,000 to pay. Make the bill equal and exact in its terms, and you will relieve it from much of the criticism which properly and justly attaches to it.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. President, I wish to make a very few remarks on this subject. The income tax feature of the bill which gives an exemption to $4,000 shows that this provision is aimed at the rich people of the country, the people so well off at least as to have $4,000 of clear income over all losses and expenses. Now, in the same breath it is proposed to put the same tax upon corporations, thereby catching in the net every shareholder of those corporations whether their income amounts to $3,999 or whether they only get $10 a year out of it. They are all brought in under the burden of this tax. Therein there is a grave and serious departure from the general idea of the bill. What I want to ask is why this is done, upon what ground can it be justified.

It must be borne in mind that every shareholder in a corporation, like every other individual in the country, will be required by the statute, if enacted into law, to hand his return to the proper internal revenue officials. He will have to make this return under oath, and if he gets dividends from any corporation as a shareholder therein he must return such dividends in the amount of his yearly income and profit. So the shareholders of the corporations will be reached by the law anyhow, whether the tax is put directly upon the corporations or not.

The fact is that corporations are but aggregations of the capital of individuals for joint profit, with joint liability and joint loss, conveniently divided into shares for the purposes of distribution and management; and the income tax will reach every shareholder in the country who has an income of over $4,000. Then why levy this tax upon this class of citizens having an income less than $4,000 who happen to be shareholders in corporations? I have thought the reason might be that the attempt is made thereby to make sure of getting a true return from shareholders in corporations who have an income of over $4,000. They may make a fraudulent return; they may make a false return; but if you can get the books and papers and returns of the corporation, disclosing who are its stockholders and what dividends are paid to them, you have something by which to test the truthfulness and the reliability of the return of the individual shareholder.

Now, if that is the reason for imposing this tax, what does it amount to? Just this, that in order to provide against the fraud of the citizen having an income of over $4,000 you are imposing this tax on each shareholder in corporations who have incomes less than $4,000. If that is not absurd I do not know what is. Or, is it because of the general cry against corporations, who have been so anathematized in many directions? I think it is true that corporate management merits much of the criticism which is delivered against it. Corporations are said to have no souls.

The action of some corporations in their dealings with employés and with the public is harsh, and they are treated in like way when such issues are brought before the juries of the country. But are you to tax the income of the thrifty poor, of the moderately well-to-do people, of those who have some small competence, something laid up against a rainy day, some provision made for wife or daughter or child, simply because you want to make a general raid of punishment against corporations?

A great deal of feeling against railway corporations has been excited in the country at one time or another. I do not know but that they are becoming the objects of commiseration and pity rather than of attack. I do not know how large is the proportion of them to-day in the hands of receivers. I do not know what proportion of their stock does not pay dividends. I do not know how many of them are hanging upon the verge of bankruptcy or how near the railroad corporate interests of this country have approached to a condition of bankruptcy, if not of confiscation.

There are corporations which merit the animosity of the Senators in charge of the bill, and those Senators will have the hearty support of the country if they engage in some sound and legitimate policy as to them. One is the sugar trust. Let them go for it by taking away from it the advantages they have given to it in the bill. Another one is the great octopus, the Standard Oil Company, if it came within their purview.

But because certain overgrown, bloated corporations, which make an unfair and unjust use of the quality of corporate power exist in the country, is that the reason why all the owners in small corporations and all the small owners in large corporations in the country are to be brought under the income tax, contrary to the policy and the reason for which the tax is inaugurated, namely, to get at the rich. This is the combination and accumulation of absurdity which is involved in this proposition. There may be one other reason why it is to be passed, and that is that this illogical and absurd idea found its first recommendation in the message of the President of the United States.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I shall consume but a few minutes of the time of the Senate. I should not occupy the attention of the Senate at all on this subject but for the fact that, perhaps inadvertently on my part, I referred to a citizen of my State who has written to me on the question of the income tax. I desire to read, from the communication which I have received from that gentleman, what he says with reference to the effect of the bill. I ask the attention of the distinguished Senator from Missouri to what the gentleman says, as I think the Senator knows him.

I do it in perfect good faith, not having any disposition on my part to be regarded as the champion of corporations or of any other organizations in this country. What I desire is that the income tax provision, if we are to have an income tax, shall be as fair to the whole body of the people as it can be made. When I referred to what seems to me to be the unfairness of the provision of the bill as it stands, against the poorer classes of people having an interest in corporations, I made the statement with reference to the Chicago and Alton Railroad, as I remembered it from the communication which I now hold in my hand. The gentleman to whom I refer says:

> From a cursory examination of that part relating to the proposed income tax—

Referring to the portion of the bill we are now considering—> it appears to be the intent of the bill to exempt from liability to pay an income tax persons whose annual income is less than $4,000.

That is the theory of the bill, that a person who has an income of not over $4,000 shall not be taxed the 2 per cent.

Mr. HILL. No matter how the income is derived.

Mr. CULLOM. No matter how it is procured. But when it comes to the matter of taxing corporations, then the proposition to exempt $4,000 from the operation of the income-tax law seems to be set aside. It is to that point that I have had my attention called by this gentleman. The provision of the bill seems to be unfair, and I think it ought to be remedied in some way. This gentleman goes on to say:

But as it is made the duty of corporations to pay 2 per cent of their net earnings to the Government and withhold the same from their creditors and shareholders when such net earnings are paid out as interest and dividends, should the bill become a law, many thousands of persons whose annual income from all sources is much less than $4,000 will through the agency of such corporations be subjected to the tax.

There are probably at least eighteen hundred Chicago and Alton shareholders, each of whose income from all sources is less than $2,000 per annum, and by far the greater part of their income is from Chicago and Alton dividends. I know quite a large number of women whose entire income is from Chicago and Alton dividends, except such as they earn by their own labor, and in such cases their income is from $300 to $600 per annum. Under this bill 2 per cent of these sums must be paid to the Government. Is not this unjust discrimination?

That is a plain statement of the case as to the Chicago and Alton Railroad. Mr. Blackstone, as the Senator from Missouri knows very well, is an honorable man. He has been president of this corporation for a great many years, I do not know how many, and he ought to know whereof he speaks when he says there are not less than one thousand eight hundred stockholders of that road whose incomes are less than $2,000 and who get nothing but what they earn, from $300 to $600 a year, except the income which they get from the stock they own in this road. When I refer to Chicago and Alton Railroad, I assume that it is a sample of almost every other corporation in the country, whether it be a railroad corporation or a manufacturing establishment or whatever it may be.

As I said I do not stand upon my feet here at this late day in the consideration of the question whether we shall have an income tax or not to combat it by argument, but I do say that while we are forming the income-tax provision we ought, it seems to me, without any reference to the interest of the corporation itself, look after the poor people who derive these little incomes from the stock they hold in corporations. I insist that the proposition of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], or, if that can not be adopted, the suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri himself, will be of some service in the protection of this class of poor people who have these small incomes.

The honorable Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] seems to sneer at the proposition that anybody has any stock in a railroad company whom we ought to look after, or that any president of a railroad company would regard the poor stockholders in his corporation. If the Senator wishes to do exact justice to the poor people of the country—I care nothing about the corporation itself—let us form this provision so as to protect the poor people who own stock in corporations, of whatever nature or kind they may be. The Senator represents himself as a friend of the poor people; I believe he is, and I appeal to him to know whether those eighteen hundred people, having these little sums of not over $2,000 derived from their earnings and from stock in this corporation, should not be cared for, if it can be done by the bill, as well as the man outside who does not have an income over $4,000.

The Senator certainly does not desire to discriminate against a poor widow or a poor mechanic who has an income of $2,000, partly derived from stock which he may happen to have in a corporation, when he is willing to exempt $4,000 to the party who gets it from other sources. That is what I am contending for. When the Senator insists that because these persons happen to have stock in a corporation they ought not to be looked after, I think he not only misrepresents himself, but does an injustice to the great body of these poor people.

I have voted against the income-tax provision, and did it because I believe there is no occasion for an income tax now. But if we are to have an income tax I believe it would be nearer exact justice, and we would have none of these unjust discriminations, if every one who has an income of over $4,000 were taxed, whether he or she be a stockholder in a corporation or not.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from New York on the table.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that the debate shall cease upon the amendment, and that we may take a direct vote upon it.

Mr. HARRIS. If that can be done I am willing that we shall have a vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that debate shall cease and that the vote may be taken on the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. Let the amendment be stated.

Mr. HILL. It is the same as the previous amendment, with the exception of inserting "$3,000" instead of "$4,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I withdraw the motion to lay the amendment on the table. Let us have the vote on the amendmennt.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee withdraws the motion to lay the amendment on the table. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York. The amendment will again be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "organized" in section 59, line 22, page 187, insert:

The amount of any dividends paid to a single stockholder not exceeding $3,000 annually, may be deducted by corporations, companies, or associations, not including partnerships, from any amounts upon which they would otherwise be compelled to pay the tax herein provided for; but the amount of such dividends so received by such single stockholder shall be included in estimating any income he may have in excess of $4,000, and in that event it shall bear its proportion of the tax herein provided for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JARVIS]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], who is absent from the Chamber on account of illness.

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GORDON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], and vote "nay."

Mr. BLANCHARD (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from Michigan has not voted.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BLACKBURN (after having voted in the negative). I am informed that the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] has not voted. I am paired with that Senator, and ask leave to withdraw my vote.

Mr. PEFFER. Is the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] recorded as voting?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] is not recorded. His pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has been announced.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Hoar,	Quay,
Caffery,	Frye,	Mitchell, Oregon	Sherman,
Chandler,	Gallinger,	Patton,	Shoup,

Call,	Jarvis,	Morrill,	Wilson,
Cameron,	Jones, Nev.	Murphy,	Wolcott

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALDRICH obtained the floor.

Mr. HILL. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I yield for the purpose of having the amendment read.

Mr. HILL. If Senators will remain in their seats for just a moment, I desire yea-and-nay votes on two amendments without any debate. I make this statement so as to save them the trouble of going out and coming in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. And at the end of line 22, page 187, section 59:

The amount of any dividends paid to a single stockholder not exceeding $2,000 annually, may be deducted by corporations, companies, or associations, not including partnerships from any amounts upon which they would otherwise be compelled to pay the tax herein provided for; but the amount of such dividends so received by such single stockholder shall be included in estimating any income he may have in excess of $4,000, and in that event it shall bear its proportion of the tax herein provided for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I hardly see the propriety of an amendment permitting corporations to deduct the amount of dividends paid to individual stockholders up to $2,000. If I understand the effect of the bill, if it should become a law, as it stands now it would in effect tax stockholders as individuals upon dividends received up to $4,000 per annum, although they might not otherwise be subject to pay an income tax.

As individuals, if their income was derived from some other source to the amount of $4,000, they would not be taxed, but if the income happen to be derived from dividends on stocks, then they are to be taxed. The corporation is required to pay an income tax on their dividends. So there is one class of persons, those whose incomes are derived from dividends on stock, who are taxed upon their entire incomes, while individuals having the same amount of incomes from other sources are exempt.

Then on dividends over $4,000, if I understand the bill, as it stands now there is to be double taxation; first, the dividends are taxed as the income of corporations, and then they are taxed when they reach the stockholders.

Mr. HILL. That is not the case, because where it exceeds $4,000 there is another provision that covers it, which is as follows:

Provided also, That in computing the income of any person, corporation company, or association there shall not be included the amount received from any corporation, company, or association as interest or dividends upon the bonds or stock of such corporation, company, or association if the tax of 2 per cent has been paid upon its net profits by said corporation, company, or association as required by this act.

Mr. DOLPH. Then the discrimination in the bill is confined to persons whose income from dividends is less than $4,000.

Mr. HILL. Exactly.

Mr. DOLPH. What is the idea of dividing it and of excepting the tax on dividends up to $2,000? Is it a compromise?

Mr. HILL. I must refer the Senator to those on this side of the Chamber. I do not propose to debate the amendment. The Senator from Oregon probably has not been in the Chamber during the whole debate. I of course claim that the small shareholders are entitled to an exemption to the amount of $4,000. As a matter of principle and policy I say that should be so; but $4,000 has been voted down, $3,000 has been voted down, and I desire to make the injustice as little as possible. I now ask for a vote on the $2,000 amendment without further debate unless some other Senator desires to discuss the amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the attitude of the committee and a majority of the Senate in regard to the income of small shareholders in corporations is remarkable. It is proposed by the general features of this income-tax provision to exempt incomes up to $4,000, but any citizen of the United States who has an investment in the shares of any corporation (except certain corporations that are specially exempted) of any size, of fifty, one hundred, five hundred, or a thousand dollars, must pay the tax. There is no escape for him. This seems to me to be very unjust. The committee, by their amendment suggested the other day, exempt incomes which are derived from the bonds of corporations, but they seem to be unwilling to modify in any form the provision of the bill which exacts from small shareholders an income tax, whatever may be the amount of the income. With the tendencies of our modern civilization to the employment of corporate form in conducting all kinds of business this injustice becomes very great and very marked.

The Senator from Missouri has alluded to the fact that the loss to such shareholders is not very great, that the sums which they will be obliged to pay may not be more than $10 and can not exceed in any event $80. The average earnings of all the people of the United States engaged in useful employment is only a little over $300, and $80 to a man who only earns $300 or a little more, is 25 per cent of his entire earnings. So, while these small sums may not seem very large to the Senator from Missouri, they will certainly seem very large to the men of small and limited incomes to which the bill will apply.

The Senator from Missouri, in justification of the action of the committee, has stated that during the war corporations were taxed. It is true that during the exigencies of the civil war all kinds of manufacturing corporations were taxed, but corporations were taxed as individuals were taxed. There was no discrimination made at that time between a tax levied upon a corporation doing a manufacturing business and an individual doing a manufacturing business; both were alike taxable. But by the provisions of this bill, an individual who carries on a manufacture of any kind is exempted from the burdensome and annoying exactions of the bill in other respects; a partnership that carries on a business of this kind would be exempt from taxation and from these annoyances, while a corporation is subjected to them all.

It is very difficult to understand by the application of any of the principles which should be applied to government or to taxation why these discriminations are made. A corporation is certainly no more vicious than an individual or a partnership that is doing the same business and carrying it on in the same way. A corporation is simply an aggregation of individuals. Many of the corporations that have been chartered under the various State governments are simply coöperative associations.

The various amendments suggested the other day by the Senator from Missouri have recognized the necessity or the justice of exempting mutual insurance companies, fire or life insurance companies, mutual savings banks, and a large class of corporations doing business for the benefit solely of their shareholders.

Now, a large portion of the corporations which will be obliged to pay this tax are of the same character as those various mutual organizations. The Senator from Iowa has alluded to the fact in his State, the Senator from Maine has made the same statement in regard to his State, and I know that in my own State there are a vast number of organizations chartered by the State government and having the form of corporations. They are simply coöperative societies, and if a man is unfortunate enough to have an investment of $50 or $100 or $500 in an organization of this kind, he is required by the provisions of the bill to pay 2 per cent on his income, while the vast corporations of the United States, all the great railroads and other organizations, are by the provisions of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Missouri the other day exempted from paying this tax.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think there will be no further discussion.

Mr. HARRIS. I thought there was to be no further debate a good while ago.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that debate shall stop, and that a vote may be taken upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that debate shall cease on the amendment, and that a vote may be taken at once. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRIS. I withdraw the motion to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee withdraws the motion to lay on the table. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], and vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], who is absent from his seat and will not be here for some days. I desire to make the announcement for the day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DIXON. Has the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JARVIS] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has not voted.

Mr. DIXON. I am paired with that Senator, and withhold my my vote.

Mr. PASCO. I have agreed on this vote to pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], but by an arrangement with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON], we will transfer our pairs, so that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] will stand paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JARVIS], and the Senator from Rhode Island and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DIXON. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Aldrich,	Frye,	McMillan,	Proctor,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend, at the end of line 22, page 187, by adding the words "but not including partnerships." That is the meaning of the committee, I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "organized" at the end of line 22, page 187, section 59, add:

But not including partnerships.

Mr. HOAR. The phrase of the bill now is companies, associations however constituted or established. Certainly there is very great danger that that will be construed to include partnerships.

Mr. VEST. There is no objection to the amendment. That is the meaning of the provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move to add at the end of line 22, page 187, the following proviso:

Provided, That there shall be allowed to said corporation, company, or association an exemption equal to the aggregate of the exemptions to which such stockholders would be entitled in estimating their individual tax, not including, however, any exemption which may have been allowed to such stockholders as individuals.

Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss this amendment at any length, because I see that my friend from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] is looking at me—

> With such ferret and such fiery eyes,
> As we have seen him in the Capitol
> When crossed in conference by some Senator.

But I think a word or two of explanation will satisfy every Senator who feels himself at liberty to vote upon this question on its merits that it ought to be adopted.

The purpose of the amendment is that where a man's whole income, and a small income, comes from a joint stock company he shall have the precise exemption, and no more and no less, out of the income which he gets from the joint stock company that he would get if it came from an ordinary individual business. The largest part of the business of Massachusetts—manufacturing, mechanical, mercantile—is now conducted by joint stock companies. Two young mechanics or five young mechanics do a part of the business of their machine shop—make a particular wheel, a particular lever, a particular small part of the mechanism, and they associate themselves together under our law as a joint stock company.

That saves them, if they comply with the strict requirements of the law, from individual liability for the debt; but that is not the main purpose. The main purpose is to get the benefit of the united action. If one of them dies, or becomes sick, or insane, or is insolvent in his private transactions, that the business has not got to stop by reason of the withdrawal from it of one man, and go into liquidation, and be held up for a year or two. I am stating not an extreme case; I am stating an everyday case, and a case where I am sure every Senator on both sides of the Chamber will agree that this exemption ought to be allowed.

Here are five little grocers—although there would not be likely to be so many in a firm in that business, or five mechanics, and they make $5,000 a year. Each of them gives his individual work, hard day's work, and the profit of the concern is $5,000. That is a thousand dollars apiece. That thousand dollars ought to be exempted from the income tax upon the principle of the bill, and upon every principle of justice and fairness. It is $20 apiece, as the Senator from Missouri said in regard to the amendment of the Senator from New York. The tax will be only $80, I think he said.

I do not suppose gentlemen who are bred on Southern plantations understand what that $20 means to a mechanic or a man working with his own hands. He has a wife and five children to support and the children to bring up and clothe decently and to send to school. He belongs to a church. The $20 taken out of that man's thousand for the support of his family means the great things of the year to his life. It means the ability to go once in twelve months with his hard-working wife to spend a Sunday at the seashore in such weather as we have just been going through.

It means the sending one of the children to a little better school, if the child has some peculiarity and can not be exposed to the roughness of the common school. It means a new dress for the girl who can not have one new dress a year. If a child has a physical deformity, a turned ankle, or a distorted eye, it means the possibility, which those parents will meditate over for six months, of taking the child to a city surgeon and having competent medical skill. It means, perhaps, another picture to hang on the wall, or a single picture to hang on the wall to give a little ornament to the mechanic's home. It means a few books. It means putting the works of Whittier, of Joel Chandler Harris, the great genius of the South, estimated at the North as he is there, on the table, to give to the grown children a little taste of the sweets and delights of literature.

Mr. President, this is not a fanciful, far-fetched notion. Every Senator who lives in a city where there are mechanics and a manufacturing population knows what I say is true. It is a question of the comforts of life to thousands upon thousands of American homes, and it is a question of the homes that make up whatever there is entitled to honor, whatever there is, at any rate, that requires care in a Government which is benevolent and just, and looks out for the people.

I should like to hear any reason why this thing should not be done. It is easy enough. The collector for the district will have the name and residence of every stockholder of the big corporation. He will account with the corporation in a mass, and he will have the name of the little corporation such as I have described, and when that corporation returns to him its income of $5,000, and says, "we are made up of five men who are getting a thousand dollars apiece out of it, and that is all we get," and they have done the labor and the work of the corporation with their own hands, it is an easy problem to dispose of.

I hope my honorable friend from Missouri will let this amendment be adopted and let it go into conference, and then if he finds on further reflection that it needs changing, or if he finds for some reason which does not occur to me that it will not work, let it go. It is a very important practical question.

I know these men. I was brought up in a humble town where there were no great fortunes and no aristocrats, where everybody earned his living. I went when I grew up to a manufacturing city, made up of mechanics who were bred at the bench or at the loom, and who started in this little way themselves. I know what this business of an extra twenty-dollar bill means to men who in their whole lives from the time they begin work until the time they go to their graves never make an expenditure for self-indulgence or for fashion or for luxury or for profligacy. This $20 to them is more than $20,000 to the millionaire or the aristocrat; and I think it deserves the care of Congress that we protect it, especially of a Congress whose dominant party takes to itself the title of Democracy.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, I do not desire to occupy the time of the Senate in discussing this amendment, and shall be very brief.

I do not willingly vote for a bill which in my opinion unjustly discriminates against any class of the citizens of this country. I take it that nobody in this Chamber desires to crush out the small corporations which are now doing a very large portion of the business of the United States. The laws of my State are peculiarly favorable to the formation of joint-stock companies and small corporations with limited liability.

Those corporations have largely taken the place of partnerships. I consider that in the effort to strike at the overgrown corporations, so called, the corporations which have abused their corporate powers, a deadly blow may be struck at deserving corporations, at corporations which have for their object the aggregation of small capital, of men of moderate means, in order to place within their power and compass the accomplishment of works that they could not otherwise undertake or accomplish.

Mr. President, what reason is there, what reason can there be, for a discrimination of the kind that this bill strikes at? The Senator from Iowa made a very wise suggestion in placing the surplus dividend not divided under the operation of the 2 per cent tax, and excluding the dividends divided among the stockholders. It does not occur to me that would meet all the difficulties of the case, if difficulties there be. I can not willingly vote for a bill that will discriminate in this particular against a very honest set of our fellow-citizens. There is no reason for it.

Mr. President, the trend of the times is for small capital to aggregate. It grows out of the industrial condition of the country. Does the Senate of the United States want to strike down the effort of men of small means to combine together in order to facilitate works that they could not undertake singly?

I have given my reasons in brief for the votes that I have given upon the amendments offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee moves to lay the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts on the table.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Tennessee will allow a vote to be taken. I think the debate is over.

Mr. HARRIS. I am perfectly content to do so if the vote can be taken without further debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. And I hope the Senator from Tennessee will vote for it. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his named was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JARVIS], and vote "nay."

Mr. MILLS (when his name was called). Has the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has not voted.

Mr. MILLS. I withhold my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I announce once for all for the day my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to announce the pair of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I desire to announce once for all that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] is paired for the day with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. I vote "yea."

Mr. McMILLAN (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. McMILLAN. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. SQUIRE (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] has not voted. I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. GORDON. By an arrangement with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], so that the Senator from Michigan and myself can vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McMILLAN. I vote "yea."

Mr. WHITE (after having voted in the negative). I desire to inquire whether the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. WHITE. I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Platt,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KYLE subsequently said: I wish to state that upon the vote taken a few moments ago on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], had he been present, would have voted "nay." He is temporarily absent from the Chamber.

Mr. HILL. I move to insert at the end of line 22, page 187, what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add after line 22, page 187:

The amount of any dividends paid to a single stockholder not exceeding $1,000 annually may be deducted by corporations, companies, or associations, not including partnerships, from any amounts upon which they would otherwise be compelled to pay the taxes herein provided for; but the amount of such dividends so received by such single stockholder shall be included in estimating any income he may have in excess of $4,000, and in that event it shall bear its proportion of the tax herein provided for.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I have not discussed this provision of the pending measure, not because I was not interested in it, but because I believed that nothing that I could say would induce the majority of the Senate to adopt any amendments I might offer for the improvement of the bill, and because I have been engaged elsewhere in the public business a good portion of the time as a member of a committee of the Senate. If the condition of the Treasury was such, and the probable revenues of the Government to be derived from a protective tariff were likely to be such that further revenue was required, I would not oppose a just and equitable income tax.

My principal objection to the provision of the bill providing for an income tax is that it is proposed to raise revenue by an income tax, which I think should be raised by duties upon imports and which could be raised by such duties as would protect and stimulate American industries and protect American labor. I repeat, I am opposed to this provision for an income tax, because it is intended by it to provide revenue which should be raised by reasonable duties upon imports, and which would be raised by a law which would tax foreigners in large part instead of American citizens, and by a law which at least would incidentally protect American capital and American labor. But, as I said, I despair of being able to say anything that will influence the majority or change the provisions of the bill.

In regard to the particular question under discussion I desire to say that in Oregon, as in Louisiana, we have practically free trade in corporations. Any three persons may make, subscribe, and acknowledge articles of incorporation, stating the name of the corporation, its duration, the object of the incorporation, the amount of its capital stock, and the number of shares, and, filing one copy with the county clerk and another copy with the secretary of state, the corporation is formed.

These corporations may be formed for any purposes. They may be transportation companies, banks, manufacturing establishments, merchandising establishments, real estate associations, and hall associations. I do not know but the corporations of Oregon are more numerous than the copartnerships. There are hundreds and perhaps thousands of corporations formed to carry on ordinary business, engaged in a small manufacturing business, the members of which under this proposed law would not be liable to an income tax at all. No one of them receives a revenue to the amount of $4,000 per annum. But if the bill should become a law it would tax every stockholder in those small corporations carrying on a manufacturing and other business, virtually copartnerships, upon his entire income. It would tax every stockholder upon every dollar of his earnings when he would not otherwise be taxed.

I can not understand why the majority of the Senate insist that stockholders in a corporation, who derive their only income from their stock or from their membership in the corporation and do not have an income to exceed $4,000, shall pay an income tax, while persons who may receive the same amount of income from other investments are to pay no income tax at all.

We heard a moment ago from the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] of a single corporation that had 1,800 small stockholders, each of whose incomes from their stock in the corporation was less than $2,000; and I undertake to say, from such knowledge as I have had in regard to the character of stockholders in corporations, that the corporation referred to by the Senator from Illinois is not an exceptional one, and that there are thousands and tens of thousands, and I do not know but hundreds of thousands, of stockholders in corporations in the United States who would be required to pay an income tax upon income derived from corporations who, if they derived their income from other sources, would not be taxed. Why it is proposed to make such a discrimination I can not understand.

But when you come to consider the corporations in a State like Oregon or Louisiana, where any three persons may, of their own volition, form a corporation for any business purpose whatever, where there is no monopoly, because a half dozen corporations may be organized to build a railroad between two points and over the same line, and no persons are given a monopoly or any preference by becoming first incorporated. I say when you come to consider the character of corporations in such States, the great injustice of the provision of the present bill is shown.

Laboring men, who not only own the stock in the corporation, but who do the work, who, instead of forming a copartnership, have formed a corporation and taken the stock themselves, the stock being owned by three or four persons who labor with their hands—those are the men it is proposed to discriminate against and to tax by the provisions of this bill. Why the committee or the majority of the Senate will not consent to some amendment or modification of the bill by which this great injustice will be prevented, I can not understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JARVIS] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MORRILL. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was requested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to announce his pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH].

Mr. DIXON. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JARVIS]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted without noticing that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] was absent. I am paired with that Senator and withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Aldrich,	Gallinger,	Mitchell, Oregon	Quay,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. I offered an amendment early in this debate relating to exemptions and afterwards withdrew it, partly in fear of my friend the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], but more largely in the hope and expectation that with all the wisdom of this body and under the leadership of some one, we might be able to solve this problem of injustice without the limitation which I propose in my amendment; but that seems to have failed. All the Senators who have so far spoken on the other side agree that it is an injustice, and I have not heard a Senator on this side of the Chamber agree that this provision is in accordance with exact justice to the taxpayers of the country.

Even the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] answers our objections by saying that in an income tax there must be some little irregularities and that it is impossible to cure all the little difficulties that may occur respecting individuals.

So, Mr. President, I now offer the amendment which I offered a while ago, modifying the amendment, first, by withdrawing the proviso, and, secondly, by inserting "$80,000," instead of "$100,000;" so that the amendment will exempt from the operation of this paragraph all corporations having a capital, including surplus, of $80,000.

I have fixed this sum in order to exempt small corporations which, in the aggregate, allowing them to have an average income of 5 per cent upon their investments, will place them in the same position with an individual who has $4,000 exemption. If they shall have an average income of 6 per cent they will still be below the average person who has a $4,000 exemption, and also an exemption of all taxes, State, municipal, etc.

I hope now the Senator from Missouri will accept the amendment, inasmuch as this is a practical provision, really allowing the same exemption to a corporation which is allowed to an individual, although the corporation is necessarily composed of three or more individuals, as is the case in Oregon, and will spread over what would be otherwise an exemption of $12,000, allowing only an exemption of $4,000.

I certainly think, after all the exposure and elucidation of this subject by Senators on both sides of the Chamber, all agreeing that here is a great injustice that ought to be corrected, that the Senator from Missouri ought to allow the amendment to go, and I appeal to him, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] did, to accept the amendment, and if he finds on further examination that here is a great wrong, there will be an opportunity to correct it in the conference.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have nothing whatever to do with this question more than any other Senator. I am here to defend this bill. I believe it is right. I have never admitted, as the Senator says, that great injustice is being done anybody by the present provision.

Mr. ALLISON. I have not heard the Senator—I may have been absent when he has spoken on that subject—say that it would be just to exempt $4,000 to an individual who had his property invested in various enterprises, not including corporations, and not make any exemption to a person who happens to have the little property he owns invested in some small corporation. If the Senator has said that is equality and that that is justice, I have not heard it from his lips.

Mr. VEST. I gave my reasons to the extent of my ability as well as I could this morning, that I thought corporations were not entitled to the exemption given to individuals.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator believe that it is right to exempt a man who holds property earning an income of $4,000 a year, and, in addition to that, exempting all the taxes that he pays, State, county, and municipal, also the interest upon his debts and upon all property which does not yield an income; and then, if another man has property to the extent of $5,000 in a local corporation, that that man shall be required to pay 2 per cent upon that investment? If the Senator says that is justice, I shall be glad to hear him say so.

Mr. VEST. That is the same old question which we have been debating all the morning.

Mr. ALLISON. I know it is; but can the Senator answer it and say whether it is just or unjust?

Mr. VEST. The Senator can not put me into a corner about it by putting the question in a different form.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no desire to put the Senator in a corner.

Mr. VEST. My argument this morning was to show that we treated a corporation as a legal entity, that we had nothing to do with stockholders, that we treated corporations exactly as we treated individuals, except that we give them no exemptions; and I gave the reasons why we do not give them any exemptions. Whether those reasons were good or bad, I do not think any injustice is done to stockholders because they put their money into corporations knowing that they take the chances of whether they may make any money or not.

We have exempted the bonded indebtedness of corporations; we have given them credit for all their losses; we have taken out all their business expenses and operating expenses, and Senators talk to me now about the stockholder being different from a corporation. We know nothing about the stockholder. We deal with the corporation as an entity, and that is the whole of the argument, whether good or bad.

Mr. ALLISON. Does not the Senator allow a stockholder who has an interest in a corporation and who has an income of over $4,000 a part of the amount paid by the corporation?

Mr. VEST. That has nothing to do with the corporation. He does that as an individual citizen, and he takes all his income subject to the exemption that the bill gives him, whether that income comes from a corporation or from other sources. We deal with the individual in that case, and we deal with the corporation in the other. That is the whole of it; and it goes back to the old question of whether a corporation should have the exemption the individual has, and logically that is the full extent to which our friends on the other side of the Chamber can go. I did say this morning that if they should adopt that principle as to corporations, I thought they would be still logical from their standpoint, not from mine.

Mr. ALDRICH. The fault we find with the Senator from Missouri is that he deals with the individual and gives him an exemption in an income of $4,000 and refuses to deal with the individual who has an income less than that and makes him pay the tax.

Mr. VEST. That is the old argument again and again rehashed, and changed in words, but it comes back to exactly the same thing.

I do not expect to please Senators on the other side about it, because they are opposed to the whole income tax, and I am in favor of it. I believe it is a just system; I believe with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] that it is based upon equity and sound principle; and no man living has ever answered the arguments made by the Senator from Ohio and by ex-Governor Morton, of Indiana, in this Chamber in favor of an income tax. I have read that whole debate from beginning to end, and those speeches were never answered; but I do not expect to convince Senators that I am right, as they can not convince me. I have examined the question for myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "organized," at the end of line 22, in section 59, on page 187, it is proposed to insert: "having a capital, including surplus, exceeding $80,000."

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri speaks about the argument of the Senator from Ohio in behalf of an income tax on some former occasion. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri where there ever was an income tax before in this country, or, for all that I know, in any other country, upon corporations? I never heard of any. There never was any in this country. This income tax upon corporations is the invention, and the fearful and wonderful invention of the Senator from Missouri. It was not in the act of 1862; it was not in the act of 1864; and it is not in the Wilson bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

There has been a tax upon the income of all individuals, and that is all; but there never has been, as I have said, any income tax upon corporations until now; the Senator from Missouri has undertaken to condense one into the substitute section 59 of this bill. I should like to ask him where he got it, where he found it, who helped him invent it, or did he invent it out of his own head, for the like of it was never seen before either in the heavens above or in the earth beneath?

The Senator has gone on here talking about a tax upon the incomes of corporations, and there is no Senator upon this floor who ever saw or heard of one before. If any Senator ever did, I wait for a reply. [A pause.] I do not expect one from the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I am not going to waste time.

Mr. CHANDLER. You can not make him talk unless he chooses.

Mr. VEST. No, you can not.

Mr. CHANDLER. When he chooses to talk, he talks volubly enough at times, but you can not start him unless he wants to talk. So I shall not imply anything against him because he sits still. I shall go on and make my assertion that an income tax upon corporations was unknown up to the hour when the Senator from Missouri brought in this amendment to the pending bill. The act of 1862 had none, the act of 1864 had none, and the Wilson bill had none. This is a device of the Senator from Missouri to make this bill, I think, as unpopular as the wit of man can make it.

I do not regret that; no; I hear what the Senator says. I do not regret the unpopularity of this damnable bill, but I do not see how Senators can sit still here day after day and see such an atrocious, illy-constructed, and badly-ventilated bill go through without trying to do their duty as Senators, and trying to induce Senators upon the other side to make a bill which has some sort of symmetry and some sort of decency about it. It is a vain hope, I know, but still we keep trying and I suppose out of mercy and kindness to the Senator from Missouri we shall keep on trying to the end of the chapter.

In 1862 and in 1864 a tax was imposed upon the incomes of individuals. That was the only income tax in either of those laws. The House of Representatives in passing the Wilson bill put a tax upon the incomes of individuals; and that is all the income tax there is in the Wilson bill. Yes, corporations are taxed. Corporations were taxed in the act of 1862 and the act of 1864, and they are taxed in the Wilson bill; but special taxes are imposed upon them, and not an income tax.

The Senator from Missouri will find, if his scheme of imposing an income tax upon corporations, which he has undertaken to embody in these 9 lines of section 59, so fearfully and wonderfully made by him, ever becomes a law, there will be in the courts of this country four-horse teams driven through it in every direction.

Mr. President, how did we tax corporations in 1864? We taxed manufacturing corporations 5 per cent upon the amount of their product; we taxed railroad corporations 3 or 5 per cent upon the amount of their gross receipts, and so we went on taxing by special excise taxes all the corporations of the country.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The tax was upon the business of manufacturing, whether it was carried on by a corporation or by an individual or by an association. Congress did not tax manufacturing corporations as manufacturing corporations, but taxed the product of the business of manufacturing. It was an excise tax.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is right; but I come back all the time to my proposition, and the Senator will either deny or confirm what I say, that there never was a tax upon the income of a corporation.

Mr. ALDRICH. There never was, so far as I know, in the history of this or any other country.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is the English tax upon the income of individuals or corporations?

Mr. ALDRICH. Upon the incomes of individuals.

Mr. CHANDLER. But all taxes upon corporations in every system of internal taxation which was ever known among men, down to this hour, have been taxes upon corporations and special excise taxes upon the business of corporations, and never, until the Senator from Missouri undertook the task, has there been any attempt to roll an income tax upon individuals and an income tax upon corporations into the same paragraph of the same bill of legislation. The Senator from Missouri has undertaken to do it.

The clause is a fearful bungle, and it ought to have, if it passes, a special title to it, and that is "A clause to increase the fees of lawyers," because there will be more litigation and more large fees in connection with this wonderful discovery, invention, contrivance, and construction of the Senator from Missouri than ever have been known before in connection with any tax law passed by this Government.

Here is the act of 1864. It taxed a manufacturing corporation by compelling it to pay 5 per cent upon all manufactures of cotton, wool, silk, worsted, etc. It imposed a tax upon a manufactured product. It taxed iron at $5 a ton and at other rates per ton. It taxed express companies on their gross receipts, insurance companies on their gross receipts, and telegraph companies on their gross receipts. It taxed banks upon their deposits; it taxed lotteries upon their gross receipts. It had the succession and legacy taxation to which allusion has been made in this debate, both taxes upon the devolution of real estate and upon succession to personal property.

It also taxed corporations upon their dividends, and it taxed corporations upon their surplus profits. That has been the scheme of taxation in this country when it was under great stress to raise money. When the war exigencies required a taxation law that should tax everything, there was a tax put upon individual incomes, and there were all these special taxes put upon corporations, but there never was an attempt before, as I have said, to include in an income tax the income of corporations; but when corporations were to be taxed, when double and treble and quadruple taxation was deemed necessary as to corporations, those special taxes were put upon corporations, and the House of Representatives when it passed the Wilson bill undertook to do the same thing.

Look at the clause in this bill as it came from the House of Representatives. Perhaps I had better have let the subject alone and have allowed those clauses to be stricken out and this nondescript and astonishing and illogical and destructive clause of the Senator from Missouri to take its place; but, Mr. President, I do not refrain. I call attention to the fact that the House of Representatives, in imposing the taxes provided for by this bill, did undertake to conform in some degree to former precedents. In section 56 they provided for a tax upon the income of individuals; in section 59 they provided for a tax on the dividends of banks and insurance companies; in section 60 they provided, where there were no dividends, or additions to the surplus fund, for a tax on annual profits; and in section 61 they provided for dividends and interest on bonds paid or profits carried to the account of any fund.

I do not think those taxes were needed; I do not think they were advisable; but they were at least logical and the system was intelligible, but the Senator from Missouri seems to have thought that he could roll all those sections into one, and could provide for doing what never has been done before in the history of the world, and place a tax upon the incomes of corporations embraced in the same system with a tax upon the incomes of individuals. So the Senator provides in his amendment:

SEC. 59. That there shall be levied and collected a tax of 2 per cent per annum on the net profits or income above ordinary working or operating expenses of all banks, banking institutions, trust companies, saving institutions, fire, marine, life, and other insurance companies, railroad, canal, turnpike, canal navigation, slack water, telephone, telegraph, express, electric light, gas, water, street railway companies, and all other corporations, companies, or associations doing business for profit in the United States, no matter how created and organized.

Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Missouri comprehended the length and breadth and height and depth of the words, "all other corporations?" The Senator undertook to sweep in here into a dozen lines provisions for taxing the incomes and the business of corporations that every other legislator who ever undertook to frame a bill required twenty or thirty pages to cover. "Other corporations." That includes manufacturing corporations. What did the Senator mean when he referred to the "working or operating expenses" of manufacturing corporations?

The manufacturing corporations of this country spend millions of dollars for the materials which they work up into their manufactures. Did the Senator from Missouri mean when he said "operating expenses," that there should be included in those operating expenses the expenditures made for material worked up into manufactures? If he did, it was a very awkward and insufficient way of expressing the idea which the Senator meant to convey by this clause—

All other corporations, companies, or associations doing business for profit.

The Senator includes in that clause all trading corporations. The profits of a trading corporation are only those which they make after deducting the amounts which they pay for merchandise which they buy to sell again. Did the Senator from Missouri mean to include under the words "operating expenses," the expenditures made by trading corporations who buy merchandise to sell over again?

If he did, I take the liberty of saying to him that he should have included in it the deductions which he proposed to have made before assessing the incomes of those companies; but, no; the Senator from Missouri in this impossible work which he attempted, of including all kinds of taxation in a nine-line paragraph, wholly omitted to say that the manufacturing corporations should have credit for the expenditures made by them for materials worked up into manufactures, and he wholly omitted to say that trading corporations should have credit for the expenditures made by them for merchandise which they bought to sell again, and the Senator from Missouri, presenting a tax clause which involves millions of money to the business people of the country, describes all those expenditures as "working or operating expenses."

Mr. President, there never was a more loosely drawn, inaccurate, and, I was about to say, impotent taxation clause submitted to a legislative body than that by means of which the Senator from Missouri proposes to sweep away the whole substance of the bill as it came from the House, and to substitute his own clause for it.

I see no reason why there should be any special clause taxing the incomes of corporations. The tax upon individual incomes includes all the receipts of those individuals from the corporations in which they own stock; the tax upon individual incomes includes all the receipts of those individuals from interest upon the bonds of all corporations; and, therefore, unless there is an evasion by the individual of his honest dues under an income tax, everything that is income and the profit of a corporation is taxed by an individual income tax, unless it be such exemption as a corporation may carry to the credit of surplus or to the construction account, or to the account of some other fund.

If the Senator from Missouri had wished to provide a symmetrical and logical and a decent tax upon incomes, he would have provided simply that the incomes of individuals should be taxed, with a suitable exemption, not $4,000, nor $3,000, nor $2,000, nor $1,000, but an income exempted somewhat below $1,000. Having thus taxed according to equity and justice, if an income tax is required by the exigencies of the country, the income of individuals, then a simple tax upon the surplus profits of the corporations of the country, a simple tax upon such portion of the profits of a corporation as should not be paid out to its stockholders or its bondholders either as dividend or interest, would have made a tax which could have been defended, if the necessities of the country required such a tax, but when the Senator from Missouri undertakes to impose a tax upon corporations, and undertakes, for the first time in the history of this country, to impose an income tax upon corporations, and proposes to sweep out of the system of taxation all the special taxes by which the legislators of this country have undertaken to tax the corporations when it was necessary to tax them—the Senator from Missouri, I say, in doing this does a most unwise act, and is constructing a legislative taxation system which will not bear examination.

So I hold that this provision should not be in this bill at all. If it is to remain here, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is absolutely necessary to make it a working statute. But there is no occasion for any such statute in my judgment. The income tax as it is proposed by this bill, not only the tax upon individuals, but the tax upon corporations, will be an odious tax. The moneys to be raised thereby in all human probability will not be necessary for the service of the Government. It is an attempt to revive an odious system of taxation, a system of war taxation, and, moreover, a system of double taxation, of which the people of this country, if I am not mistaken, are not in favor.

Mr. President, an income tax is either a tax upon the personal earnings of an individual or else it is double taxation. I believe that I can challenge successful dispute of that proposition. Analyze a tax upon the incomes of individuals, and it is either a tax upon the personal earnings of an individual or else it is double taxation. Nothing is more offensive to the people of this country than to tax their personal earnings; nothing is more offensive to the individual than to tax his wages, than to tax his professional income, than to tax his personal earnings which he gets either by the sweat of his brow, by the skill of his hand, or by the acuteness of his brain. Individuals do not like to be taxed upon those earnings; and I say to the Senator from Missouri that any taxes of that kind will be unpopular in this country; they will be condemned by the people and will never be willingly submitted to except as such a tax was submitted to in 1864, because it was necessary in order to raise money from all sources and by all means to put down the slaveholders' rebellion.

I say that in addition to the unpopular taxation of the personal income of individuals the remainder of every income tax is double taxation.

What is a man's income? If he gets it from rents upon real estate the real estate is taxed by the State and by the town or by the city in which he lives. If the income of an individual is the profit made in a store, in trade, the merchandise which constitutes the stock in trade of the individual is taxed. If the income of the individual is from dividends from corporations or interest upon bonded securities, the corporation property is taxed and the bonded securities upon which the individual gets an income are taxed by the State.

Without going further into this analysis, I assert, without fear of successful contradiction, that the items which go to make up an income tax under this bill, and under any income tax which can be devised, which are not items of personal labor and services of an individual, are items of income from property, every dollar of which property has been already taxed by the local authorities of the community where the individual lives.

Here, Mr. President, is the fundamental vice of this whole system of an income tax, that it taxes the personal earnings of individuals who are sensitive about such a tax, who are not willing to pay such a tax, and who will not pay such a tax if they can overthrow the legislation which imposes it upon them.

In addition, the income tax is an imposition upon property or the receipts from property, every dollar of which has been already taxed by local authorities. Therefore, the income tax is deliberate and willful and unjustifiable double taxation.

Mr. President, for these reasons I am utterly opposed to every word and every line of this income tax. I did not think at first that the income tax, which it is assumed will be popular in the West and South, would be an absolutely condemnatory feature of the pending bill. But the more it has been discussed the more apparent to me is it that it is a tax not required by any exigency of the Government, not justified upon any sound principle of taxation, and that it is especially objectionable in this new form in which it has been placed by the Senator from Missouri, a form of income tax which never has been heard of in any country from the time when the taxation of the human race began down to this hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent that we come to a vote upon this amendment without further debate. If I can get that agreement I shall be quite content to vote on the amendment; but if not I want to make another motion.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I simply want to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the Senator's amendment be stated.

Mr. HILL. I do not desire to discuss it. I move to add at the end of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa the following:

But this provision shall not be construed to permit an exemption of over $4,000 to any individual stockholder, including all his income not otherwise exempted.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Iowa modifies his amendment by accepting the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa as modified.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be voted on without further debate.

Mr. HILL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], and vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 24, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Hoar,	Platt,
Allison,	Frye,	McMillan,	Power,
Chandler,	Gallinger,	Manderson,	Proctor,
Cullom,	Hale,	Mitchell, Oregon	Quay,
Davis,	Higgins,	Patton,	Squire,
Dixon,	Hill,	Perkins,	Washburn.

NAYS—31.

Bate,	George,	Jones, Ark.	Peffer,
Berry,	Gibson,	Kyle,	Pugh,
Blackburn,	Gordon,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Blanchard,	Gorman,	McLaurin,	Turpie,
Camden,	Gray,	Martin,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Mills,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Hunton,	Morgan,	White.
Faulkner,	Jarvis,	Pasco,

NOT VOTING—30.

Allen,	Dubois,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Brice,	Hansbrough,	Murphy,	Teller,
Butler,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Vilas,
Caffery,	Irby,	Pettigrew,	Walsh,
Call,	Jones, Nev.	Ransom,	Wilson,
Cameron,	Lodge,	Sherman,	Wolcott.
Carey,	McPherson,	Shoup,
Daniel,	Mitchell, Wis.	Smith,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs upon the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend by adding in line 22, section 59, after the amendment already adopted, the following:

Except joint stock companies whose income does not exceed $4,000 in the year, and in which the beneficial interest is not held in shares which are assignable without the consent of the other associates authorizing such transfer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, this bill has already developed that it does not apply to partnerships. What I have moved is a description of partnerships and nothing else, except, as I have stated the case, where there is an exemption from personal liability from debt. This merely applies to small joint stock companies which do not have in all an income of over $4,000 a year. No reason can be stated why they should not be exempted.

I hope this amendment will be adopted. It will be of very great importance to very many poor, hard-working people. It carries out the intent of the law as declared on its face. It does not except a partnership of four times $4,000, but only excepts the case of a joint stock company whose stock is not divided into shares, and can not be assigned without the consent of the others. I should like, for one, though I do not expect to live to see it, when the monument to my honorable friend from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is erected by his sorrowing countrymen, that there might be inscribed upon it that he consented to one just and humane provision for the benefit of men who work hard for their living and who are poor. There are plenty of provisions here for the hundred thousand dollar fellow. He is excepted. Everybody who has $130,000 of real estate at 4 per cent, gets an exemption of his entire income and even of the principal, and here is a man who is starting in a little business, one of four who may earn a thousand dollars apiece, and this $20 apiece is to be taken out of them. As I said, the $20 means the whole luxury of a hard working year. It means buying a schoolbook for the child or a dress for the daughter or a thousand things, some of which I suggested before.

Mr. President, I appeal to the Senators on the other side of the Chamber. They deny indignantly that they have put voting in the Senate into a trust, which has two or three managers. I thought the objection to trusts, which we have been striking at, was that the capitalists, small and large, put into the hands of two or three managers their business activities and powers, surrendering and stifling emulation, difference of opinion, independence, separate enterprise. If that is a bad thing in business, and to be condemned, to be struck at, to be legislated against, what is it in the action of the Senate?

Here is a proposition against which I challenge the most ingenious Senator on the other side to state an argument. It is a proposition affecting a large number of American citizens. I challenge any Senator on the other side to stand up in his place and say that he does not think it is right as an individual; and yet if it is voted down it is to be voted down because Senators so feeling and so thinking, after a judgment upon it, have put their votes in trust.

Mr. PEFFER. Before the Senator resumes his seat I wish to inquire of him in what respect his proposed amendment differs from the suggestion I made last evening about excepting incomes of $4,000?

Mr. HOAR. I did not hear the Senator's remark last evening.

Mr. PEFFER. When the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Iowa were discussing one of their propositions last evening, I asked them whether it would not relieve the situation of some embarrassment if we would simply treat the coporations the same as individual persons, excepting $4,000 from the operations of this proposed law, so that where the income did not exceed $4,000 there would be no tax.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, it does not go so far as that.

Mr. PEFFER. What is the difference? That is what I wish to inquire.

Mr. HOAR. It does not exempt anything from an income above $4,000.

Mr. PEFFER. So I understand.

Mr. HOAR. Let me repeat once more for the benefit of the Senator from Kansas and other Senators, that it describes corporations which in the first place have an income of less than $4,000, all told. Next the corporation, in order to get the benefit of it, must be a corporation whose property is not divided into stock and where the beneficial interest can not be assigned without the consent of all the associates. In other words, it is nothing but a partnership that I am describing, with the single exception that there is the corporate arrangement, which in certain cases screens the man from individual liability for debt, and which can go on if the party dies. That is all there is of it.

Mr. PEFFER. I suggest to the Senator to strike out all of his amendment after the word "year."

Mr. HOAR. Certainly, I will strike that out; but I supposed it would make it more satisfactory to the Senators to put it in. It does not extend the amendment.

Mr. PEFFER. Then the amendment would contain the words "except joint stock companies whose income does not exceed $4,000 in the year."

Mr. HOAR. Very well; I will modify the amendment accordingly.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Massachusetts that that should not only apply to joint stock companies, but it should apply to all corporations, companies, or associations.

Mr. PEFFER. Very well; let it be so applied.

Mr. ALLISON. That I think certainly the Senator from Missouri will agree to.

Mr. HOAR. I used the words "joint stock companies," because that is the popular phrase for these little partnerships in my State. However, I will accept the suggestion.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the Senator from Kansas believes as I believe that it is wise to give these corporations the same exemption that we give individuals.

Mr. PEFFER. I think so.

Mr. ALLISON. Therefore that can be done.

Mr. HOAR. I will modify the amendment in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be read.

Mr. ALLISON. I had intended to offer such an amendment, and I suggest that the amendment shall come in immediately after the word "above," on the second line of the first paragraph of section 59; so as to read:

Two per cent per annum on the net profits or income above $4,000, and above ordinary actual expenses, etc.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; I will accept that, and modify my amendment accordingly.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Missouri to just relent enough to exempt the small corporations below $4,000.

Mr. VEST. I can not accept the amendment. I am not authorized to do it.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Missouri said just now that he was authorized to do anything he saw it his duty to do as a Senator, and that nobody has any power to prevent him.

Mr. VEST. I do not hear the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I understood the Senator to say a little while ago that he was authorized to do anything he thought right.

Mr. VEST. I never made any such statement as that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be read.

Mr. VEST. I never made any such statement. I am here as the organ of the committee. I have no personal discretion in the matter.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to disavow any imputation that the Senator in the management of the bill is authorized to do what he thinks is right. I am not aware that I said it.

Mr. VEST. If the majority of the Finance Committee instruct me to accept the amendment I shall do so. Unless so instructed I shall not do so. That is all of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read as modified.

The SECRETARY. After the word "above," in the second line of section 59, insert:

Except joint stock companies whose income does not exceed $4,000 in the year.

Mr. ALLISON. What I want is that this exemption shall apply to all these corporations.

Mr. VEST. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that no one knows better than he does that all this matter can be adjusted in conference. It does not facilitate the passage of the bill to accept any amendment, because the amendments seem to increase and feed upon what is given.

Mr. HOAR. "We shall not be there to see," as Cowper says of John Gilpin.

Mr. VEST. The Senator will be represented, I suppose.

Mr. HOAR. I am afraid not much.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Rhode Island will be there.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that the Senate has something—it used to have something—to do with the national legislation as well as conference committees. I am very much disturbed by the last suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, that he will only accept in all of this legislation, going over weeks and weeks and affecting the whole business of the country, such amendments as are authorized by the majority of the Finance Committee. The Finance Committee has not had a meeting for six weeks, and probably will have but one until this bill is disposed of, and it is utterly impossible that there can be any amendments considered by that committee.

The Senator himself brought in 400 amendments, when the Finance Committee had not even had a meeting and never heard of them. How the Senator is to say that a thing just and right, and just and honest can not be done in this great body because somebody will not let him do what he thinks is right, I can not understand.

Mr. VEST. I have not said that I thought it right. I do not think it right, and I shall not consent to it as far as I am concerned under any state of the case whatever.

Mr. ALLEN and Mr. PEFFER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair declines to recognize any one further until the Secretary obtains the proper amendment as accepted by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. ALLISON. If I can have the ear of the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. PEFFER. Allow me to make a suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Kansas to make a suggestion?

Mr. ALLISON. I was just about to make one myself, but I will yield.

Mr. PEFFER. I think we can simplify the proceeding by inserting the words "exceeding $4,000" after the word "income" in line 15, page 187.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest, if the Senator will allow me, that the best place to insert it is in line 3 of section 59. Insert after the word "above" the words "$4,000 and above."

Mr. HOAR. On what page?

Mr. ALLISON. On page 187, section 59. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that this amendment had been suggested to me by several Senators on both sides of the Chamber, and I intended to offer it.

Mr. HOAR. We have different prints of the bill. Will the Senator indicate the point in section 59 where it comes in? There are three or four different prints here.

Mr. ALLISON. It is on page 187 of the print of May 7, the print that is used at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert after the word "above," line 15, page 187:

Four thousand dollars and above.

So as to read:

That there shall be levied and collected, except as herein otherwise provided, a tax of 2 per cent annually on the net profits or income above $4,000 and above actual operating and business expenses.

Mr. HOAR. I will either accept that or will let the Senator move it as his amendment. He had better move it as his amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Oh, no; that is a matter of no moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts as modified by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HOAR. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KYLE (when Mr. ALLEN'S name was called). The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] is temporarily absent from the Chamber, but I think if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP]. I withhold my vote, as he is not in the Chamber.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BATE. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN]. I would vote "nay," and he would vote "yea."

Mr. MORRILL. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PASCO. I wish to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. GORDON. By an arrangement with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], and vote "nay." The Senator from Vermont will also vote.

Mr. MORRILL. I vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (after having voted in the negative). I have been requested to announce a pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who has been summoned from the Chamber temporarily. I therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—28.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL. I move to insert at the end of section 59:

Corporations created by any State, and which by the terms of their incorporation or by the laws of the State creating them, are required to pay a special tax to the State upon their earnings, dividends, or franchises, or to pay a portion of their earnings as such to such State for the uses of the State government (being other than a general tax paid in common with individuals) are exempted from the tax herein provided for.

Mr. President, the object of this amendment is to present for the consideration of the Senate one of the most important questions that can possibly arise under this income tax provision. The exemption herein provided for is one that certainly ought to be made. As a lawyer as well as a Senator, I maintain the broad proposition that the Federal Government has no right to tax any of the means or instrumentalities adopted by a State government to secure revenues to conduct its affairs. I referred to this question in the set speech, if I may call it such, which I made a few days ago. I simply desire to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the exact situation of affairs.

It has been held by the highest court of the land, to whose decision we must bow with respect, that Congress can not tax the salaries of State officials and, in accordance with that decision, there is included a provision herein, namely, that salaries due to State, county, or municipal officers shall be exempt from the income tax herein levied. Of course, if the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] had been carried out, that there is no necessity for putting in any amendments to the bill where the Constitution exempts officials, then of course this provision which I have just quoted would not have been inserted. But the committee has proceeded upon a different basis. The committee, and very properly I think, has proceeded upon the theory that it is proper to put in the bill every constitutional exemption; that is, every exemption required by the Constitution of the United States. It has not included them all, in my judgment, but I mean those exemptions which are conceded properly to be protected by the Constitution.

Mr. President, there is no dispute about the general proposition that Congress can not tax the means or instrumentalities of a State government. The decision is a broad one. It includes everything that can be called the means or the instrumentalities of the State government. The authors of the pending bill go further than that. They take the broad position that a State government includes county government; that it includes municipal government; that all the subdivisions of the State are included in the definition of a State; and they have provided by the terms of the bill that the salaries of those officials shall be exempt.

The point which I present here is that whatever can be justly regarded as the means or instrumentalities of a State government created, organized, or used even, for the purpose of a State government are exempted. We had a debate yesterday upon the general proposition that Congress can not tax State bonds. Many Senators who disagree with me on other propositions, came to my support upon that proposition, and it lacked, I think, but three votes of being carried, with a comparatively light vote in the Senate. All the arguments made by those who came to my support were well taken. I invoke them in the support of this proposition. If you can not tax State bonds, as they very well argue, and it is the truth, neither can you tax the salaries of the State officials, because it is an interference with the means or instrumentalities for carrying on the State government. So you can not tax these corporations to which I refer.

What does the amendment provide? Before speaking of that allow me to say that I have endeavored to present this question fairly to the good sense of the Senate, and I have excluded all those corporations which pay simply the same share of taxation which an individual pays, namely, all corporations paying a tax upon their real estate and paying taxes upon the personal property which they own in all the States of the Union in some form or another. That taxation they pay, not because they are corporations, but they pay it because for certain purposes they are deemed citizens of the State. They are owners of property, and, in common with the rest of the State, they pay their share of real and personal taxation. That includes a large number of corporations in each and all the States.

I say I have purposely excluded from the operation of the amendment all this large class of corporations. But I have endeavored to include what corporations? In the first place, before answering that question, allow me to say (and I need not spend any time in making the point) that a corporation is the creature of the State government. Corporations are incorporated by the State. The corporations here referred to, and specifically mentioned in the amendment, are the creature of the State, the means of the State, the instrumentalities of the State to carry out its purposes.

Now, what does the amendment provide? It provides that the corporations thus created by a State government and by the terms of their incorporation originally or by law required to pay a special tax upon their earnings, dividends, or franchises, or are obliged to pay a portion of their earnings to the State government for the uses of the State government, are exempted under the Constitution of the United States, and should be exempt under the provisions of the bill.

A State under its constitution and having a separate sovereignty as distinct within its sphere as that of the General Government sees fit to carry out a system of internal improvements. For instance, the State of New York might desire to authorize a railroad to be constructed to the wilderness known as its North Woods. It grants a charter to a corporation composed of private citizens. The State may take some stock itself in the corporation. The State authorizes citizens to invest. The State, in creating the corporation, provides that it shall reserve to itself for the uses of its State government a certain portion of the net earnings or revenues which shall be realized from the maintenance and operation of that road.

Do you tell me that the General Government has a right to step in and say when it has no power to destroy that corporation directly by your legislation, when it did not create that corporation, when it has no control over it, when it can not destroy it, that it can turn around by means of this income tax, so called, and virtually destroy it; that it can take away from the State government the very revenues which in its wisdom it has seen fit to provide for the operation of its own independent sovereignty? The bare statement of the proposition carries with it the legal argument necessary to sustain it.

Such corporations have been created in divers States of the Union. They exist to-day. Pennsylvania, by virtue of the laws of that State, imposes taxes upon its corporations, and I think I state correctly when I state that the tax upon the earnings, etc., of the corporations of Pennsylvania pays its entire State tax. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether that is not the case.

Mr. QUAY. It does not pay it in its entirety, but a very large proportion of it.

Mr. HILL. Therefore, we have the question presented where a State either for the purpose of carrying out its system of internal improvements or for any other legitimate, honorable, and legal purpose has created a railroad corporation, or any other corporation, and has reserved to itself a portion of its earnings for the uses, not of a municipality, not of a town even, but I put it in the amendment directly for the uses of the State government. Last year, in my own State, there were nearly $2,000,000 received from this class of corporations because of the taxes imposed and by virtue of law.

This question does involve more than that of yesterday the question of State rights. It involves the question as to whether the Federal Government can usurp the functions of State governments. If the Government can step in and thus virtually control by the indirect levy of an income tax, it can tax the corporation directly; it can destroy the State governments; it can discredit their resources; it can limit them, restrict them. For instance, suppose that what would amount to 1 per cent would be the net earnings. Here comes the General Government and says we want 2 per cent. Here comes the State government and exercises its right and says we want that 1 per cent. Here is a conflict immediately. It is a question between State and Federal authority, and is it to be said that in a Democratic Senate, made up of believers in State rights, this doctrine is to receive its death blow by the hands of Senators?

Mr. President, I trust that we shall never witness that spectacle. And is this a pure speculation of mine? Has it never been suggested before? I say not. I have sent for the volume where this question was explicitly referred to. I can state it. Senators will recollect that the case of the Collector vs. Day, or Buffington vs. Day, was the case which decided that the General Government could not tax the salaries of State officials.

The broad ground was laid down that the State government could not tax any of the property of the General Government. The State government can not tax the mail; it can not tax the mint; it can not tax patent rights; it can not tax judicial process of the Federal courts; it can not tax any of the means or instrumentalities employed by the Federal Government with which to operate the Federal Government. It is laid down by Justice Nelson that, on the other hand, the National Government can not tax any of the means or instrumentalities of the State government whereby the State government would be crippled, interfered with, or its revenues diminished.

The case is familiar to every lawyer around this circle. It was an important case. Judge Bradley, who was an able lawyer, dissented from the opinion upon the ground that he thought the inherent power, as he called it, of the Federal Government to raise revenues ought not to be thus restricted. He thought that the announcement of this decision was a most important one, which would return to plague the courts and the legislation of our country. Judge Bradley, while dissenting from the prevailing opinion in the case, fully comprehended and appreciated the nature of that decision and the tremendous consequences which would ensue from it. He said in his dissenting opinion:

> In my judgment, the limitation of the power of taxation in the General Government, which the present decision establishes, will be found very difficult of control. Where are we to stop in enumerating the functions of the State governments which will be interfered with by Federal taxation? If a State incorporates a railroad to carry out its purposes of internal improvement, or a bank to aid its financial arrangements, reserving, perhaps, a percentage on the stock or profits for the supply of its own treasury, will the bonds or stock of such an institution be free from Federal taxation? How can we now tell what the effect of this decision will be?

He saw the effect of that decision, but that is the law to-day. It has been adhered to as the law from the time it was announced until this very hour. In my judgment that decision was a correct one. I care nothing about the criticism which Justice Bradley made of its consequences. It was a decision made by able judges, and lays down the broad doctrine essential in my judgment to the preservation of the rights, the liberties, and the revenues of State governments as well as the National Government.

It declares, first, that the State can not tax the Federal functions; it can not tax patent rights; it can not tax judicial process; it can not tax the mails; it can not tax Federal property; it can not tax national banks. It can not tax them, why? Because they are the instrumentalities. It can not put a tax upon mail wagons belonging to the General Government. Why? Because these are the means and the instrumentalities employed by the National Government for the purpose of carrying out the great object of the Federal Constitution and Federal Union. All this is proper enough, legitimate enough, well founded enough, and to which there can be no possible objection.

On the other hand, what does the court decide? It decides that the State is also supreme within its sovereignty. We have two jurisdictions. Yet, so far as property is concerned in the States, corporations, created by the States, the State government is supreme. Could Congress pass a law abrogating the charter of a State corporation created by the laws of the State? Could we pass a law here which virtually wiped out these creatures of the State government? I do not think it could be done in reference to any State corporation.

But, Mr. President, much less can it be done with this class of corporations to which I refer, namely, this limited class of corporations whereby the State has taken the precaution to reserve to itself, for the benefit of its own State treasury, a certain portion of its income on earnings.

In the case that I illustrated which jurisdiction is to have precedence? Who can be permitted to usurp these functions, taxes, funds, revenues, created by the very law of the State under which these corporations have their existence and live and move and have their being?

Mr. President, there is no answer to this proposition, in my judgment. I contended yesterday unsuccessfully, but I think rightfully, after all, with all due respect to the majority of the Senate, which outvoted me, that Congress could not tax the State bonds. If that be so, and I think it is clearly so, because the State bonds are the methods of floating your State debt, are the very means of supplying your treasury with its money, I ask is not this simply another scheme of State government?

The State government creates a corporation. By the very terms of the enactments it provides that the corporation shall pay into the State treasury a certain portion of its funds, and why is not that scheme a part and parcel of the State administration and of its government the same as the municipality?

Mr. CULLOM. As the Senator is discussing that subject, I should like to refer to the case of the Illinois Central Railroad.

Mr. HILL. I will yield to an interruption.

Mr. CULLOM. By the Senator's consent I will read to him the provision of the constitution of our State with reference to the land grant and the return for it to the State that was agreed to by the Illinois Central. The provision is as follows:

> No contract, obligation, or liability whatever of the Illinois Central Railroad Company to pay any money into the State treasury, nor any lien of the State upon, or right to tax property of said company in accordance with the provisions of the charter of said company, approved February 10, in the year of our Lord 1851, shall ever be released, suspended, modified, altered, remitted, or in any manner diminished or impaired by legislative or other authority; and all the moneys derived from said company after the payment of the State debt shall be appropriated and set apart for the payment of the ordinary expenses of the State government, and for no other purposes whatever.

The contract was that the Illinois Central Railroad should pay into the State treasury 7 per cent of its gross earnings for the amount that it got in the original charter.

Mr. HILL. My amendment ought to be amended by providing "whether created by law or authorized by the State constitution." We can frame that afterwards, and I think reference should be made to it. Of course, if under State law they can not be taxed, so much less could they be taxed under the State constitutional provision, and my amendment should be made so as to cover that. For instance, I will take this very illustration. That provision was in the original constitution?

Mr. CULLOM. It has been continued from one constitution to another.

Mr. HILL. Was it in the original constitution of Illinois?

Mr. CULLOM. I think so. It was the law, in the first place. There was an act of Congress passed authorizing the construction of the road and the giving of alternate sections of land for that purpose to the State of Illinois.

Mr. HILL. The argument upon the other side would be that, although in the original State constitution of Illinois there was contained this very exemption substantially of the railroad, that is, that no other sovereignty could tax those earnings except the State sovereignty, nevertheless the Federal Government could step in and by means of an income tax usurp and take away from the State government the very funds that possibly the State may have relied upon to run its government. Possibly the State had provided no other means or system except that, and if the Federal Government stepped in by means of an income tax and usurped those funds the State government was broken down.

Mr. President, there is no answer to that proposition.

Mr. CULLOM. I will state as a matter of fact that under the provision of the contract and the law and this constitution the railroad company has put into the State treasury from four to five hundred thousand dollars a year, and while that is a small part of the expenses of the State government it helps that much.

Mr. HILL. It illustrates the point involved, because if you can take away four or five hundred thousand dollars of the revenues reserved under your Constitution from this very corporation which you created, you can take away millions, and you can take away the whole of them. If your State government had relied upon these revenues exclusively for the operation of the State government it would be seriously crippled by this action of the Federal Government.

Mr. President, I insist, as a question of constitutional law, you can not tax this class of corporations. The power to tax includes the power to destroy. You can not destroy them. You can not vacate their charters by Federal legislation. What you can not do directly you can not do indirectly by this system of taxation. You can not tax their State bonds, because they need their State bonds for the purposes of their State government. You can not tax the income of the corporations where the State government has provided that that very income shall be used for the purposes of the State government.

Mr. President, if this scheme shall be adopted in its present phrase, if this amendment shall be repudiated, there is an end of State rights so far as the questions of taxation are concerned. There is nothing reserved. Talk about your Federal limitations; they do not exist. Talk about the reservations of the State governments; they have none; they are simply at the beck and will of the Federal Government if this principle is not established.

The very doctrine laid down here by the highest court was in my judgment essential to the preservation of State rights, State sovereignty, State jurisdiction, State revenues, and essential to the very maintenance of the State government. What is the answer to that? Is it necessary in this day and age of the world, at this very time—are our Federal finances so desperate that it is necessary to take not only the collateral-inheritance tax away from the State governments, the taxation of the incomes of individuals, but we shall now seek to aggrandize to the General Government all the revenues provided from this class of corporations which the States have created? As a question of policy, aside from a question of constitutional law, I doubt the propriety of any such procedure.

I doubt the wisdom of this class of legislation. I can not for the life of me see how Senators, disciples of Calhoun, disciples of Jefferson, men who served under Jackson or followed the old Democratic party in all the glorious days of its previous history—I say previous history—can come here and now vote against an amendment like this, which recognizes the very sovereignty of the States.

Is it to be said that our means and sources of revenue are subject to the caprice of Congress; that when we can create a bank in a State, when we can provide that a portion of these profits shall go to the State government as a means or as a part of the conduct of its fiscal business, the General Government can annihilate that bank? Can the General Government put such a tax upon it? I am not now speaking of the question of taxing its circulation; that involves another and distinct question; but can it by virtue of an income tax take away from a State the very funds which they have provided shall be realized from that bank?

Mr. President, this attack upon the State governments is an attack upon the essential principles upon which our Government is founded. The theory of our Government is that the States are independent of the General Government to a large extent. They are independent so far as their sovereignty extends. It is one Union, but composed of forty-four States. The States can not touch the Federal Government in its scheme of taxation within the jurisdiction which it has; but certain things are left to the States, and these are the matters left to the States, namely, everything that can be said to be essential, the means, the instrumentalities, the corporations, the banks, the railroads, whatever the State has seen fit to provide revenue from.

As I said before, I have excluded from my amendment the corporations that do not pay any share of their earnings as such to the Federal Government. I concede for the purposes of the argument that the corporation which pays simply its tax upon its real estate or upon its personal property is not included within this amendment. I might go further. I think you can not tax those, but I do not wish to complicate the question involved: I desire to simplify it.

Mr. President, this is an important question to my State. One-fifth of the railroad mileage of the country is now in the hands of receivers. If you attack them by this sort of taxation more of the railroads must be placed in the hands of receivers. This legislation is not necessary for the needs of the Government. It is not necessary to trample down the barriers which the Constitution has erected for the preservation of the State governments.

Mr. President, I fail to see the answer; and I will pause to allow the gentlemen who are expected to defend the provision, that we may see what they have to say.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator suggested he was going to make a change in the amendment. I suggest a modification by adding instead of the last words—

May deduct such special tax which is provided for by the States in addition to the other exemptions herein provided for.

Mr. HILL. What is the Senator's suggestion?

Mr. CULLOM. That the railroad company, for instance, "may deduct such special tax which is provided for by the State in addition to the other exemptions herein provided for." Take the case of the Illinois Central Railroad, for instance, that pays into the treasury of the State of Illinois say $500,000 a year. That amount ought to be deducted from the income tax that they pay in addition to other deductions that are made as provided in the bill under consideration.

Mr. HILL. I think we had better give a little more care to that and draw it up as a separate proposition. I think one could be carefully drawn, of course, which would cover it. I am afraid that does not. If the Senator will take his time this evening and draw one up it can be presented hereafter.

Mr. CULLOM. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROACH in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. PEFFER. Let the amendment be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of section 59, on page 188:

Corporations created by any State, and which, by the terms of their incorporation or by the laws of the State creating them, are required to pay a special tax to the State upon their earnings, dividends, or franchises, or to pay a portion of their earnings as such to such State for the uses of the State government (being other than a general tax paid in common with individuals), are exempted from the tax herein provided for.

Mr. HILL. Is it possible that the proposition of the bill is so clearly wrong that nothing is to be said against it? I do not care about reiterating the arguments which I have already presented, but it strikes me that something should be said if anything can be said in defense of this tax. If not, I will call for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DANIEL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE].

Mr. MILLS (when his name was called). I desire to ask whether the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. MILLS. I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], and withhold my vote.

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If the Senator from Alabama were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted, but I observe that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], with whom I am paired, is not present. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. GORDON. I announce my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. GORMAN (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], and therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Aldrich,	Hale,	Manderson,	Sherman,

So the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2000) granting to the Brainerd and Northern Minnesota Railway Company a right of way through the Leech Lake Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate calling upon the Secretary of War for an estimate of the cost of dredging the bar at Everett, in the State of Washington.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7477) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for prior years, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 196) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 730) making Labor Day a legal holiday; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 196) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government, was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOAR. Let the joint resolution be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read at length.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That all appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia and for the payment of pensions under existing laws, which shall remain unprovided for on the 30th day of June, 1894, be, and they are hereby, continued and made available for a period of thirty days from and after that date, unless the regular appropriations provided therefor in bills now pending in Congress shall have been previously made for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895; and a sufficient amount is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry on the same: Provided, That no greater amount shall be expended for such operations than will be in the same proportion to the appropriations for the fiscal year 1894 as thirty days' time bears to the whole of said fiscal year: Provided further, That the total expenditures for the whole of the fiscal year 1895, under the several appropriations hereby continued and under the several appropriation bills now pending shall not exceed in the aggregate the amounts finally appropriated therefor in the several bills now pending, except in cases where a change is made in the annual, monthly, or per diem compensation, or in the numbers of officers, clerks, or other persons authorized to be employed by the several appropriations hereby continued, in which cases the amounts authorized to be expended shall equal thirty three-hundred-and-sixty-fifths of the appropriations for the fiscal year 1894, and three hundred and thirty-five three-hundred-and-sixty-fifths of the appropriations contained in the several bills now pending when the same shall have been finally passed, unless the salary or compensation of any office shall be increased or diminished without changing the grade or the duties thereof, in which case such salary or compensation shall relate to the entire fiscal year and run from the beginning thereof: Provided further, That the session employés of the Senate and House of Representatives now authorized by law shall be continued upon the rolls until the end of the present session of Congress and paid at the rate per diem or month at which they are now paid; and a sufficient amount is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to pay the same: Provided further, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated a sum sufficient to enable the Clerk of the House to pay to Members and Delegates the amount which they certify they have paid or agreed to pay for clerk hire necessarily employed by them in the discharge of their official and representative duties, as provided in the joint resolution approved March 3, 1893, until the end of the present session of Congress.

Mr. HOAR. I object to the question being put on the reference of the joint resolution.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] asked to have the joint resolution referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOAR. I object.

Mr. COCKRELL. My motion was to refer it to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOAR. I object to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the joint resolution will go over under the rule.

Mr. PLATT subsequently said: Mr. President, with reference to the joint resolution coming from the House of Representatives which was laid before the Senate, I wish to say that I have no objection in the world to its going over until to-morrow, but I do not wish, by my silence, to assent to the proposition that, a joint resolution being in that stage, one objection carries it over to the next day. It might make us some trouble hereafter.

Mr. HOAR. My objection was to the consideration of the joint resolution when another matter was before the Senate. If some Senator had moved to lay aside the tariff bill the consideration of the joint resolution would be another question; then the question suggested by the Senator from Connecticut would arise; but I suppose it is enough at present to say that there is no provision under the rules of the Senate for putting the motion to refer a House joint resolution when a bill is under consideration.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I gave notice of an amendment which I understand is satisfactory to the committee or to certain members with whom I have talked. It is an amendment to the provision in regard to savings banks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the amendment relating to savings banks:

Nor to that part of the business of any savings bank, institution, or other similar association having a capital stock, that is conducted on the mutual plan solely for the benefit of its depositors on such plan, and which shall keep its accounts of its business conducted on such mutual plan separate and apart from its other accounts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. VEST. As I understand the amendment, it simply applies the same provision to mutual companies which we have applied to other companies.

Mr. ALDRICH. It follows the language exactly of the other amendment.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to the amendment. We did not intend to put any tax upon mutual companies.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Has the Senator from Missouri the authority of the Finance Committee to agree to that amendment?

Mr. VEST. I will attend to that, Mr. President. I am not consulting the Senator from Massachusetts just now.

The attention of the committee has been called to the fact that there is a peculiar sort of savings bank in the State of Delaware run by the Quakers, in which the incorporators are not members and receive no profit or salary, where the interest is paid only to the depositors. The Senators from that State are afraid that the bill as now constructed, or amended, does not cover that case. We do not want to put any tax upon these mutual savings institutions, and I therefore offer an amendment to make the matter clear beyond any question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Amend by adding after line 19 of the amendment proposed by Mr. VEST:

Sixth. Nor to such savings banks, savings institutions, or societies composed of members who do not participate in the profits thereof, and which pay interest or dividends only to their depositors.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the phraseology which is in the beginning of section 59. I believe as now amended the provision in the third line of the section is the profits or income above actual operating and business expenses. I do not propose to offer any amendment to that phraseology at this time, but I should be glad to know from the Senator from Missouri whether that phraseology will include, say, in the case of a manufacturing corporation, the materials purchased in conducting the management, and in the case of a trading corporation, whether it will include the articles purchased for resale.

Unless the words inserted by the Senator will embrace raw materials purchased by manufacturers, and will embrace purchases made by trading corporations, it seems to me there should be some further phraseology added which will exclude from the income or profits the purchases made by manufacturers in their manufacture and the purchases made by trading corporations in their business. I should be glad to have the Senator state his understanding of what the word "expenses" as added there will include.

Mr. VEST. I was under the impression that the word "operating" would cover such expenses as the Senator from Iowa has alluded to. I do not see how a manufacturing establishment could be operated unless it bought its raw materials, or how a business corporation could be run unless it bought goods which it resold. But out of an abundance of caution the word "business" was added, which seems to me would clearly cover all the legitimate expenses attending the business. I understood from the Senator from Iowa, for we consulted about the matter, that that language was sufficient.

Mr. ALLISON. I am afraid, after looking into it carefully, that it will not be quite sufficient. The term "operating expenses" is applied to transportation companies more especially. I offered a proviso to another amendment a while ago, which, without taking up time, I should be glad to have read. The proviso I offered would make it clear, and I should be glad to have the Senator from Missouri listen to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That expenditures for materials or articles purchased for use in manufacture or for resale, and for insurance, taxes, and other incidental expenses, paid by any manufacturing or trading corporation, company, or association, shall be considered as operating and business expenses in estimating the profits or income of any such corporation, company, or association.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit that to the Senator so as to make it absolutely clear.

Mr. VEST. I do not think there is any doubt about it.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator thinks that those words are implied in the words "operating and business expenses," I shall not offer the amendment.

Mr. VEST. I think so, unquestionably.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 62. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all salaries of officers, or payments for services to persons in the civil, military, naval, or other employment or service of the United States, including Senators and Representatives and Delegates in Congress, when exceeding the rate of $4,000 per annum, a tax of 2 per cent on the excess above the said $4,000; and it shall be the duty of all paymasters and all disbursing officers under the Government of the United States, or persons in the employ thereof, when making any payment to any officers or persons as aforesaid, whose compensation is determined by a fixed salary, or upon settling or adjusting the accounts of such officers or persons, to deduct and withhold the aforesaid tax of 2 per cent; and the pay roll, receipts, or account of officers or persons paying such tax as aforesaid shall be made to exhibit the fact of such payment. And it shall be the duty of the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, when auditing the accounts of any paymaster or disbursing officer, or any officer withholding his salary from moneys received by him, or when settling or adjusting the accounts of any such officer, to require evidence that the taxes mentioned in this section have been deducted and paid over to the Treasurer of the United States, or other officer authorized to receive the same. Every corporation which pays to any employé a salary or compensation exceeding $4,000 per annum shall report the same to the deputy collector of his district and pay the tax hereinbefore provided to the deputy collector of his district, and such payment shall be charged against the amount due such employé. And the same rules and penalties prescribed for the individual making his own return shall apply to such corporation employé: Provided, That payments of prize money shall be regarded as income from salaries, and the tax thereon shall be adjusted and collected in like manner: And provided further, That in case it should become necessary for showing the true receipts of the Government under the operations of this section upon the books of the Treasury Department, the requisite amount may be carried from unappropriated moneys in the Treasury to the credit of said account.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to section 62, page 190, after the words "to the," in line 3, to insert "collector or"; in line 4, after the word "and," to strike out down to and including the word "account," in line 16, in the following words:

Pay the tax hereinbefore provided to the deputy collector of his district, and such payment shall be charged against the amount due such employé. And the same rules and penalties prescribed for the individual making his own return shall apply to such corporation employé: Provided, That payments of prize money shall be regarded as income from salaries, and the tax thereon shall be adjusted and collected in like manner: And provided further, That in case it should become necessary for showing the true receipts of the Government under the operations of this section upon the books of the Treasury Department, the requisite amount may be carried from unappropriated moneys in the Treasury to the credit of said account.

Said employé shall pay thereon, subject to the exemptions herein provided for, the tax of 2 per cent on the excess of his salary over $4,000: Provided, That salaries due to State, county, or municipal officers shall be exempt from the income tax herein levied.

So as to read:

Every corporation which pays to any employé a salary or compensation exceeding $4,000 per annum shall report the same to the collector or deputy collector of his district, and said employé shall pay thereon, subject to the exemptions herein provided for, the tax of 2 per cent on the excess of his salary over $4,000: Provided, That salaries due to State, county, or municipal officers shall be exempt from the income tax herein levied.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was called from the Chamber a few minutes ago and was not aware that section 59 had been disposed of. I desire to offer an amendment to that section, which I hope the Senator from Missouri will allow me to offer now, as I do not intend to discuss it at all, but simply wish to point out what I think is a defect in the language. I wish to move to strike out, on page 188, the matter contained in line 12 to line 17, inclusive.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 59, page 188, strike out:

The net profits or income of all corporations, companies, or associations shall include the amounts paid to shareholders and bondholders or holders of certificates of indebtedness of any kind, or carried to the account of any fund, or used for construction, enlargement of plant, or any other expenditure or investment representing the net annual profits made or acquired by said corporations, companies, or associations.

Mr. ALDRICH. The reason why I desire to have this action taken is because I think the question of net profits and income is sufficiently covered by the language which has been used by the committee in the preceding part of this section. If it is allowed to stay in the form in which it now is, after having been amended by the committee, it will certainly be liable to misconstruction. The language used, the Senator from Missouri will notice, is:

The net profits or income of all corporations, * * * shall include the amounts * * * used for construction, enlargement of plant, or any other expenditure or investment representing the net annual profits made or acquired by said corporations.

Now, the expense of the construction of the plant can not represent the actual profits of a corporation in any sense, and other expenditures can not represent the annual profits of a corporation. One is an income, the other is an expenditure. A manufacturing company might expend a half million dollars for the construction of a new mill. Under the provisions of this paragraph as it stands it will be required to pay 2 per cent upon it, although it might be built with new capital.

It seems to me that the language used by the committee in the first part of the section, defining what are net profits and what is the net income of a corporation, sufficiently guards the Government in the collection of these taxes. Certainly if the language I have pointed out is allowed to remain in the bill it will give rise, according to my notion, to a great amount of litigation; and it must be nugatory, as no court would ever hold that money used for construction or for enlargement of plant is necessarily a part of the net profits of a corporation.

Mr. VEST. It seems to me the Senator from Rhode Island is mistaken in regard to his contention. Suppose that a corporation, after paying all its operating and business expenses and what is due to its shareholders, invests its surplus over and above these amounts in the improvement of its plant, or carries it to a surplus fund, or uses any of the various modes which corporations employ for the purpose of entering upon their books the amount of net profits, ought not that to be included and taxed? As I understand the view of the Senator from Rhode Island, it is that nothing except money should be taxed; that as soon as they make their profit and change the form of it, then it is not subject to taxation. Our object was to make it subject to taxation and to put it beyond any doubt.

Mr. ALDRICH. Any construction which was paid for from net earnings should undoubtedly be taxed, but this section does not provide that construction from net earnings shall be taxed. It says all amounts used for construction.

Mr. VEST. It does so provide, if the Senator will read it as carefully as he has assumed to read it:

Or used for construction, enlargement of plant, or any other expenditure or investment representing the net annual profits.

Mr. ALDRICH. But all those are in the alternative.

Mr. VEST. Of course they are in the alternative.

Mr. ALDRICH. The word "or" is used in every case. It is money used for the construction or enlargement of plant, or any other expenditure or investment. Those are alternative propositions.

Mr. VEST. Of course it is in the alternative, and it ought to be that way.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not see how the Senator can say that, because the construction of plant, unless it was paid from the net profits, certainly should not be taxed.

Mr. VEST. It is paid from the net profits, for it represents the net profits.

Mr. ALDRICH. If it were paid from net profits I should not object to it.

Mr. VEST. That is the meaning of it, unquestionably. It can not be any plainer. Here is the language, and it seems to me it is past all argument:

The net profits or income of all corporations, companies, or associations shall include the amount paid to shareholders and——

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Missouri will consent to have the word "representing" in the sixteenth line changed to "paid from," it will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to that; but if the Senator will permit me to go on, he will see, as everyone else does, that there can be but one construction given to it.

In the first place it says, "the amounts paid to shareholders." There can not be any doubt about that. Then it says, "or carried to the account of any fund, or used for construction, enlargement of plant, or any other expenditure or investment representing the net annual profits." Now, as a matter of course it can not represent the profits unless it comes out of them.

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall be perfectly content if the Senator will insert the words "paid from."

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to saying "paid from."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 59, page 188, line 16, strike out "representing" and insert "paid from."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the committee in section 62, which has been read.

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to propose an amendment to the committee amendment. On page 190, line 19, section 62, after the word "dollars," I move to strike out the proviso.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the committee amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 62, page 190, line 19, after the word "dollars," strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That salaries due to State, county, or municipal officers shall be exempt from the income tax herein levied.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HILL. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to an omission to allow the corporations to deduct State, county, or municipal taxes. Ought not that to be done?

Mr. VEST. If there is any doubt in regard to the meaning of the words "business expenses and operating expenses" I have no objection to such an amendment. My idea was that it would be absolutely necessary for them in order to operate to pay their taxes, because that is a first lien upon them——

Mr. HILL. Hardly a first lien.

Mr. ALLISON. I included taxes and insurance, etc., in the amendment which I offered as a new proviso. If you include taxes you should also include insurance, unless you rely wholly on the phrase "business expenses" to cover all these.

Mr. VEST. I supposed it was covered by that phrase.

Mr. ALLISON. You ought to insert more than simply taxes.

Mr. HILL. I should very much doubt, allow me to suggest, whether operating and business expenses would include insurance paid, and yet it might. I think it ought to be made explicit. I merely suggest the point to the Senator from Missouri. It seems to be intended that insurance should be included as a part of the expenses, and that State, county, municipal, or town taxes should also be inserted. He can frame it in his own way.

Mr. CHANDLER. The provision exists as to individuals at the bottom of page 172.

Mr. HILL. Individuals, of course, are allowed to deduct their taxes.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly it ought to be expressed as to corporations. Otherwise the expression in one place will be construed to be an exclusion in the other place.

Mr. PLATT. I do not propose at this time to submit any amendment to section 62, but I desire to call the attention of the committee to what seems to me to be an inconsistency. Perhaps before the bill comes to the Senate this matter may be considered by the committee. I should like to have the attention of the committee or some member of the committee.

Mr. VEST. I am listening to the Senator.

Mr. PLATT. I do not wish to propose any amendment to section 62 now, but I want to state what seems to me to be an inconsistency. In section 54 all gains and income of everybody, derived from any kind of property, rents, dividends, or salaries, or from any profession, trade, employment, or vocation carried on in the United States or elsewhere, or from any other source whatever, are subject to the tax. Now, when we come to section 62 it provides that as to the salaries of Government officers or officials, including Senators and Representatives, the tax of 2 per cent shall be taken out by the Government. Where the individual renders an account he gets certain deductions for interest and other things which he pays during the year, but apparently there are no deductions to be made from $4,000 of salary derived from the Government. All the income above $4,000 is to be taxed.

Now, take the case of a Senator. I think the exemption is altogether too great, but suppose a Senator has simply an income of $5,000 and has payments to make in the way of interest. He must pay the tax on $1,000, or the Government is to deduct it on the $1,000 of his salary exceeding $4,000, and he can get no deduction as an individual.

Mr. ALLISON. He may have a tax on his home, if he owns one.

Mr. PLATT. There may be taxes on his homestead, or, if he has a house, which brings him no rent and there is a mortgage upon it, the individual may deduct the interest. The point is that a Government official, under section 62, can get no deduction whatever for any of the matters which are specified in section 55.

Then, when it comes to salaries of persons employed by corporations, they seem to be treated differently. The corporation must report the amount of salary to the collector, and then the employé must pay tax thereon subject to the exemptions as herein provided for. So in such salaries the persons receiving them get the exemption, and in the case of Government salaries there is no exemption allowed. I simply call attention to it now, so that it may be considered before the bill comes into the Senate.

Mr. VEST. This is a copy of the old law of 1864. The only change we made was in regard to the payment of the tax by employés of corporations. We put them upon the same footing with other individuals. If the Senator asks me why these exemptions are not applied to members of Congress and United States officers, I can only answer him that I suppose it was done in the old law and the House of Representatives followed it because of the certainty of the payment, the honor attached to the position, and the difficulty of finding a way in which to fix the exemption. The Government officer who collects the tax would have to make the exemption or else rely upon the statement made by the party who paid the tax.

Mr. PLATT. Of course, there is no difficulty in finding the Government official and compelling him to render his own income account. Everybody who receives a salary from the Government would be known, and if that person were treated like everybody else, obliged to include the salary in his income account, there could be no question that the income tax would be paid. I am not particular about it, however.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee to section 62.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 63. That sections 3167, 3172, 3173, and 3176 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended are hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3167. That if any collector or deputy collector, or other officer or internal-revenue agent acting under the authority of any revenue law of the United States, divulges to any party, or makes known in any other manner than may be provided by law, the operations, style of work, or apparatus of any manufacturer or producer visited by him in the discharge of his official duties, or the amount or source of income, profits, losses, expenditures, or any information obtained by him in the discharge of such duties, he shall be subject to a fine of not exceeding $1,000, or to be imprisoned for not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court, or shall be dismissed from office and be forever thereafter incapable of holding any office under the Government."

"SEC. 3172. That every collector shall, from time to time, cause his deputies to proceed through every part of his district and inquire after and concerning all persons therein who are liable to pay any internal-revenue tax, and all persons owning or having the care and management of any objects liable to pay any tax, and to make a list of such persons and enumerate said objects.

"SEC. 3173. That it shall be the duty of any person, partnership, firm, association, or corporation, made liable to any duty, special tax, or other tax imposed by law, when not otherwise provided for, in case of a special tax, on or before the 31st day of July in each year, in case of income tax on or before the 1st day of March in each year, and in other cases before the day on which the taxes accrue, to make a list or return, verified by oath or affirmation, to the deputy collector of the district where located, of the articles or objects, including the amount of annual income, charged with a duty or tax, the quantity of goods, wares, and merchandise made or sold, and charged with a tax, the several rates and aggregate amount, according to the forms and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, for which such person, partnership, firm, association, or corporation is liable: Provided, That if any person liable to pay any duty or tax, or owing, possessing, or having the care or management of property, goods, wares, and merchandise, articles or objects liable to pay any duty, tax, or license, shall fail to make and exhibit a list or return required by law, but shall consent to disclose the particulars of any and all the property, goods, wares, and merchandise, articles and objects liable to pay any duty or tax, or any business or occupation liable to pay any tax as aforesaid, then, and in that case, it shall be the duty of the deputy collector to make such list or return, which, being distinctly read, consented to, and signed and verified by oath or affirmation by the person so owning, possessing, or having the care and management as aforesaid, may be received as the list of such person: Provided further, That in case no annual list or return has been rendered by such person to the deputy collector as required by law, and the person shall be absent from his or her residence or place of business at the time a deputy collector shall call for the annual list or return, it shall be the duty of such deputy collector to leave at such place of residence or business, with some one of suitable age and discretion, if such be present, otherwise to deposit in the nearest post-office a note or memorandum addressed to such person, requiring him or her to render to such deputy collector the list or return required by law, within ten days from the date of such note or memorandum, verified by oath or affirmation. And if any person on being notified or required as aforesaid shall refuse or neglect to render such list or return within the time required as aforesaid or whenever any person who is required to deliver a monthly or other return of objects subject to tax fails to do so at the time required, or delivers any return which, in the opinion of the collector, is false or fraudulent, or contains any undervaluation or understatement, it shall be lawful for the collector to summon such person, or any other person having possession, custody, or care of books of account containing entries relating to the business of such person, or any other person he may deem proper, to appear before him and produce such books, at a time and place named in the summons, and to give testimony or answer interrogatories, under oath, respecting any objects liable to tax or the returns thereof. The collector may summon any person residing or found within the State in which his district lies; and when the person intended to be summoned does not reside and can not be found within such State, he may enter any collection district where such person may be found, and there make the examination herein authorized. And to this end he may there exercise all the authority which he might lawfully exercise in the district for which he was commissioned.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 63, page 192, line 3, after the word "first," to strike out "day" and insert "Monday," and in line 5, before the word "deputy" to insert "collector or a;" so as to read:

SEC. 3173. That it shall be the duty of any person, partnership, firm, association, or corporation, made liable to any duty, special tax, or other tax imposed by law, when not otherwise provided for, in case of a special tax, on or before the 31st day of July in each year, in case of income tax on or before the first Monday of March in each year, and in other cases before the day on which the taxes accrue, to make a list or return, verified by oath or affirmation, to the collector or a deputy collector of the district where located.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 63, page 192, line 23, before the word "deputy," to insert "collector or;" on page 193, line 4, before the word "deputy," to insert "collector or;" in line 6, after the word "time," to insert "the collector or;" in line 12, before the word "deputy," to insert "collector or;" so as to read:

It shall be the duty of the collector or deputy collector to make such list or return, which, being distinctly read, consented to, and signed and verified by oath or affirmation by the person so owning, possessing, or having the care and management as aforesaid, may be received as the list of such person: Provided further, That in case no annual list or return has been rendered by such person to the collector or deputy collector as required by law, and the person shall be absent from his or her residence or place of business at the time the collector or a deputy collector shall call for the annual list or return, it shall be the duty of such collector or deputy collector to leave at such place of residence or business, with someone of suitable age and discretion, if such be present, otherwise to deposit in the nearest post-office a note or memorandum addressed to such person, requiring him or her to render to such collector or deputy collector the list or return required by law, within ten days from the date of such note or memorandum, verified by oath or affirmation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not see really why it is necessary to reënact section 3173. I take it that that section would apply to the income tax without inserting the word "income" where it occurs on page 192. This section is one which was incorporated in the law of 1864 at a time when a manufacturers' tax, so called, and a transportation tax, or a tax upon gross earnings was imposed, and every provision relates really to taxes which were then in force and have been since repealed. I see no real objection to it, although it seems to me to be rather awkward to carry into the proposed law a long section which applies to lists and returns for manufacturers and transportation companies respecting matters which are not at all embodied in the proposed act, though I make no point in respect to it.

Mr. GRAY. The income tax is only incidental.

Mr. ALLISON. The income tax is merely inserted as an incidental matter. It has the appearance of making a rigid statute here respecting a matter which requires nothing of the kind.

Mr. VEST. It is absolutely necessary to change some of the dates. If the Senator will look at line 3, page 192, he will see that the date there in regard to the income tax had to be inserted, the 1st day of March. We could not allow the old statute to stand unless we made a new enactment. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue suggested this, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and we thought it was the easiest and best way to put the whole law together.

Mr. ALLISON. The criticism I make is that we are carrying into a new law an old statute which was made for an entirely different purpose, and which was intended to cover a manufacturers' tax. On page 192 the following language appears:

On or before the 31st day of July in each year, in case of income tax on or before the first Monday of March in each year, and in other cases before the day on which the taxes accrue, to make a list or return, etc.

Then it goes on, and in line 6 says:

Of the articles or objects, including the amount of annual income—

There is the second place where "income" is inserted—charged with a duty or tax, the quantity of goods, wares, and merchandise made or sold, and charged with a tax.

Mr. VEST. It can not possibly do any harm.

Mr. ALLISON. My point is that by implication it may seem that as we impose here an income tax, a deputy collector or a collector can go to a merchant or to a small corporation, if you please, and insist upon an exposé of all the goods, wares, and merchandise sold. In other words, this long section is applicable to an entirely different measure. In the old law the income tax provided for itself, and I think a short section covering this matter would be immensely better than to reënact the whole section. With due deference to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, if he made this suggestion, I think it was as a way to avoid a short, brief section covering the point intended. I do not propose to move any amendment, but I think it is exceedingly awkward to be reinserting this whole section in the proposed law, especially when there are a large number of sections of the Revised Statutes which are applicable to the income tax that are not inserted here at all.

Mr. VEST. It can not possibly do any harm.

Mr. ALLISON. My attention is called by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] to the following language:

That if any person liable to pay any duty or tax, or owning, possessing, or having the care or management of property, goods, wares, and merchandise, articles or objects liable to pay any duty, tax, or license, shall fail to make and exhibit a list or return required by law, but shall consent to disclose the particulars of any and all the property, goods, wares, and merchandise.

In other words, this is a long and complicated section, which it seems to me ought to be eliminated from the bill and some short, brief section inserted which would cover the question of income. That is the criticism I make upon it. I think it is misleading, because there is not a thing in it which is applicable to income except the date. I make no point upon it, however.

Mr. VEST. Let the reading of the bill be proceeded with.

The Secretary continued the reading of section 63, as follows:

SEC. 3176. That the collector or any deputy collector in every district shall enter into and upon the premises, if it be necessary, of every person therein who has taxable property and who refuses or neglects to render any return or list required by law, or who renders a false or fraudulent return or list, and make, according to the best information which he can obtain, including that derived from the evidence elicited by the examination of the collector, and on his own view and information, such list or return, according to the form prescribed, of the income, property, and objects liable to tax owned or possessed or under the care or management of such person, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall assess the tax thereon, including the amount, if any, due for special income or other tax, and in case of any return of a false or fraudulent list or valuation intentionally, he shall add 100 per cent to such tax; and in case of a refusal or neglect, except in cases of sickness or absence, to make a list or return, or to verify the same as aforesaid, he shall add 50 per cent to such tax. In case of neglect occasioned by sickness or absence as aforesaid the collector may allow such further time for making and delivering such list or return as he may deem necessary, not exceeding thirty days. The amount so added to the tax shall be collected at the same time and in the same manner as the tax unless the neglect or falsity is discovered after the tax has been paid, in which case the amount so added shall be collected in the same manner as the tax; and the list or return so made and subscribed by such collector or deputy collector shall be held good and sufficient for all legal purposes.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 194, after the figures "3176," in line 10, to strike out down to and including the word "who," in line 13, in the following words:

That the collector or any deputy collector in every district shall enter into and upon the premises, if it be necessary, of every person therein who has taxable property and who—

And to insert—

When any person, corporation, company, or association.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 63, page 194, line 15, after the word "or," to strike out "who;" in line 17, strike out the word "and" and insert "the collector or any deputy collector shall;" in line 24, after the word "person," to insert "or corporation, company, or association;" in line 26, after the word "assess," to strike out "the tax thereon" and insert "all taxes not paid by stamps;" on page 195, line 1, after the word "special," insert "tax;" and in line 17, before the word "good," to insert "prima facie;" so as to make the paragraph read:

"SEC. 3176. When any person, corporation, company, or association refuses or neglects to render any return or list required by law, or renders a false or fraudulent return or list, the collector or any deputy collector shall make, according to the best information which he can obtain, including that derived from the evidence elicited by the examination of the collector, and on his own view and information, such list or return, according to the form prescribed, of the income, property, and objects liable to tax owned or possessed or under the care or management of such person, or corporation, company, or association, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall assess all taxes not paid by stamps, including the amount, if any, due for special tax, income or other tax, and in case of any return of a false or fraudulent list or valuation intentionally he shall add 100 per cent to such tax; and in case of a refusal or neglect, except in cases of sickness or absence, to make a list or return, or to verify the same as aforesaid, he shall add 50 per cent to such tax. In case of neglect occasioned by sickness or absence as aforesaid, the collector may allow such further time for making and delivering such list or return as he may deem necessary, not exceeding thirty days. The amount so added to the tax shall be collected at the same time and in the same manner as the tax unless the neglect or falsity is discovered after the tax has been paid, in which case the amount so added shall be collected in the same manner as the tax; and the list or return so made and subscribed by such collector or deputy collector shall be held prima facie good and sufficient for all legal purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to section 3176, which makes certain penalties applicable to the income tax. This has been taken bodily from an old statute relating to distilled spirits. On the top of page 176 there are penalties provided for.

To make such list, according to the best information he can obtain, by the examination of such person, or any other evidence, and to add 50 per cent as a penalty to the amount of the tax due on such list in all cases of willful neglect or refusal to make and render a list or return; and in all cases of a willfully false or fraudulent list or return having been rendered to add 100 per cent as a penalty to the amount of tax ascertained to be due, etc.

There is a penalty provided. The provision in section 3176 provides for an addition.

In case of any return of a false or fraudulent list or valuation intentionally, he shall add 100 per cent to such tax; and in case of a refusal or neglect, except in cases of sickness or absence, to make a list or return, or to verify the same as aforesaid, he shall add 50 per cent to such tax.

There is a duplication of these penalties in the proposed law. This section applied to distilled spirits originally. One of the amendments just agreed to provides that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall assess all taxes not paid by stamps, and that makes section 3176 exclude the distillers, it seems to me. I have not had time to examine it, but section 3176 applied to taxes chiefly upon distilled spirits. Now, there is excluded from this the taxes where they are paid by stamps. I do not see why this section of the Revised Statutes should be carried in here and create confusion as respects sections of the Revised Statutes which now apply and have applied for many years only to taxes upon distilled spirits and tobacco.

I only call attention to it. I have no amendment to offer. It is certainly, however, a most confusing procedure to insert anew these provisions of the Revised Statutes merely for the purpose of including the income and making necessary the amendments which the committee have already added by excluding in the section taxes collected from distilled spirits.

Mr. VEST. The words "all taxes not paid by stamps" form an amendment sent to us by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue which he thought absolutely necessary.

Now, in regard to the provision of section 56, page 174, that refers to a specific case. It refers to the persons who have an income over $3,500 and not $4,000. It was the doubtful and debatable ground between $3,500 and $4,000 which it was deemed necessary to cover by that provision, and the penalties which are prescribed there, all the enactments in that section, apply to that state of case. Section 3176 is a different state of case; it is in regard to other false and fraudulent returns.

Mr. ALLISON. I can not turn my hand to the provision, but the Senator will remember that he changed this morning one provision from 10 per cent a month to 2 per cent a month.

Mr. VEST. Yes; but that is different.

Mr. ALLISON. The provisions respecting penalties run through, and now we have an omnium gatherum provision, 50 per cent in one case and 100 per cent in another.

Mr. VEST. Of course, if it applies to the same thing it ought to be changed, but I do not think it does, because it specifies the case where it applies; that is, where a party has $3,500 income and not $4,000. The penalty is provided specifically as to that case, but I do not think that conflicts with the provision in section 3176. We can examine it, however, and if the criticism is correct it can be changed. I confess very frankly that these provisions were adopted by the House of Representatives and revised by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. A good deal of it does not apply to the income tax, as the Senator from Iowa says. I deferred largely to the opinion of the Treasury Department, as they are not original propositions, but come from existing statutes.

Mr. ALLISON. I make no complaint of the committee, but I merely call attention to the fact that here are modifications of existing statutes making them apply to the income tax, and leaving out a number of sections of the Revised Statutes which are absolutely necessary to the enforcement of the income tax and which are not included here at all.

Mr. VEST. I shall take great pleasure in going over the matter with the Senator from Iowa, and if there is any such discrepancy as he claims we can correct it without any trouble.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I offer no amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 64. That every corporation doing business for profit shall make and render to the collector of its collection district, on or before the 10th day of the month after that in which any dividends or shares of profit, annuities, interest, or coupons become due and payable, a full return thereof, containing a true and faithful account of the amount so due or payable and of the amount of the tax thereon; and to such return there shall be annexed a declaration of the president, treasurer, cashier, or other principal officer of such corporation, under oath or affirmation, to the effect that the same contains a true and faithful account of all the amounts so due or payable and of the tax thereon, as aforesaid, such return and declaration thereto annexed to be made in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out section 64.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 65. That every corporation doing business for profit shall make and render to the collector of its collection district, on or before the first Monday of February in every year, beginning with the year 1895, a full return, verified by oath or affirmation, as provided in the last section, in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, of all the following matters for the whole calendar year last preceding the date of such return:

First. The gross profits of such corporation, from all kinds of business of every name and nature.

Second. The expenses of such corporation, exclusive of interest, annuities, and dividends.

Third. The net profits of such corporation, without allowance for interest, annuities, or dividends.

Fourth. The amount paid on account of interest, annuities, and dividends, stated separately.

Fifth. The amount paid in salaries of $4,000 or less to each person employed.

Sixth. The amount paid in salaries of more than $4,000 to each person employed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was in section 65, page 196, after the word "corporation," in line 6, to insert "company, and association;" in line 12, after the words "Monday of," strike out "February" and insert "March;" and in line 15, before the words "in such form," to strike out "as provided in the last section;" so as to read:

SEC. 65. That every corporation, company, and association doing business for profit shall make and render to the collector of its collection district on or before the first Monday of March in every year, beginning with the year 1895, a full return, verified by oath or affirmation, in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was in section 65, page 196, line 19, after the word "corporation," to insert "company, and association;" in line 22, after the word "corporation," to insert "company, and association;" in line 25, after the word "corporation," to insert "company, and association;" so as to read:

First. The gross profits of such corporation, company, and association from all kinds of business of every name and nature.

Second. The expenses of such corporation, company, and association, exclusive of interest, annuities, and dividends.

Third. The net profits of such corporation, company, and association, without allowance for interest, annuities, or dividends.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was in section 65, page 197, line 8, after the word "employed" to insert, "and the name and address of each of such persons and the amount paid to each;" so as to read:

Sixth. The amount paid in salaries of more than $4,000 to each person employed, and the name and address of each of such persons and the amount paid to each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator that where the words "company and association" are inserted it should be "company or association." I think "and" must be a mistake. It reads "such corporation, company, and association." I merely make the suggestion. It seems to me it would be better to insert "or" than "and."

Mr. VEST. Let "or" be inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be agreed to, in the absence of objection.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Missouri, in charge of this bill, will not insist upon the amendment proposed in the sixth clause of section 65, requiring corporations to furnish "the name and address of each of such persons and the amount paid to each."

I think that would create confusion and is wholly unnecessary in a statute of this kind. I do not desire to argue it at all, but I do not think there is any great necessity for that provision, and I should be glad if the Senator in charge of the bill would consent to strike out the entire section.

It has never been in any bill of this character of which I am aware at any time. It imposes upon small and large corporations an amount of work which I do not believe will be beneficial in any way to the Government. It requires that these statements shall be made to the collector of internal revenue in each collection district. There will be piled up statements, and the provision does not state what the collector of internal revenue shall do with them, but I suppose they are to be transmitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. HILL. Let me suggest to the Senator, are they not the statements from which the collector is to ascertain the amount of the tax?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not understand them to be so. The corporations have to render an account of their incomes, but such a provision as this has never been in any preceding act.

Mr. HILL. I suppose that these are the statements from which the collector is to find out the amount of the tax to be paid.

Mr. ALLISON. No; but such statements are made by railroad companies to the Interstate Commerce Commission, so that it would not be difficult for railroad companies to furnish this information, and I am told that they have already crowded the small space of the Interstate Commerce Commission with these statements.

If such statements are to be made annually to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, unless we get our building for the collection and storage of documents constructed soon, there will not be room enough in any of the public buildings to contain all the statements required. I see no necessity for having them, but I shall not move to strike out that provision. I should be glad to know why all this detail is required to be furnished to the collector?

Mr. VEST. It seems to me that it is evident why this provision is put in the bill. It came from the House of Representatives in this form, and is one of the most necessary portions of the enactment. It is like all excise laws; it is stringent and harsh, but it is absolutely necessary that these provisions should be inserted here. Every facility should be given to the Government and to the Government officials to find out what is the actual condition of a corporation so as to collect what is due upon the profits.

I submit that it is no hardship upon a corporation that is doing a legitimate business to furnish these statements. Individuals are made to expose what their income is, and they are put under penalty unless they do it truthfully and correctly, and why should a corporation object to this? It is not made public.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. It is all right, perhaps, under the idea the Senator has, to require that corporations should return to the collector "the amount paid in salaries of more than $4,000 to each person employed and the name and address of each of such persons and the amount paid to each," to help them discover whether that is added to taxable incomes; but why should a corporation be required, as in the fifth clause, to return "the amount paid in salaries of $4,000 or less to each person employed"?

That would include in any great corporation like the Baltimore and Ohio, the Pennsylvania, or the New York Central Railroad Company every track laborer and every man who receives a monthly stipend, and the corporation would have to return this. It would accomplish no good whatever, as it seems to me. What good would it do to have statements of the amount paid in wages to ten or twenty or forty thousand laborers who work for thirty or forty dollars a month piled up in the archives of the revenue collector's office?

Mr. VEST. That is a pertinent illustration of the Senator's side of the question. Now, take the other side. Here are employés of these corporations who get three thousand, or three thousand five hundred dollars a year. Why not return them in order that the Government officers may see whether that salary is added to the other income so as to make over $4,000.

Besides that, these corporations publish a list of their employés, the number of men that they have upon their pay rolls, and I saw one the other day of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company.

Mr. GRAY. That may be, but just think of piling up in the revenue collector's office ten or twenty thousand names of track laborers, men who receive thirty or forty dollars a month. Why not make a limit and say, "of $2,000"?

Mr. VEST. For the very reason that a person might be receiving $2,000 or $2,500 from other sources, which, added to the salary, would make up $4,000 income.

Mr. GRAY. Why not, then, require the Senator to return the wages of every household servant he has in order to ascertain whether that stipend, with other sources of income, might not be equal to $4,000? That would be just as likely as it would be in the case of the track laborer.

Mr. VEST. The Senator does not get any exemption. He pays without any exemption.

Mr. GRAY. No; but why not require the return of the domestics in the Senator's house and what wages he pays them, in order that the tax collector may find out whether that payment, with other sources of revenue, may bring the amount up to a taxable income, which is just as likely in such a case as it would be in the case of the track laborer?

Mr. VEST. Every individual makes his statement in regard to the amount of his income, and if the officer believes it false or fraudulent he can take steps under this bill to find out what is the real truth. If there were any way we could facilitate the operations of this law on the part of the officials, without being entirely too inquisitorial, I should be in favor of it, because when we get into a matter of this kind we want it to be effective and to get at the real state of facts in the case. All these corporations keep their books, and it will not be a great hardship to them to make an exposure of their business, if it is legitimate.

Mr. GRAY. It is not exposing their business, but the business of ten, twenty, or thirty thousand poor men, who are laboring for a small stipend, and who it can not be supposed would, with their small wages, have other sources of income amounting in all to $4,000.

Mr. VEST. I do not see how they could object to that. I do not see how it would lacerate their feelings in that regard. It is merely a question of manual labor on the part of these corporations. As to the piling up of these documents, I take it the officers of the Government will find room enough for them.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that provision has already been made in section 59 for these returns, and a penalty imposed if the chief officer of the corporation does not make them. The entire administration of this law is under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may make; and it is to be supposed that he will make such rules and regulations as will secure honest and correct returns.

So that, aside from what I regard as unnecessary, here we lay down certain things which must be furnished. That is always an unwise thing to do in a statute. Where we give to the administrative authority, like the Secretary of the Treasury, the power to make rules and regulations and then make these rules and regulations part of the statute, as we do here, why shall we insist that whatever else is done, these six things must be done? I think the entire provision is wholly unnecessary.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, recurring to what was said by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], in looking at the bill I find that, according to its language, it is simply required that these corporations shall give the amount paid in salaries, and it is not necessary for them to give their pay rolls or the names of employés. It is "the amount paid in salaries of $4,000 or less to each person employed." The fourth clause provides that the companies shall return "the amount paid on account of interest, annuities, and dividends, stated separately." The sixth clause says:

The amount paid in salaries of more than $4,000 to each person employed, and the name and address of each of such persons, and the amount paid to each.

That is as to those receiving salaries of more than $4,000; but it does not apply to the others. So it does not go down to the laborers, the trackmen, etc.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator may be right as to that. I ask if the interpretation he puts upon the language, "the amount paid in salaries of $4,000 or less to each person employed," is that there is only to be given the amount paid in salaries in cases where the salary is $4,000?

Mr. VEST. Yes.

Mr. GRAY. If that be so, that obviates the objection I made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. What amendment is that, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 65, on page 197, line 8, after the word "employed," it is proposed to insert "and the name and address of each of such persons and the amount paid to each;" so as to read:

Sixth. The amount paid in salaries of more than $4,000 to each person employed, and the name and address of each of such persons and the amount paid to each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 66. That it shall be the duty of every corporation doing business for profit to keep full, regular, and accurate books of account, upon which all its transactions shall be entered from day to day, in regular order, which books shall, at all reasonable times, be open to the inspection of the assessors and inspectors appointed in pursuance of this act; but such inspection shall only be had for the purpose of verifying the returns made by such corporations, as in this act provided for.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend the section in line 11, after the word "corporation," by inserting "company, and association;" and in line 16, after the words "inspection of," to strike out "the assessors and inspectors appointed in pursuance of this act; but such inspection shall only be had for the purpose of verifying the returns made by such corporations, as in this act provided for," and insert, "any internal-revenue officer or agent;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 66. That it shall be the duty of every corporation, company, and association doing business for profit to keep full, regular, and accurate books of account, upon which all its transactions shall be entered from day to day, in regular order, which books shall, at all reasonable times, be open to the inspection of any internal-revenue officer or agent.

Mr. CHANDLER. I inquire of the Senators in charge of the bill whether they can possibly mean that all the books of every corporation in the United States shall be at all reasonable times—that means all reasonable hours during the day—open to inspection of any internal-revenue officer or agent?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is what the section says.

Mr. CHANDLER. That any man who can show a commission or appointment from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue——

Mr. VEST. In order to save time I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let me finish the sentence.

Mr. VEST. Anything now to get a vote.

Mr. ALLISON. What becomes of the part which is proposed to be stricken out?

Mr. VEST. I do not strike it out. I merely propose that there shall be stricken out "any internal-revenue officer or agent," the words printed in italics in line 20, and restore the words "the assessors and inspectors appointed in pursuance to this act; but such inspection shall only be had for the purpose of verifying the returns made by such corporations, as in this act provided for."

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to strike out the section.

Mr. HILL. I desire, first, to offer an amendment, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose that would be in order pending my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri has withdrawn the amendment and restored the words which were proposed to be stricken out, as he had a right to do.

Mr. HILL. I do not think that helps the bill very much.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] to move to strike out the entire section.

Mr. HILL. Before that motion is put I desire to amend the section, which of course has precedence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. In line 16, I move to strike out the word "times" and insert the words "hours, between March 1 and August 1 in each year."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 66, line 16, after the word "reasonable," it is proposed to strike out "times," and insert "hours between March 1 and August 1, in each year;" so as to read:

Which books shall, at all reasonable hours, between March 1 and August 1 in each year, be open to the inspection of the assessors and inspectors, etc.

Mr. HILL. A word of explanation. I do not see any necessity for permitting a constant inspection and surveillance of the books of a corporation for the entire year. I do not know that the power would be abused, but it is a power likely to be abused. These taxes are to be imposed about the month of March. In the month of March the returns are to be made, and it is proper during that period that some authority should have access to the books. I am not certain that the internal-revenue officer or agent is not a better authority than the various assessors and inspectors appointed, these special men. I should prefer to have left this as it was originally before the amendment was proposed. Some officer might very properly examine the books of a corporation between the 1st of March and the 1st of August.

The reason I fix the 1st of August is, that by the 1st of July the taxes are to be paid, and during that month, while they are being paid, and possibly before the collector has ascertained the correctness of the returns, some officer should have the right to inspect the books of the corporation; bet there is no occasion for having the authority the year round, in my judgment. During the period when the taxes are assessed and are paid, I think there is a necessity for it; but I submit to the good sense of the Senator from Missouri whether an amendment would not be acceptable limiting it to five months in the year, from March to August, in which some official may have complete authority at all reasonable hours to examine the books of the corporation. For the remainder of the year it seems to me that corporations ought to be exempt from such inspection. The amendment makes the bill less inquisitorial, and it seems to me to perfect it.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] suggests to me that there ought to be some days in the year when one should be relieved from the inspection of the taxgatherer, State, Federal, county, or any other, and have a few days of peace. In that interest I appeal to the Senator from Missouri to allow the amendment to be adopted.

Mr. VEST. Except in excise laws such provisions could not be defended, I grant you; but this is an extraordinary enactment, and I can not see where there will be any great danger of any violation of private rights.

Of course these corporations keep their accounts anyhow, and it is not to be presumed that the officers of the Government would harass them from day to day or week to week. This law, I take it, will be honestly and fairly administered, and I do not think that public sentiment would permit such an administration of it as to inflict upon any citizen the outrages which seem to be anticipated. I do not think there is a great deal in the question; but I think the bill as it came to us from the House of Representatives is substantially correct.

Mr. ALLISON. This section is evidently taken from the law in reference to distilled spirits, and that relating to manufactures at a time when we taxed every person who produced anything, and therefore it was deemed a necessary thing to examine the books of those people to see what they were producing and whether they made correct returns.

To show the accuracy with which this section has been framed, I call attention to the fact that in line 17 it is stated that these books shall "be open to the inspection of the assessors and inspectors appointed in pursuance to this act."

We have had no assessors since 1870, and there is not a provision of law on our statute books which authorizes the appointment of such an officer as an assessor or an inspector. I do not know but that there are some persons who are called inspectors, who receive $3 or $4 a day. So this section has been taken bodily by someone from an old statute and applied to an entirely different use. Merely for the purpose of verifying the return of the income of a corporation of 2 per cent we are to have assessors, if the Senator withdraws his amendment. Assessors are officers who were provided for in the original act of 1862, but the office was abolished in 1870, and there are no such officers now.

Mr. VEST. The amendment of the committee, then, ought to have stood

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. I am only calling attention to the accuracy and care with which this provision has been proposed.

Now, merely for the purpose of getting 2 per cent and verifying the return of the corporation, an officer, without defining him—he may not be a responsible officer; I should not object to the local collector making this investigation, who would be a responsible officer in the neighborhood, or even a deputy collector—roving people, assessors and inspectors, who are unknown to the law, and who must be created if this provision stands, are to be allowed to go into the office of any business corporation and inspect their books and papers.

Not only that, but this section requires that corporations shall keep from day to day accurate books and enter in them the transactions of each day. That was applied heretofore to distilled spirits alone, and the manufacturer of distilled spirits was required to enter from day to day the amount of corn, or rye, or malt, in order to verify the amount of distilled spirits produced from day to day. That provision has been injected into this section from an old law, and assessors and inspectors are provided for.

I would be glad to have the whole section struck out; but if it is not, I think we ought to amend it by requiring the books to be kept in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may provide, in order that we may know that the books are accurate rom day to day.

Of course, in stating that the books ought to be under the surveillance of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, I only made the statement to show the absurdity of it. I do not see how it is possible to comply with this section, nor do I see any necessity for it. I hope the Senator from Missouri will consent, at least for the present, to have the words striken out which the committee proposed to strike out.

Mr. VEST. I move, beginning in line 16, section 66, on page 197, after the words "inspection of," to strike out the words "the assessors and inspectors appointed in pursuance to this act; but such inspection shall only be had for the purpose of verifying the returns made by such corporations, as in this act provided for," and insert "the collector of internal revenue or any deputy collector for the district in which said corporation, company, or association is located and doing business."

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, there are many provisions in the pending bill which should secure for it the emphatic condemnation of the American people; but there is no one paragraph or section in the entire measure which is so outrageous in its character as that now under consideration. There is no free people on the face of the earth who would submit to the indignities proposed to be imposed upon the free citizens of the United States by this paragraph. There is no government in existence, monarchical or other, that would ever dare to enact provisions of this nature controlling the business of its people. In no act which has passed the American Congress, or any other, has there been found any provision analogous to this.

This section proposes to open all the books of every corporation doing business in the United States to an unnumbered army of revenue agents. If places were offered for sale an applicant could afford to pay any amount of money to be selected for the position of making these examinations. The secrets of the business of every corporation in the United States are practically to be made known to competitors or made public by this provision. Nearly every corporation engaged in manufacturing has some secret method or formula which constitutes, perhaps, the great value of the business itself, and these are to be turned over to the tender mercies of poorly paid revenue agents.

If a man should happen to be elected President of the United States who was desirous of perpetuating his administration indefinitely, he could have no instrument so powerful as that which is placed in his hands by the terms of the section now under consideration. He could send his chosen agents into the countingroom of every corporation in the United States to examine the secret books and papers and to demand tribute or support.

It is true that another section forbids revenue agents to disclose business secrets, but that prohibition is valueless. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the Congress has no right to give to Government officers the right to seize and examine the private books and papers of a citizen of the United States except upon the order of some court of competent jurisdiction in some criminal proceeding. In the face of this decision, and in violation of the spirit of our Government, this provision is inserted in this bill.

You have provided in another part of the bill that if a person or corporation with a taxable income does not make a return to the collector of internal revenue, or to the proper officer of the Government, or makes a return that is not satisfactory to this officer, then the officer fixes the income, or the supposed income, of the person or corporation neglecting to make the return, and a penalty of 100 per cent is added to the tax thus assessed.

There is no reason, therefore, why the private accounts and books of all corporations and associations should be opened to an indefinite number of revenue agents which some irresponsible man in Washington may send on a roving commission throughout the country. Has it come to this, that he must not only submit to a war tax upon incomes but consent to the adoption of these odious inquisitorial provisions that should never be tolerated by any free people and which no free people have ever submitted to? The acts of 1862 and 1864, passed in the time of war, contained no provisions analogous to this. If it was not necessary in the time of our country's peril to submit the American people to these indignities, why in a time of peace are we called upon to vote for these provisions?

I should be glad if any Senator on the other side of the Chamber, belonging to a party which has always pretended to be in favor of maintaining intact the liberties of the American people, would arise in his place and defend this proposition if he can. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] expresses his dissent.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me to say a word?

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator from New York is not to respond to my suggestion.

Mr. HILL. I am not authorized to respond for this side of the Chamber; that is true. Perhaps I need not state that, as it is already evident. I was, however, simply going to suggest that the theory of the bill seems to be to extend to all sorts of business throughout the country provisions which heretofore have been confined to the whisky business. That is the theory of the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. But similar provisions have been applied to the whisky business only as to the amount and character of the materials used and what disposition was made of them. The books and private accounts of distillers or of wholesale liquor dealers have never been by any provision of law open to the inspection of officers of the Government, and never should be. It will damn any political party forever that is responsible for this legislation, and it ought to.

Mr. HOAR. I want to call the Senator's attention to a broad distinction of principle. The supervision of the business of distilling is the supervision of a business always regulated by law or prohibited by law in many cases. It is the condition upon which a man carries on his business, just as the regulations regarding the importations of merchandise. A man is at liberty to import merchandise or not, on condition of paying the duty according to law, and no government, as the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] says, ever undertook to say that its officers should have the right to enter the premises of individuals or corporations and seize their books and papers. It is a most odious, tyrannical, and unprecedented proposition.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I suppose there is no doubt that under the war taxes of 1862 and 1864 the Government officers were given the right to inspect the books of corporations and of individuals for the purpose of ascertaining whether their returns were correct or not; but I think history may be searched in vain for a legislative provision declaring that every corporation shall keep books in a particular manner. If the Senator from Missouri can point to any such provision I should like to see it.

Senators are to bear in mind that all these corporations are State corporations; that they are corporations created by the laws of the several States—the whole of them. There will not be one of them created by national law; and I call the especial attention of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], who is a State-rights man, to the proposition that here is a provision by which, without exception—it excepts no corporation which does business for profit, however large or however small—the National Government comes in and says that every corporation which does business for profit in the State of Delaware shall keep full, regular, and accurate books of account, upon which all its transactions shall be entered from day to day in regular order.

Did anyone ever before hear of a national law of that kind applicable to every corporation in every State of the Union? Senators on the other side, if they were in the frame of mind they ordinarily have been when the Republicans have been in power in this country, would denounce that clause as an infamous invasion of State rights. Here is a a provision requiring the keeping of books in a particular way, and that requirement is made a provision of national law, and is put upon every little State corporation, so that a Federal officer can march into into the office of that corporation and say: "Here, you are bound by this Federal law to keep your books in a particular way; I demand that you shall keep them in that way, so that if, forsooth, you may make a return of your income under this Federal law, we may look at the books in order to see whether your return is correct."

I say, Mr. President, although there has been a provision that books may be examined, there never was seen such a provision as this from the dawn of creation down to this hour.

Mr. HILL. The suggestion I was going to make was that under the terms of the pending bill, as it now stands, the income is to be collected for the year 1894, during six or seven months of which period there are to be no books of account whatever kept; and the Government expects to realize its full amount of revenue from these corporations from January last until the time that this proposed law goes into effect. The income is to be paid according to the terms of the bill, because it is retroactive, and of course the corporations can not keep books nunc pro tunc; they can not make these books up to order; and if they can properly collect revenue from the 1st of January last until this bill goes into operation, they can collect the revenue for the balance of the year without those books.

Mr. CHANDLER. What the Senator says is true, but it seems to me there is no penalty for not keeping the books. The bill simply says that it shall be the duty of the corporation to keep the books.

Mr. HILL. Is there not some general statute—I am not familiar enough with Federal law to know—that where a duty is imposed by a statute, a failure to perform that duty constitutes a crime?

Mr. CHANDLER. It may be so, but I have looked this wonderfully and fearfully made and amended document through within the last half hour, and I can not find any penalty for not keeping the books. But there it stands, a declaration of national law, applicable to every State corporation, and it is the most extraordinary provision I ever saw in any law.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, only a word. As is known—and if it is not known I wish it to go on record—I am opposed to the income-tax feature of this bill. I shall only vote for it because it is in this revenue bill, which includes very many provisions of which I do approve, and which I am anxious to see become the law. That is the only reason that will control my vote in favor of the income-tax provision of this bill.

It would have been better, I think, and fairer to all concerned, not to have put that sort of pressure upon those who are in favor of revenue reform, but have introduced this measure as a separate bill, and allowed it to be discussed upon its merits. I do not believe in this way of putting a "cinch," as they say out in the State of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], I believe, on a man when he is trying to perform honestly his public duty.

But, Mr. President, my intention to vote for the bill with this provision in it, if it is not voted out, can not compel me to vote for a measure so absolutely violative of the instincts of American freemen as, in my opinion, is this last section which has just been read.

Mr. President, if I understand the object of free governments at all, they were instituted to secure to the individual the greatest amount of liberty consistent with public safety and with the rights of his fellows, and all the burdens imposed by taxation, all the civic duties that come to a man as a member of society, are limited by the necessity for their performance and the necessity of enduring the burden imposed.

No tax is good for itself; no tax in a free government was ever imposed for the sake of imposing a tax; and yet here is a tax attached to this bill, accompanied with administrative features which seem to have no other reasonable purpose except to harass, annoy, irritate, and exasperate free American citizens, who live under the ægis and protection of our institutions, with the same guaranty of security that the poorest farmer on the Western plains has.

Mr. President, equality before the law is the absolute necessity, the safeguard of free institutions—equality for the rich as well as for the poor, equality for those who have enterprise and industry and thrift, as well as for those who possess none of these qualities.

I recollect that by one of the first amendments to the Constitution of the United States our fathers, imbued with the principles of individual liberty and the desire to protect the rights of the individual, incorporated in that sacred instrument a provision that the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures should not be violated.

It was thought a right great enough and dear enough to be protected by a special amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and I hold it no less important now than it was one hundred years ago. It was a blood-bought right. Brave men gave up their lives to secure that right among others, and I am not here to surrender it now upon any demand or upon any pretext, however specious or however plausible it may be.

There is no necessity for this harsh provision—none whatever. It seems to have been put in here for the sake, as I said, of directing the fulminations of this law against a class of our fellow-citizens.

What are corporations? They are aggregations of individuals. Who are the officers of corporations? They are your fellow-citizens, your peers, and your equals. Why do corporations exist? Not for the purpose of the intangible, invisible, and artificial being that the law contemplates for certain purposes. They exist for their stockholders, for the men and the women, the widows and the orphans, who have the right to participate in that mode of human enterprise and in that mode of carrying on the business of life. Why should these aggregations of individuals be attacked in their property or in their rights by a method of taxation that we do not dare to apply to the individual when separated from these artificial existences?

Mr. President, I hope, as this provision is absolutely unnecessary, as it is drawn from a law intended for another purpose, as it is not just, as it is out of joint, as it is incongruous, as it does not contain apt language, that it may at least be omitted from this category of provisions that in so many other respects are more than harsh enough.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I can not account for this extraordinary eruption of vivid eloquence upon any other ground except that it is near the approach of our national anniversary, when the American eagle is presumed to scream at his loudest and his best.

I was not aware, Mr. President, that we were invading sacred rights of the citizen, that we were indulging in unreasonable search and seizure, and that the ghosts of our Revolutionary sires were to be invoked again to stalk through these Halls to affright us at what we were doing.

This alliance between the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], supplemented by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], would certainly frighten a man much bolder than I. Therefore I approach this vast and stupendous pile of oratory with much trepidation upon this warm afternoon.

Why, Mr. President, even the commercial instincts of the Senator from Rhode Island have been stirred; his mercantile conscience is lacerated and torn; his silken and velvety perceptions, ordinarily devoted to duties upon imports and to details of manufacturing, have been all swept away before a fervid gush of American patriotism, the like of which I have not heard since I was a boy. [Laughter.]

I am astounded at the result of this simple enactment in this bill, and I am more astonished, considering the fact that day after day the officers of the Federal Government go into the national banks whenever they please, under order of the Comptroller of the Currency, and examine every book and every paper without protest or question.

Mr. HILL. Not for the purpose of collecting a tax.

Mr. VEST. For the purpose of seeing how the accounts of that bank stand, and collecting a tax, too.

Mr. HOAR. They are public institutions.

Mr. VEST. The banks are put under espionage from day to day; and where are these orators who now tear passion into tatters and pierce this warm and moisty atmosphere with their epithets and adjurations?

Mr. President, in the McKinley act there were provisions harsher than even this, but in different form, where for the slightest violation of law whole casks and cargoes and bales of merchandise were appropriated, taken from private citizens, without trial, sold, and the proceeds put into the Treasury. The Senator from Rhode Island, in the interest of that legislation, not only voted for that bill, but added his arguments and his eloquence to its passage.

I repeat, that I did not suspect that I was perpetrating this great outrage upon anybody by adopting this enactment as it came from the House of Representatives. I was simple enough to believe that a corporation that was honestly conducting its business would have no objection to its books being examined; I was innocent enough to think that every corporation fairly and honestly conducted upon business methods, would enter its transactions from day to day; and I am innocent enough to believe so now, and that if the business of that corporation is fairly conducted it would not object to its books being examined by an officer of the Government, the collector of the district, for instance, in order to see what was the condition of its affairs and how much it honestly owed under this tax law to the Government of the United States.

Unreasonable search and seizure! What is unreasonable? There is not a State in this Union in which similar provisions are not found in their tax laws; not one in which the citizen is not made to submit to personal investigation and made to swear and to stand cross-examination, and where his premises even are entered upon for the purpose of finding the objects of taxation under the revenue laws of the respective States.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow me, I can contradict that statement for one State.

Mr. VEST. I have not examined the law of the State of Massachusetts, but if it has no provision for enforcing the collection of taxes, then it is in an anomalous condition, and one which would deprive it of all revenue for the purposes of carrying on the State government.

Mr. HOAR. I did not say that Massachusetts has no provision for the collection of taxes; but that she has no provision for examining and searching the books of citizens.

Mr. VEST. I made no such statement as that this identical provision was found there; but I say that similar provisions are found in the laws of every State in the Union to coerce people to pay taxes. No man pays taxes without reluctance.

Look at the custom-houses of the country, look at the provisions of law which have remained on the statute book year after year without these outbursts of fervid eloquence, which make me open my trunk, give up my personal property to be inspected, and that of my family, and yet the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Rhode Island are not found here tearing passion into tatters over outrages like that.

There never has been an excise law, and there never can be one, susceptible of being carried out without such provisions. It is easy enough for Senators to conjure up this phantom of violated personal rights by brutal officers invading the counting room of a corporation and looking into their books and papers; but there are provisions upon the statute book overlooked by the Senators, which they do not care to see, which they submit to, and which their constituents submit to, and yet they make no effort to repeal them, and have no word of denunciation for them on this floor.

No, Mr. President, this sensibility to personal liberty, this delicate and refined appreciation of personal rights, comes from something else—opposition to this income tax from beginning to the end; the determination to tear this bill to pieces, because they do not propose, if they can help it, that this enactment shall go upon the statute book.

It is not a matter of life and death, Mr. President, but I shall not submit to this denunciation here, when the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the House of Representatives and the Treasury Department are all as innocent of the outrage charged upon them as an unborn babe.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri says the objection which he heard made to this search and seizure of the citizens' papers reminds him of the Fourth of July orations on public liberty that he had heard from his boyhood. Of course I accept that honorable Senator's statement; but when I heard his speech, I should not think he had ever heard such an oration in his life; I should not think he had ever heard the principles of constitutional or civil liberty, or that he had given any reflection or study to what they mean.

Mr. President, does not that Senator see, has he undertaken to make a tariff bill for this country without knowing, that a national bank is a public institution, to which is committed a part of the functions of the Government, for whose exclusive monopoly the functions of State banks have been permitted, so far as their circulation is concerned, to be taxed out of existence, and that the visiting of the United States banks by United States officers depends on precisely the same principle as an inspection of the concerns of the Treasury Department itself?

Has that Senator undertaken to make a tariff bill without knowing that it is well settled that the importation of goods into one country from another is to be made on such conditions as that country may prescribe, as a matter of course? Therefore, if a person voluntarily elect to go abroad, or, being a foreigner, to come here from abroad and bring articles of merchandise with him, he does it on conditions, to which he is presumed to have assented, that that particular merchandise may be examined and inspected at the port of entry.

That disposes of the whole of the Senator's argument; and the bill remains, as has been stated, but not overstated, by the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from New York, a bold, bare, gross, coarse, and most unnecessary attempt by a government to enter the private premises of a citizen and search his private books in direct defiance of the Constitution of the United States, which says that such searches and seizures shall not be permitted.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Missouri to say he would not submit much longer to have this bill pounded in debate. I therefore speak with trepidation, but I have taken occasion to look at the provisions of the law of 1864, and I continue to maintain that no provision of this kind ever was made before and inserted in any revenue law in the United States. There are two provisions in the law of 1864.

There is a provision that every person bound to pay a tax under that law shall make a return, and there is a provision that if the assessor of internal revenue is dissatisfied with that return he may see the books of account of the person or the corporation; but mark, Mr. President, how carefully the statute has protected the individual and the corporation in that case. The provision is in section 14 of the act of June 30, 1864:

> It shall be lawful for the assessor to summon such person, his agent, or other person having possession, custody, or care of books of account containing entries relating to the trade or business of such person, or any other persons as he may deem proper, to appear before such assessor and produce such book, at a time and place therein named, and to give testimony.

Mr. President, that summons can be issued, and if the person summoned refuses to produce his books for inspection, what then can the assessor do? He is obliged to go to a judge or a commissioner and to resort to judicial proceedings to see the books of the person who is to be taxed; and he can only do this in case he has reason to believe the return of the individual is false and fraudulent. At every step in the proceeding the individual whose private business is to be exhibited is to be protected by all the safeguards of the law.

There is one other provision, and that is that for the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of the return an agent of the internal-revenue department may examine the books of certain corporations. Those corporations are corporations which are in a certain sense public corporations, being railroad and other transportation companies. I shall read that provision, in order that the whole case may be before the Senate.

In the case of transportation companies, express companies, insurance companies, telegraph companies, or persons having the care and management of a circus, theater, opera, or museum, it was provided as follows:

> And for the purpose of making such assessment, or of ascertaining the correctness of any such return, the books of any such person, firm, company, or corporation shall be subject to the inspection of the assessor or assistant assessor on his demand or request therefor.

This is section 109 of the act previously quoted.

That was as far as the legislators who laid war taxes dared to go. They did provide for an inspection of the books of transportation companies, and they provided that, as to private individuals and all private corporations, the books might be called for, and, if they were not forthcoming, the owner of the books or the manager of the corporation might be required to produce them to a commissioner or a judge, and the commissioner or the judge would, of course, protect the owner of the books or the manager of the company from any unnecessary exhibition of the contents of their books.

That was all that we did in the case of war taxes, and yet in this bill we have a provision that every corporation in every State shall keep books in a particular way, and that any internal-revenue officer at any time, within reasonable hours of the business day, may march into the office of the corporation and inspect all its books and papers.

I say, Mr. President, that there is no such provision as this in any statute which ever was enacted in a time of peace, and no provision in any degree resembling it in severity placed in any statute enacted in time of war.

Mr. HILL. What is the precise proposition now before the Senate, Mr. President?

Mr. ALDRICH. I rise for the purpose of saying that it is very evident that we can not dispose of this question to-night, and I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that we shall probably be able to dispose of it very promptly in the morning. The usual hour of adjournment has been reached.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state, in response to the parliamentary inquiry of the Senator from New York, that the pending amendment is the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. What has become of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], which I assume might be called the committee's amendment?

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to have it read.

Mr. BERRY. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri was withdrawn, leaving the provision of the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Missouri offered another amendment.

Mr. VEST. I moved another amendment, to strike out beginning in line 16 of section 66, on page 197, with the words "the assessors and inspectors" and going to the end of the section, and inserting in lieu thereof:

> The collector of internal revenue or any deputy collector for the district in which said corporation, company, or association is located and doing business.

Mr. HILL. I should like to have the amendment read in full.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York is first in order. His amendment will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 16, of section 66, it is proposed to strike out "times" and insert "hours, between March 1 and August 1, in each year."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I have listened to what the Senator from Missouri said in regard to my amendment. I do not refer to the last speech which he made, because he did not then speak of the amendment which I offered. I do not intend now to detain the Senate with any lengthy remarks upon the general features of this section, or as to the necessity or the propriety of it.

For the purposes of this amendment, I am disposed to recognize the propriety of some such provision, namely, a provision which requires these corporations to keep regular books, that all their transactions shall be entered each day and in regular order; but the point of my amendment is, that because a corporation is to pay a tax based upon its income for the full year, and the corporation is to make a return in March and the tax is be paid in July, therefore the company's books for the whole year should be open to the inspection of any collector or deputy collector of the district. I do not think that is necessary.

I have provided by the amendment that they may have this right of inspection between the time that the return is to be made and the whole month during which the tax is to be paid. For five months of the year all the corporations, companies, and associations of the United States are to be subject to the supervision and inspection of these collectors and deputy collectors, and I submit that is enough. For the remainder of the year they should be exempt from it.

What particular reason can exist during the whole year that corporations should be subjected to such an inspection? Will it be claimed that you can not collect the revenue without it? Simply because in the collection of tariff where the goods come from another country there must be more or less obnoxious features retained is no reason why they should be extended to your own citizens, and that every individual in the United States having his money invested in corporations should be subjected, so far as the corporation is concerned, to this inquisition and inspection.

Concede for the purposes of the argument that in every tariff bill and in the collection of all tariff duties there must be more or less inquisitorial and harsh features, and that the right of inspection must exist; concede for the purposes of the argument that where you have a national bank which is more or less identified with the fiscal affairs of your Government, whereby money of third parties is deposited in the bank, for the security of the public there must be more or less inspection; concede that all these things must be done, because they adhere to the nature of the transaction; still, merely because you desire to collect a tax from all the corporations in the country, I do not think for the whole period of a year they ought to be subjected to this inquisition. Five months, it seems to me, are amply sufficient.

This section provides also that these transactions are to be entered from day to day in regular order. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has suggested the point that there is no penalty if these books are not kept exactly in this form. I am not quite so certain of that. I am not familiar enough with certain provisions of the Federal statutes to say, but in every State there is usually a provision whereby, when a duty is enjoined upon a corporation or an individual, the nonperformance of that duty is made sometimes a crime, but usually a misdemeanor.

I do not believe that there is any use of imposing upon a corporation duties which can not be enforced by law. Then why take that position? Why provide that the corporations shall keep their full, regular, and accurate books of account? Why provide that they shall be kept in regular order? Why provide that they shall be open to the inspection of all these officials when we are met by the statement that the provision amounts to nothing; that they need not comply with it if they do not want to? It does not enforce itself; it is no crime to refuse. That, then, presents the point that it is wholly unnecessary to put such a feature in the bill.

It will be cited against this measure on the stump by our friends upon the other side of the Chamber, and my desire is to make the bill as defensible as possible. If no good can come from putting this provision in the bill, why insert it? Under it an official may retaliate against corporations and he may retaliate against you by putting a tax of 100 per cent or 50 per cent. He has that power

Why place all the corporations of the country within the power of those political officials, more or less interested in political squabbles in their respective districts? The political hostility of many of these Federal collectors in the State of New York I may incur. I do not mean to insinuate that I fear that they will retaliate upon myself, for I have very little income and if this session keeps on I shall have very little to pay the tax with; neither do I fear that they will retaliate upon my friends; but nevertheless they would feel rather offended if they should go to one of these corporations and ask to look at their books and be refused, and they might retaliate.

By keeping in this unnecessary provision, which there is no way to enforce, you simply add an unnecessary hardship and an unnecessarily offensive provision to the bill. The Senator from Delaware was certainly indignant, and properly and righteously so, in the denunciation of this provision. If these things are necessary that is another reason for their existence, but if they are unnecessary so much the more ought they to be stricken out

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion at this point?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. Up to ten years ago, as the Senator is aware, there was a provision in the customs laws for searching and seizing books and papers for frauds upon the customs revenue. That law was repealed, I think, ten years ago, and to-day there exists no law upon the statute book which authorizes the inspection of books and papers. The Senator's amendment, it seems to me, instead of limiting and regulating the times when there may be an inspection of the books and papers, should be a motion to adopt the provision of the 1864 law in some form by which if the books of a corporation are not exhibited they may be called for under the order and direction of a court and we should not go back to the discarded system (discarded as to the customs revenue years ago) of allowing any officer with his commission in his hand to march into the office of a corporation at any time of the year and demand to see all its books.

Mr. HILL. The very reason I suppose that it was discarded a good many years ago perhaps may be the very reasons why it is adopted now. That course seems to have been pursued with reference to a good deal that is contained in this bill.

Mr. President, I want first to perfect the bill before any motion is made to strike out. I do not think the whole provision is necessary. I think it is unreasonable in its terms. There is no way of enforcing it. It strikes me it would help the bill.

But such a motion might not prevail, and so I thought it was my duty, in the first place, to move to amend so as to limit the periods of its operation.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if his amendment proceeds upon the ground that we shall live under the Constitution of the United States seven months of the year and then there will be five months of the year when we shall not have any?

Mr. HILL. There is a good deal of criticism, but I am doing the best I can with a pretty tough bill. I am trying to modify it as best I can. I am in favor of that portion of the amendment which the Senator from Missouri proposes whereby the collector and deputy collector of the district are substituted for the inspector. I think that improves the bill.

Mr. President, the usual hour of adjournment has arrived, and we can not dispose of this matter to-night. I shall reserve further remarks until to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. I realize the fact that we can not dispose of the matter to-night, and I regret very much that we can not do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 4611) to amend an act approved January 26, 1893, to authorize the construction of bridges across the Hiwasse, the Tennessee, and Clinch Rivers, in the State of Tennessee; and

A bill (H. R. 7449) authorizing the Minneapolis Gaslight Company, of Minneapolis, Minn., to lay submerged iron gas-pipes across the Mississippi River, at Minneapolis.

The bill (H. R. 3511) concerning the weight of evidence in pension claims, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 4507) for the relief of Witherby & Gaffney, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 7477) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for prior years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF FISH AND FISHERIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, covering the operations of the Commissioner for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, be printed; and that there be printed 8,000 extra copies, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries; the illustrations to be obtained by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 28, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 27, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN, D.D., Chaplain of the Senate.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

To the Congress:

I herewith transmit a communication covering dispatches from the United States minister at Honolulu.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, June 23, 1894.

ASSASSINATION OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a translation of a cable dispatch received from the French Government:

PARIS, June 26, 1894.

The President of the Council and the Minister of Foreign Affairs to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington:

The Government of the Republic will communicate to the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies at their next session the expressions of fraternal sympathy which it has received from the Senate and from the House of Representatives of the great American Republic; but it will not delay until that moment a communication to you of the expression of all its thanks, and to make known to you the consolation which the resolutions of the Senate and of the House of Representatives have brought to it in the great grief which strikes the country.

HARBOR OF EVERETT, WASH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following Senate concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War is directed to cause a survey and estimate to be made of the cost of dredging the bar at Everett, in the State of Washington, so as to make a fresh-water harbor in or near the river with the greatest depth of water practicable: Provided, That if the information necessary to make such estimate is now in the possession of the Chief of Engineers it may be made without any further survey. The Secretary of War is directed to cause such estimate to be made and reported to Congress without delay.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that resolution.

There was no objection.

The concurrent resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. WILSON of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report the accompanying resolution and to ask its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 196) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government, and of the District of Columbia, and for the payment of pensions under existing laws, which shall remain unprovided for on the 30th day of June, 1894, be, and they are hereby, continued and made available for a period of thirty days from and after that date, unless the regular appropriations provided therefor in bills now pending in Congress shall have been previously made for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895; and a sufficient amount is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry on the same: Provided, That no greater amount shall be expended for such operations than will be in the same proportion to the appropriations for the fiscal year 1894 as thirty days' time bears to the whole of said fiscal year: Provided further, That the total expenditures for the whole of the fiscal year 1895 (under the several appropriations hereby continued, and under the several appropriation bills now pending) shall not exceed in the aggregate the amounts finally appropriated therefor in the several bills now pending, except in cases where a change is made in the annual, monthly, or per diem compensation, or in the numbers of officers, clerks, or other persons authorized to be employed by the several appropriations hereby continued, in which cases the amounts authorized to be expended shall equal thirty three-hundred-and-sixty-fifths of the appropriations for the fiscal year 1894, and three hundred and thirty-five three-hundred-and-sixty-fifths of the appropriations contained in the several bills now pending when the same shall have been finally passed, unless the salary or compensation of any office shall be increased or diminished without changing the grade or the duties thereof, in which case such salary or compensation shall relate to the entire fiscal year and run from the beginning thereof: Provided further, That the session employés of the Senate and House of Representatives now authorized by law shall be continued upon the rolls until the end of the present session of Congress and paid at the rate per diem or month at which they are now paid; and a sufficient amount is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to pay the same: Provided further, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum sufficient to enable the Clerk of the House to pay to Members and Delegates the amount which they certify they have paid, or agree to pay, for clerical hire necessarily employed by them in the discharge of their official and representative duties, as provided in the joint resolution approved March 3, 1893, until the end of the present session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I will say that the joint resolution has been prepared after consultation with the Treasury Department. I desire to submit in connection with it a statement which shows the dates at which the several appropriation bills have passed the House in the last four or five Congresses.

The statement submitted by Mr. SAYERS is as follows:

Mr. REED. Has any single appropriation bill yet passed both Houses of this Congress?

Mr. SAYERS. Not one of the general bills.

Mr. REED. Is not that unusual?

Mr. SAYERS. I think so; but I will say to the gentleman from Maine that if he will examine the statement which I submit he will see that there has been no fault of the House. The bills have been sent over to the Senate in ample time for some of them at least to become law.

Mr. REED. I do not think it likely to be the fault of the present chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, and I think I may claim that we on this side have aided him in every reasonable way.

Mr. SAYERS. I think so.

Mr. REED. Then this spectacle of extending all the appropriation bills is unique?

Mr. SAYERS. It is unusual. I believe—though I speak subject to correction—that this is the only instance where Congress has been compelled to extend all the appropriation bills in this way. It may have also occurred during the last Congress. I think that generally heretofore some of these bills have been passed by both Houses before the 1st of July.

Mr. REED. And we have practically been in session a year less one month.

Mr. SAYERS. That is so.

Mr. REED. Well, I think people understand where the difficulty is.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 196) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SAYERS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SITTING OF APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE DURING RECESS.

Mr. SAYERS. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report to the House another resolution, and ask its immediate adoption.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, or such subcommittees as they may designate, are hereby authorized to sit during the vacation for the purpose of considering and facilitating the business of the committee, in advance of the next regular session; to be convened at such time as the chairman of said committee may order.

Mr. SAYERS. This is word for word the resolution that has always been passed at the first session of every Congress.

Mr. PAYNE (to Mr. SAYERS). How do you know we shall have a "vacation"?

Mr. SAYERS. I hope so. [Laughter].

The resolution was adopted.

FORFEITURE OF RAILROAD LAND GRANTS

Mr. McRAE. I rise to make a privileged report. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. 121) to amend an act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes, approved September 29, 1890. I ask that this report be printed and lie on the table, subject to be called up, without losing any of its privileges.

The SPEAKER. The bill, together with the report, will be printed and will lie on the table, subject to be called up under the rule.

Mr. McRAE. I also report back another bill on the same subject and of similar character, and ask that it lie on the table.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 3325) to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads and for other purposes, was laid on the table.

FUNDS OF FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I rise to a privileged report. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back a substitute for the resolution of inquiry introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HULICK].

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 20, 1894.

Mr. HULICK submitted the following, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

"Whereas there is now in the Treasury of the United States money arising from arrears of pay and due the estates of deceased colored soldiers who served during the late war; and

"Whereas it is deemed just and expedient that said funds be set apart and appropriated for the purpose of erecting a national memorial home for aged and infirm colored people and to aid in maintaining the inmates of the same: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby requested, at the earliest time practicable, to report to this House as follows:

"First. The amount of unexpended balance of said funds that was turned over to the Adjutant-General's Department for disbursement when the Freedmen's Bureau was discontinued in 1872.

"Second. The additional money arising from said source, if any, that has been paid into the Treasury since 1872.

"Third. The amount of said funds that was held for seven years and then repaid into the Treasury on the legal presumption of the death of the payees.

"Fourth. A full statement of the claims paid to claimants since 1882 out of said fund and the amount thereof.

"Fifth. The number and amount of claims now pending.

"Sixth. The actual amount of said fund now in the Treasury claimed and the actual amount unclaimed.

"Seventh. An estimate of the balance of said fund that will finally remain unclaimed."

The substitute reported by the Committee on Military Affairs was read, as follows:

Whereas there is now in the Treasury of the United States money arising from arrears of pay, bounty, and prize money due the estates of deceased colored soldiers who served during the late war: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby requested, at the earliest time practicable, to report to this House, as follows:

First. The amount of unexpended balance of said funds that was turned over to the Adjutant-General's Department for disbursement when the Freedmen's Bureau was discontinued in 1872.

Second. The additional money arising from said source, if any, that has been paid into the Treasury since 1872.

Third. The amount of said funds that was held for seven years and then repaid into the Treasury on the legal presumption of the death of the payees.

Fourth. A statement of the amount paid to claimants out of said funds since 1882.

Fifth. The number and amount of claims now pending.

Sixth. The actual amount of said funds now in the Treasury claimed and the actual amount unclaimed.

Seventh. An estimate of the balance of said fund that will finally remain unclaimed and also an estimate of the amount that will finally remain unproven.

The question being taken on agreeing to the substitute resolution reported by the committee, it was agreed to.

BRAINERD AND NORTHERN MINNESOTA RAILWAY.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2000) granting to the Brainerd and Northern Minnesota Railway Company a right of way through the Leech Lake Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the Brainerd and Northern Minnesota Railway Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota, and to its assigns, the right of way for the extension of its railroad, with necessary side tracks and switch tracks, and for a telegraph and telephone line, through the Leech Lake Indian Reservation in said State, commencing at a point in the south line of said Indian reservation and extending northwesterly through sections 13, 12, 1, and 2, of township 141, range 31, to a point in the west line of said reservation in said section 2, with the right to load logs on said railroad at the points in said reservation where the same may run adjacent or contiguous to the waters of Leech Lake. Such right of way shall be 50 feet in width on each side of the central line of said railroad, and said company shall also have the right to take from the lands adjacent to the line of said road material, stone, and earth necessary for the construction of said railroad; also grounds adjacent to such right of way for station buildings, depots, machine shops, side tracks, turn-outs, and water stations, not to exceed in amount 200 feet in width and 3,000 feet in length for each station, and to an extent not exceeding one station within the limits of said reservation: Provided, That no part of such lands herein granted shall be used except in such manner and for such purposes only as are necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railroad line, and when any portion thereof shall cease to be used, such portion shall revert to the nation or tribe of Indians from which the same shall be taken.

SEC. 2. That before said railroad shall be constructed through any land, claim, or improvement held by individual occupants according to any treaties or laws of the United States, compensation shall be made such occupant or claimant for all property to be taken or damage done by reason of the construction of said railroad. In case of failure to make satisfactory settlement with any such claimant, the United States district court at St. Paul or Duluth, Minn., shall have jurisdiction upon petition of either party to determine such just compensation in accordance with the laws of Minnesota provided for determining the damage when property is taken for railroad purposes; and the amount of damages resulting to the tribe or tribes of Indians pertaining to said reservation in their tribal capacity, by reason of the construction of said railroad through such lands of the reservation as are not occupied in severalty, shall be ascertained and determined in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, and be subject to his final approval: Provided, however, That said railroad company may file with the Secretary of the Interior a bond, in such amount and with such sureties as the Secretary shall approve, conditioned for the payment of just compensation for said right of way to said individual occupants and to said tribe or tribes, as hereinbefore provided, and said company may thereupon proceed to construct and operate its railroad across said reservation.

SEC. 3. That said company shall cause maps, showing the route of its line through said reservation, and including the grounds for station buildings, depots, machine shops, side tracks, turn-outs, and water stations, to be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior before constructing any portion of said railroad.

SEC. 4. That said company is hereby authorized to enter upon said reservation for the purpose of surveying and locating its line of railroad: Provided, That said railroad shall be located and constructed with due regard to the rights of the Indians, and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe.

SEC. 5. That the right herein granted shall be forfeited by said company unless the road shall be constructed through the said reservation within three years after the passage of this act.

Passed the Senate June 6, 1894.

Attest:

WM. R. COX, Secretary.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask a few questions. In the first place, does the Secretary of the Interior approve of this bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. He does.

Mr. COOMBS. I observe there is a provision that this company "may" give bonds. Should not the bill provide that they must give bonds?

Mr. TAWNEY. I think the provision in regard to giving bonds is mandatory upon the company.

Mr. COOMBS. The language is "may."

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, may in certain cases may be a mandatory expression. I will explain that the right of way asked for crosses the southwest corner of Leech Lake Reservation, running through only three sections right along the corner. On account of the conformation of the lake the road must cross the corner of this reservation in order to get to the lands beyond.

Mr. COOMBS. Is this a solvent railroad, or one that has failed?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is a solvent railroad, and solvent men are connected with it.

Mr. COOMBS. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAWNEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (S. 730) making Labor Day a legal holiday; when the Speaker signed the same.

COUNTY ROADS, ETC., DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill (H. R. 5102) making appropriations to provide for the construction of county roads and suburban streets in the District of Columbia, Calendar number 45, be laid on the table, inasmuch as the provisions of the bill have been already incorporated into the general bill for the support of the government of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Without objection that order will be made.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ST. CROIX RIVER.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill (H. R. 6529) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the St. Croix River between Wisconsin and Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. There are a number of amendments recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The amendments were severally considered and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

TERMS OF COURTS, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6447) to fix a term of the Federal district court of the southern judicial district of Mississippi, to be held at Meridian, Miss., to include the counties named.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the southern judicial district of the State of Mississippi be so constituted as to embrace the counties of Kemper, Noxubee, and Neshoba, and that the counties of Lauderdale, Kemper, Noxubee, Winston, Leake, Neshoba, Newton, Scott, Jasper, Clarke, Wayne, Jones, Perry, Smith, and Covington shall be known as the eastern division of said southern district, and circuit and district courts for the transaction of business pertaining to the persons and property in said eastern division shall be held at the city of Meridian on the second Mondays of March and September of each year and shall continue for three weeks, or so long as business may require.

SEC. 2. That said courts held in Meridian as provided in section 1 of this act shall be possessed of, and exercise all the powers and jurisdiction now possessed or exercised, or which may hereafter be granted to or exercised by the circuit and district courts now held at Jackson, and all laws regulating and defining how suits against persons or property located or found in judicial districts shall be brought shall be applicable to and govern the bringing of suits in said division, and all laws touching the removal of causes from State courts to United States courts shall apply to said courts hereby established. All prosecutions for crimes and offenses heretofore committed shall be commenced and carried on as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 3. That all civil causes now pending in the circuit or district courts at Jackson, or Aberdeen, or Mississippi City, or Vicksburg, or Oxford, in which a citizen of any county of said eastern division is a defendant, shall remain as they now stand and be tried and determined as if this act had not been passed, unless by the consent of all the parties such causes shall be removed to the courts held at Meridian, to be tried there.

SEC. 4. That if there be more than one defendant in a cause and the defendants reside in different divisions of the said southern district, or any of the defendants reside in the northern district, the plaintiff may sue in either division where any defendant resides, and send duplicate writs for the other defendant or defendants, the other division or district where such defendant or defendants reside, and said writs when executed and returned into the court from which they issued shall constitute one suit and be proceeded in accordingly.

SEC. 5. That all processes issued out of said courts at Meridian against defendants residing in the counties of Lauderdale, Kemper, Noxubee, Winston, Leake, Neshoba, Newton, Scott, Smith, Covington, Jasper, Clarke, Wayne, Jones, and Perry, or any other county, shall be returned to the courts hereby provided to be held in Meridian.

SEC. 6. That all grand and petit jurors summoned for service in said eastern division of said southern district created by this act shall be residents of said division.

SEC. 7. That the marshal and clerk of said southern district of Mississippi, as constituted before the passage of this act, shall appoint deputies who shall reside at Meridian and act as marshal and clerk of said circuit and district courts held there in place of their principals.

SEC. 8. That the district attorney of the southern district of Mississippi shall be district attorney for said eastern division, and shall be allowed the same fees and required to perform the same duties and be subject to the same liabilities as now provided by law.

SEC. 9. That when a defendant is sued out of a division of his residence, and is not joined with a codefendant whose residence is in the division where the suit is brought, he may on motion, supported by affidavit, change the venue to the division of his residence.

SEC. 10. That the United States shall not be at any expense in providing for a building or room for holding of the terms of said courts at Meridian.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request to consider the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. There are several amendments recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "Winston" and "Perry" wherever they occur in the bill.

Also that the word "and," in line 3, section 7, page 3, and all of lines 4 and 5 of the same section be stricken out.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to fix a term of the Federal district and circuit courts of the southern judicial district of Mississippi, to be held at Meridian, Miss., to include the counties named."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. By an agreement with my colleagues I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "Covington" wherever it appears in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. REED. What report is there in this case?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The report is simply this:

The Committee on the Judiciary reports back the House bill 6447, with the recommendation that the title thereof be amended—

And then follows the other amendments which have been read:

The committee recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

It is a short report.

Mr. REED. What is the nature of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That I can explain very briefly. The bill proposes to fix a term of court for the southern district of Mississippi—a term of the district and circuit courts—to be held at the city of Meridian, in the State of Mississippi. The bill prescribes which of the counties of the State shall constitute that division of the southern judicial district, to be held at Meridian.

It is a bill which is unanimously reported by the Judiciary Committee; it involves no new offices or officers, and no expense. The counties are all satisfied with the arrangement, and have petitioned Congress for the enactment of this law.

Mr. REED. This is an additional term of the district court?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. An additional term.

Mr. REED. Of the district court alone?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No; the district and circuit courts.

Mr. REED. The district court and also the circuit court?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. How many terms have you now?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. For the southern district we have only two.

Mr. REED. How many districts have you?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Two.

Mr. REED. Two judges?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No, only one; two marshals, two district attorneys, two courts, but one judge.

Mr. REED. This does not change the divisions?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No. This merely includes certain counties in this subdivision of the court to be held at Meridian.

Mr. KYLE. And provides for the holding of the court at three places instead of two?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is all.

Mr. REED. And the same judge?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes; it provides for no new judge.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The title of the bill was amended in accordance with the recommendation of the committee.

JOHN NELSON.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 6069.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I shall have to call for the regular order to enable the House to consider the bill for the admission of New Mexico.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Do not do that until this bill is considered.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I will withdraw the demand for the purpose of allowing the gentleman to make his request. I regret the necessity of interfering with any gentleman who has a matter which he wishes considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] asks unanimous consent to consider a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6069) to reimburse John Nelson for money paid in 1863 to avoid a draft.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to pay John Nelson, of Talley Cavey, Allegheny County, Pa., the sum of $300, to reimburse him for moneys paid the United States in 1863 in order to become exempt from a draft of soldiers made by the United States, he being at the time of the draft and payment of said moneys doing duty as a soldier of the United States in the State of Ohio as a member of the Fifty-eighth Pennsylvania Militia.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I should like to have the report read, or a statement of the circumstances which will justify such a bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request to consider the bill?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have the report read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report will be read.

The report (by Mr. MAHON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6069) for the relief of John Nelson, beg leave to make the following report:

The evidence submitted on behalf of the claimant, John Nelson, shows that while still a minor he volunteered, in April, 1861, but was rejected for physical disability. Subsequently, in August, 1861, he enlisted in Company B, Sixty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, and served until February, 1863, when he was discharged on account of illness. In July, 1863, he enlisted in Company H, Fifty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and while serving in that regiment was drafted for service by the provost-marshal at Allegheny City, Pa., and to avoid service under this draft he paid $300 commutation money, although at the time he was not liable to said draft.

The claim for relief in this case seems to your committee a proper one, and they recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. WARNER. I should like to ask the gentleman how many cases of this kind there are?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. This is the only case of the kind of which I have any knowledge.

Mr. WARNER. Has the committee made any investigation?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes; and various members of the House have investigated the matter. It has been up once, and was objected to, but those who have investigated it have withdrawn their objections. It is a case of real merit, where a man actually paid the money while he was in the service. I know of no other such case.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill why it was that this man was drafted when he was already in the service?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Well, that was a mistake.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Why could he not have pleaded that fact in opposition to the draft?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It might have been pleaded, but at the time he was a mere boy, and his people were ignorant. They did not understand it, and they simply paid the money—his family paid the money while he was in the service. I have examined a number of cases, but there is none that comes in the same line as this, and I do not think there is another such case—at least not in my district—where the money was actually paid while the man was in the service. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. SAYERS] objected to this bill when it first came up, but afterwards he withdrew his objection.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It strikes me that this was a very strange proceeding.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There were many strange proceedings in connection with the draft.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I have seen the receipt that was obtained for the payment of this money.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Did he continue in the service?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Until the close of the war?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. He continued in the service until his term of service expired, and he had previously served a term.

Mr. WARNER. When did his term of service expire?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Some time in 1864.

Mr. MCMILLIN. And this draft was when?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. In 1863.

Mr. WARNER. Do I understand the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to approve of this bill?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have no objection to it, on the statement that is made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BYNUM. I do not know that I fully understand all the facts in this case. I know there were a great many cases of merit that arose during the war by reason of very improper if not fraudulent practices in the way of drafts.

I know that in Indiana two men were drafted and put in substitutes, and they were afterward again drafted and compelled to go and serve out their time. There are a great many cases of that kind; and considering the very remarkable way in which drafts were conducted, and in which men were compelled to serve, I am inclined to think it would be better to leave the matter settled as it is without undertaking to stir it up, because you will open up an endless number of claims, of probably equal merit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I have only this to say concerning this bill: It seems to me that a hardship has been inflicted upon this man; and yet it was a hardship for which he was personally responsible. If he was in the service at the time he was not subject to be drafted, and could have escaped this payment by pleading the fact or making the fact known.

It is a strange thing, a very strange thing, that a man should be required to pay any money for being drafted into service in which he was already engaged. I suppose we have had the facts, but it is a most peculiar case. I would like to ask the gentleman to whom this money was paid?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It was paid to the provost-marshal of Allegheny City, Pa.

Mr. MCMILLIN. To whom did it go?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. To the Government.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WARNER and Mr. BYNUM. Division.

The House divided: and there were—ayes 76, noes 54.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SIPE, for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. GORMAN, for ten days, on account of sickness in his family.

MASSACHUSETTS AVENUE THROUGH NAVAL OBSERVATORY GROUNDS.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I submit a report in the nature of a privileged report, and ask for a committee of conference. The House has heretofore passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 32) declaring Massachusetts avenue through the grounds of the Naval Observatory a public street. The Senate has amended that resolution, and I move to nonconcur on behalf of the Committee on the District of Columbia in the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, moves to nonconcur in the Senate amendment to a House joint resolution and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. The Clerk will report the title of the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 32) declaring Massachusetts avenue through the grounds of the Naval Observatory a public street.

The SPEAKER. This is a House resolution with Senate amendment. The Senate asks for a conference, and the gentleman from Tennessee moves to nonconcur in the Senate amendment and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Without objection that order will be made. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Chair will appoint as managers of the conference on the part of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. POST].

The Clerk will call the committees for reports.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DEADWOOD, S. DAK.

Mr. BRETZ, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported with amendments the bill (H. R. 320) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Deadwood, in the State of South Dakota; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SANTA ROSA, CAL.

Mr. ABBOTT, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported favorably the bill (H. R. 317) for a public building at Santa Rosa, Cal.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT EUREKA, CAL.

Mr. ABBOTT, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 318) for a public building at Eureka, Cal.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TROY, ALA.

Mr. ABBOTT, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7380) providing for the erection of a public building at Troy, in Pike County, Ala.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIGHTWOOD RAILWAY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4474) to amend the charter of the Brightwood Railway Company of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of committees for reports. The morning hour begins at seven minutes to 1 o'clock and the call rests with the Committee on Military Affairs.

BOARD OF REVIEW.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, when the Committee on Military Affairs had the hour before, House bill 199 was pending. A motion had been insisted upon that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this bill. I did not object to it at that time; but I am of the opinion that the bill should be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill in order that that may be determined.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 199) to authorize the Secretary of War to appoint a board of review in certain cases.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, there is one amendment in the bill which may possibly require that it be considered in Committee of the Whole, and I therefore move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] will please resume the chair, as the gentleman was in the chair when the bill was up before.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to appoint a board of review, to consist of three members and a recorder, from officers of the Army on the active or retired list, to review the proceedings, findings, and sentence of any court-martial for the trial of a commissioned officer or enlisted man, either of the regular Army or volunteer forces, where the accused has been dishonorably discharged from the military service of the United States, or to review the proceedings, findings, and decision of a retiring board, when an officer has been wholly retired from the Army.

SEC. 2. That the said board of review shall have jurisdiction of all such cases as shall be ordered before it by the Secretary of War, and its members shall serve without compensation, except such as they are now receiving, and may be relieved from time to time as the exigencies of the service may require: Provided, That when officers of the retired list serve upon such board they shall receive the same pay as officers of their grade upon the active list.

SEC. 3. That it shall be lawful for said board of review to hear and consider any additional evidence in each case as may properly be brought before it, under such rules and regulations as may be established by the Secretary of War, and it is hereby authorized to subpœna witnesses and to administer oaths when necessary; and the proceedings and findings, with the recommendations of said board, shall be forwarded to the Secretary of War for his consideration and action: Provided, That the Government shall be put to no expense on account of witnesses summoned on the part of the applicant.

SEC. 4. That the board shall have the power to compel the attendance of witnesses, and to make them testify, and punish for contempt.

SEC. 5. That the recorder shall act as judge-advocate and be empowered to introduce witnesses to contradict the evidence of the applicant.

SEC. 6. That in case of disagreement of the board the views may be expressed in both majority and minority reports.

SEC. 7. That in all cases where the relief prayed for is recommended by the said board of review, in whole or in part, and approved by the Secretary of War, it shall be his duty to refer to Congress, for such action as it may deem proper, the findings of the board of review, together with the evidence upon which the findings are based, and he shall also report to Congress what action by Congress is deemed by him as necessary in order that justice may be done in the case: Provided, That no right to any pay or allowances shall accrue or be revived from such amendment of the records in any case.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to inquire whether this bill was not pending when the Committee on Military Affairs last occupied an hour?

The CHAIRMAN. It was. This is the second morning hour in which the bill has been up.

Mr. BAILEY. This is the second hour in which the Committee on Military Affairs have occupied the attention of the House with this bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Not exactly. It was taken up in the latter part of the hour on that occasion. A bill was pending to which objection was made, and, no quorum voting, that bill was withdrawn and this one was taken up and considered for perhaps ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. BAILEY. But if this bill should not be disposed of in this hour it could not come up under the next call.

The CHAIRMAN. It could not.

Mr. BAILEY. I believe that when the bill was up before I resisted its passage. On further examination, I think that it is possibly free from objection if the gentleman will agree to strike out the first proviso. On section 2, page 2, the bill provides that officers on the retired list who serve on this proposed board shall receive the same pay as officers of the same grade on the active list. I think that as little as a retired officer might do would be to render such a service as this without extra compensation. The Government is paying him already 75 per cent of what he would receive if he were on the active list, and he is doing nothing in return, and if he can render this service I think he should be glad to do it. If the gentleman from Ohio will agree to strike out that provision I shall make no further objection to the bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. When we come to the consideration of the bill I shall be inclined to accept that proposition; but I desire now to make a brief explanation to the committee to show the necessity for some such measure as this. About one-sixth of the bills that are introduced into the House are referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. Probably sixteen hundred bills were referred to that committee during the last Congress. Several hundred of those are bills which require the committee to investigate military records, to investigate the action of courts-martial, courts of inquiry, or retiring boards. Officers and men come before the committee claiming that they have been wronged by the action of the War Department through those respective boards or courts, and they seek to present their cases supported in some instances by a mass of testimony.

Now, the Committee on Military Affairs has not the time or the opportunity to investigate these cases properly, and the result generally is that but one side is presented to the committee. I recall one case now in which an officer was summarily dismissed from the Army some years ago for having in his possession stolen goods. He did not ask for a court of inquiry or a court-martial at the time, but accepted his fate. Another officer who was similarly charged demanded a court of inquiry, or a court-martial, I do not remember which, and upon investigation he was acquitted. Now, the former one who has been resting under this stain for lo! these many years, comes before Congress and has a bill introduced for his relief, to reinstate him in the Army, sustains his case by affidavits, and attempts to upset the report of the officer of the Army who investigated the case at the time and to upset the results of that investigation.

Now, how can the Committee on Military Affairs properly try such a case as that? This bill provides that an officer so situated shall go to the War Department and shall make his showing there, and if that showing is sufficient to justify the Secretary of War in ordering a court, it shall be ordered as provided in this bill. That court shall investigate the case, shall call and examine witnesses, shall go to the bottom of the subject and shall make a report. The report need not be unanimous; there may be majority and minority reports. Upon such report as made the case shall be again reviewed at the War Department. If the Secretary of War adopts the report he shall refer it to Congress, and it will be for Congress, with all the testimony before it and all the investigation that can possibly be made of the subject, to determine whether the man shall have the relief he seeks or not. Obviously that will be better for the individual as well as for the War Department, and it will certainly be better for the Committee on Military Affairs and for Congress to be relieved of the investigation, or the partial investigation, that is demanded of it under the present system.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to this declaration, which I find in the letter of Maj. Gen. Schofield in relation to this bill:

> But the bill in question undoubtedly requires careful revision. In the first place, since the dismissal of an officer is by the President's order, the board of review should be appointed by the President, rather than by the Secretary of War. And in order that justice may certainly be done, the board should have power not only to summon witnesses, but to compel their attendance and to compel them to testify.

The point to which I specially desire to call attention is that, over the suggestion of the General in command of the Army, this bill proposes to give the Secretary of War authority to appoint a board of review to review what the President has done in the exercise of his authority as commander-in-chief of the Army and Navy. It strikes me that if the bill is to go through at all the suggestion of Gen. Schofield ought to be adopted.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Very well; we will accept that.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I am rather inclined to object to that for this reason. The President dismisses the man, and the question for this proposed tribunal is as to the propriety of that dismissal. Now, I do not think that the President ought to appoint the board that is to pass upon the propriety of his own action. It is true that the bill proposes that the board of review shall be appointed by the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of War is appointed by the President, but still the bill removes the organization of the board which is to pass upon the propriety of the President's action one degree farther from the President, which, I think, is entirely proper.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Let me remind the gentleman that although the President approves the dismissal, he does not take the initiative. The initiative is taken below.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, in reply to the gentleman from Texas, that the chief command of the Army and Navy can not be taken out of the hands of the President. The Constitution invests him with it. If the Constitution invests him with this power, it is wrong for us to take it from him if we could. I do not sympathize with the suggestion that it is important to strip the President of this function and lodge it with a subaltern of his—one of his appointees. If the President has the discretion to appoint the Secretary of War, certainly he is equally competent with that Secretary to deal with questions of this kind.

Mr. BAILEY. No provision of the Constitution contemplates a retired list; and I undertake to say that the men who made that instrument would never have consented to one. And inasmuch as in this bill we are dealing with the retired list, I submit that the suggestion of my friend from Tennessee is scarcely pertinent.

Mr. MCMILLIN. My friend is in error about the bill. The bill, if I understand it correctly, does not deal entirely with the retired list. Am I correct [addressing Mr. OUTHWAITE]?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. You are correct.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The bill deals with persons who are dishonorably dismissed from the service; and in the report, so far as I have been able to read it, stress has been laid principally on that class of cases, not upon the retired list. I have no more anxiety than my friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] has to increase the retired list.

Mr. BAILEY. As a matter of fact, the bill does deal with the retired list, and with courts-martial also.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That is correct.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But most of the cases to which the bill has reference are cases coming from courts-martial and courts of inquiry, and cases of summary dismissal.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Before the gentleman from Alabama proceeds I would like to ask whether this bill gives power to correct the military record of a man who by some mistake or other has been charged on the records with desertion?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It does not give power to correct such a record, but it gives power to investigate the matter and then refer the results of the investigation, the findings, to Congress for its action.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Where there has been no court-martial?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Where there has been no court-martial.

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I do not deem it material whether the Secretary of War or the President be designated in the first line of this bill, because it has been decided that the action of the Secretary of War in such as is specified in this is really the action of the President. I should have no objection therefore to providing that this board shall be appointed by the President, though I presume in point of fact the appointments would actually be made by the Secretary of War.

I do not think it necessary to add anything to what the chairman of the committee [Mr. OUTHWAITE] has said on this subject. For many years I have regarded a measure of this kind as one of great importance, one that I considered very essential to be brought to the attention of Congress for the purpose of preventing injustice to officers of the Army. The Committee on Military Affairs in every Congress is overwhelmed with bills to restore Army officers. But that committee is not in an attitude to do judicial fairness in such cases. It can not investigate these matters so as to mete out exact justice in reporting the most meritorious bills and rejecting those that are less meritorious.

The history of our proceedings, I regret to say, is that we have failed in many cases to act favorably upon cases of real merit, which all will admit is doing injustice, and then ex parte evidence brought before the committee has sometimes caused favorable action upon cases where upon judicial investigation it was afterward shown favorable action should not have been taken; and after such errors have been discovered—errors, of course, in the direction of clemency—the committee has sometimes been unduly conservative and careful, and with an anxiety to avoid error has refused to favorably consider cases which involved a great deal of merit.

The only purpose of this bill is to have judicial investigation in cases of this kind by military men so situated as to be able to avail themselves of all information. The report of this board to the Secretary of War will be transmitted to Congress, and the hope is that we shall thus be enabled to do absolute justice in every case. The establishment of a board of this character has been recommended to Congress on many occasions; and great injustice has been done on account of the failure to pass such a bill.

I hope, therefore, there will be no objection to this measure. I shall not oppose the suggestion with regard to retired officers of the Army. It would probably be as well to let them serve with the same pay that they would have on the retired list. That provision was put in pursuant to a suggestion of the Secretary of War in a previous Congress. This is all I desire to say on the subject, except to ask for a vote, as under the rules the bill will be lost if we allow the morning hour to expire before finally disposing of the bill.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman a question or two about this bill. I am very slow to antagonize any bill touching the Army which the gentleman introduces. I say this on account of my own want of knowledge and the gentleman's very great amount of knowledge touching especially the Army.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Thank you.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But I read in the gentleman's report the statement:

> There can be no doubt but that the courts-martial in nearly all cases render a just verdict, which ought not to be disturbed.

Now, as I understand the gentleman's remarks and the tenor of this bill, it happens in many cases that a party under sentence of a military court comes to Congress to be relieved from that sentence.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Yes, sir; very many such cases come before Congress.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And the matter is referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, which committee, after making the best investigation it can, reports favorably or unfavorably. To relieve the Committee on Military Affairs of this responsible duty and to secure a better result as the gentleman hopes in such cases, he proposes now the establishment of a court of review which shall reconsider the action in such cases without limitation.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Which shall review the proceedings.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. In other words, although an officer may have been convicted by court-martial twenty years ago, he can under this bill come in as a matter of right and have his case reconsidered by this board of review.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit me a moment, I wish to ask the gentleman from Alabama in charge of the bill, as it seems to be a little obscure on that point, whether this accrues to the officer dismissed as a matter of right, or whether it is in the discretion of the Secretary of War?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The bill says in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. McMILLIN. Where?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The officer is compelled to make his application——

Mr. McMILLIN. If the gentleman will permit me, the first line of the bill provides:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to appoint a board of review.

But I do not see anything in the bill that makes it the duty of the Secretary of War, or whether it leaves it to him as a matter of discretion and right.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. If the gentleman will refer to section 3, page 2——

Mr. HULL. Section 3 clearly fixes it as the duty of the Secretary of War. That section provides for the rules and regulations to be established by him.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama (continuing). Section 3 provides:

SEC. 3. That it shall be lawful for said board of review to hear and consider any additional evidence in each case as may properly be brought before it under such rules and regulations as may be established by the Secretary of War.

Mr. McMILLIN. But that still does not say whether it is the duty of the Secretary of War to organize this board on the application of any soldier or not. That probably would be the construction, but the question is whether it is a duty or a discretion as the bill is drawn.

Mr. BAILEY. I think the second section of the bill is clear on that point. It provides that the board of review shall have jurisdiction of all cases which shall be ordered before it by the Secretary of War. It provides, as will be seen, for the jurisdiction of such cases as "shall be ordered" before it.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There is no question that the Secretary of War must order the board.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then the construction of it—and the construction here would have weight in determining the matter—the construction you place on it is that it is not the right of the soldier to demand this board, but the Secretary of War has discretion to order the investigation if he believes it necessary.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. That is clearly the proper construction of the bill.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, as I was interrupted before. When the board of review reverses the action twenty years after the court has convicted the party, that fact is certified to Congress.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Yes, with the proceedings, findings, and recommendation of the board.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If the board of review confirms the action of the court-martial the party still is not estopped from coming to Congress.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Under such circumstances the party coming to Congress would come with little chance of relief. The board would have given the matter a full and fair investigation and would have had the benefit of the additional evidence, and I do not see that anything additional could be presented to Congress.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, in view of the statement made in the report that substantially all of these convictions by courts-martial are just——

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Substantially all; but in many cases there is a failure of justice, and it is such cases which will be met by this bill.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, the report says:

There can be no doubt but that courts-martial in nearly all cases render a just verdict which ought not to be disturbed.

I say in view of that statement—I ask whether you think it wise in section 3, twenty years after, when the parties nearly all of them may be dead——

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Thirty years after.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes; thirty years after. I ask the gentleman from Alabama if he thinks it wise to provide as this section does—

That it shall be lawful for said board of review to hear and consider any additional evidence in each case as may properly be brought before it.

Now, then, after the lapse of a quarter of a century, for instance, taking a case of that kind, a man twenty-five years ago, with all the parties living, when the offense was committed, having had his day in court, with a full and fair trial, and being convicted, sleeps on that conviction for a quarter of a century, and after that lapse of time comes in with this new evidence, that may be correct evidence or may not be—it may be suborned evidence, being impossible if suborned, in consequence of the death of the parties or the loss of interest in the case, to combat it—and opens up the case and reverses the verdict made after the party had a full chance for hearing. I ask if that is a wise suggestion?

Now, it may be wise in connection with the Army. I do not know as to that; but I do undertake to say that it would be wonderfully unwise in connection with any other body of men on earth.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But this court has no authority to reverse any case. It simply makes a finding and reports it to Congress. It is for Congress to determine on the showing made what should be done.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, I understand that.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Now, there ought to be some means of reviewing these proceedings as new evidence is discovered. How much wiser is it for a man coming with that kind of a claim to Congress to submit such testimony than to come asking relief, as many do, without any evidence whatever to sustain the claim?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It is true there is no authority to reverse a decision, as the gentleman says; but if it does not amount to a reversal, practically the whole proceedings as a court of review is of no importance, except that the man comes back with the approval of the court of review upon new evidence, all the parties dead who can or who probably would rebut the testimony and show its unreliability, yet he comes with the new case before Congress, and I ask the gentleman how any defense is to be made in Congress against such a claim?

Unless there is some peculiar necessity in connection with the Army that does not apply to any other individual or body of men on earth, I very much doubt the wisdom of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I will say to the gentleman that the difficulty is that our military jurisprudence has been faulty in not having a board of review before. I admit that difficulty will arise, but do not let us continue to perpetuate a wrong. Let us commence now to correct that wrong and do justice to military men, just as you do justice in civil cases, by having a court of appeal or review.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Let me say to my friend that if there is no court of appeal from the judgment of a court-martial, and if it is wise to have one, I stand ready to provide one, but let it be in this line: If there ought to be an appeal, constitute your tribunal and let your appeal be prosecuted, and prosecuted at once, as it is in other matters.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Just one word. Do not make a rule for the Army that would allow one generation to die before this board of review passes on a case.

Mr. COX. Let the board of review pass on cases which arise after it is constituted.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. We want to get rid of these cases, in which the attention of Congress is constantly being called to alleged injustice on the part of courts-martial.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I want to say to my friend that while I believe in standing by the regular Army, and while I recognize the justice and importance of standing by it, constituting as it does the arm of force of the Government; while I would be more than just, and while I would be liberal to it, yet I want to say to my friend that the bare fact of the Army being set apart from other citizens begets more or less of suspicion and more or less of criticism; and I want to submit to the gentleman whether it is wise to enact this legislation. I speak now as a friend of the Army. Establish your court of review or appeal from the findings of courts-martial, if that ought to be done. But let the appeal be prosecuted just as it is now prosecuted in civil cases. Do not let a generation die before some man who is rightfully convicted takes his appeal when the circumstances are forgotten and the men are all dead who might contradict suborned testimony. In such a case a man might come in and ask for a court of review and get it, and, backed up by its recommendations after everybody has lost interest in the case, appeal to Congress to correct an alleged wrong, when in fact there was no wrong done him.

Mr. COX. Let the board of review consider cases that arise after the court is created. That I understand to be the gentleman's proposition, while this proposition is to go back behind that.

Mr. McMILLIN. I want to state that while this is called a board of review, it is not in fact a board of review. It is an original board, because it has authority to summon new witnesses, to bring in new testimony, and to determine a case upon new facts that were not before the old board. Therefore, it is not in any correct sense of the word a board of review. It is an original board to retry new cases and may rely on new evidence.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether, in his judgment, Congress has the power to set aside the judgment of a court-martial?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No, and this bill does not propose to do anything of the kind. This simply provides what may be termed an auxiliary court, to assist Congress in getting at the facts.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. If Congress has not the power to set aside the judgment of a court-martial, what is the use of creating this board of review?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Congress is all the time doing it. It has set aside many verdicts.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Congress is all the while called upon in these cases. There are many cases before the Committee on Military Affairs, and gentlemen are continually insisting that we should investigate cases which occurred thirty years ago.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Will this bill relieve a private soldier who finds himself on the record as a deserter when for twenty years he never knew he was on the record as a deserter? There are cases of that kind, where men apply for pensions and the record shows them to be deserters, when in fact they had no knowledge of any such record. Will this bill afford relief in such cases?

Mr. MARSH. No; it will not.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. It does cover all such cases, when a soldier has been adjudged a deserter by a court-martial.

Mr. MARSH. Not unless a man was tried by a court-martial.

Mr. PICKLER. Suppose he is reported on the rolls as a deserter, and dishonorably discharged. Can he come before this board?

Mr. MARSH. No.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The provisions of the general laws for the discharge of deserters are very liberal. There may be cases in which men situated as pointed out by the gentleman from New York might have the benefit of this law.

Mr. PICKLER. Why should he not be allowed?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. They may be allowed the benefit of this law.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. And it is for the benefit of commissioned officers and enlisted men.

Mr. PICKLER. That is where there is a court-martial.

Mr. MARSH. That is where he is declared a deserter by court-martial.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he has any information as to the number of court-martials ordered in the cases of commissioned officers, say, during the last twelve months, or for any stated period?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have no information as to that fact; and let me give you the reason for not being informed on that fact. It is because this bill is not intended so much to meet cases of that kind as to meet cases that occurred twenty-five or thirty years ago.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it not true that the number of officers ordered before court-martials, in proportion to their numbers, is very much larger than persons upon indictments?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I can not answer that question. I have not the figures, but I think it likely there are.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I desire to say that it is so because of the strict discipline which must be maintained in the Army. An army is a body of disciplined men who surrender much of their liberty, while civil law restrains other persons or citizens the least possible, leaving them the greatest possible liberty.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to have this information, for it aids me in the point I desire to make. Let the peculiar character of the tribunal be remembered before which army officers are tried. Almost invariably they are their friends. They come from the same school. They have the pride of profession. They have the purpose to preserve the honor of the guild, if I may use the phrase. I undertake to say that as a rule no tribunals that try men charged with offenses come together so favorably disposed towards the accused as do these courts-martial when they are brought together to try their brother officers.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. My friend is mistaken. It is because of this desire and determination on the part of officers to maintain the honor of the guild that they are so very severe in their judgments.

Mr. HEPBURN. They may be disposed to be just, but in this leaning of men to men of common interest, the men are alive to the case of the brother officer who is to be tried. Now, if this is true, why is it necessary that we should not have laws analogous to those that are always observed in the trial of all other persons? A man charged under an indictment has a right to an appeal, but it is to an appellate court. It is for a review of the laws that they can appeal. Here you do more than that. You constitute this appellate court a nisi prius court, and you not only allow a review of the law, but you allow a review of the facts in the case; and that too under the extraordinary circumstance of having no statute of limitations.

Mr. MARSH. Not only a review of the facts, but the introduction of new, and entirely new, facts in addition.

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Now, I think that is unjust, unfair, and unnecessary. I believe myself that in time of peace that courts-martial should not exist. I believe officers of the Army should be tried just as all citizens are tried, tried upon indictment, tried in the same way, subject to the same tribunal; but if that is not to be the policy, I can see no reason for still enlarging their rights.

Then, again, Mr. Chairman, in some provisions of this bill I think there is fault. Here, for example, as to the payment of witnesses. They must serve without pay; but there is a compulsory process to compel their attendance. They must go whether they are paid or not. Why should this innovation in the law take place in the interest of these men; and mind you, it is only men who have been dishonorably discharged by what I will characterize, and I believe justly, a court composed of their friends. I do not believe this legislation is necessary or ought to be indulged in. Another objection I find to this bill is the uses to which it may be put. This privilege of review is not given to all men alike. It is only given to such as the Secretary of War chooses to favor. If some favorite of his meets disaster at the hands of a court-martial, that man may have his case reviewed; but not so with all other men. If we are to have this legislation, let us have it fair, and let us apply it to all men alike, and the analogies of law in regard to all other criminals be observed and maintained.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be closed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by paragraphs.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to appoint a board of review, to consist of three members and a recorder, from officers of the Army on the active or retired list, to review the proceedings, findings, and sentence of any court-martial for the trial of a commissioned officer or enlisted man, either of the regular Army or volunteer forces, where the accused has been dishonorably discharged from the military service of the United States, or to review the proceedings, findings, and decision of a retiring board, when an officer has been wholly retired from the Army.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, in line 9, between the word "been" and the word "dishonorably," there should be inserted the words "cashiered or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend on line 12, page 1, by inserting after the word "Army" the words "or such as have been summarily dismissed from the Army."

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. That is a good amendment; I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is acceptable to the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the said board of review shall have jurisdiction of all such cases as shall be ordered before it by the Secretary of War, and its members shall serve without compensation, except such as they are now receiving, and may be relieved from time to time as the exigencies of the service may require: Provided, That when officers of the retired list serve upon such board they shall receive the same pay as officers of their grade upon the active list.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the provision in section 2, beginning with the word "provided," in line 6, and ending with the paragraph. The effect of that amendment would be to leave retired officers serving on this board to receive the same pay when thus serving that they receive when not serving.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is acceptable.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend lines 2 and 3 of section 2 by striking out the words "as shall be ordered before it by the Secretary of War" and inserting "referred to in section 1;" so that the provision will read "that the said board of review shall have jurisdiction of all such cases as are referred to in section 1."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Does the gentleman think that that is a wise amendment? Of course, the Secretary of War might refuse in any given case to order a review by the board, but the purpose of the committee in reporting that provision was to have officers who feel aggrieved and who desire a review, to present their cases in the first instance to the War Department. In many cases these gentlemen claim that they have had no hearing at all, in others that they have since discovered testimony in their favor, and in some cases they say that they were not present at all, and have since discovered that testimony was given against them which they knew nothing about at the time. Now, it was the opinion of the committee that it would be wise to let all these officers make their application in the first instance to the Secretary of War or to the President. I do not wish, however, to contest the amendment if the gentleman still thinks it is a wise one.

Mr. HEPBURN. The only purpose of the amendment is to take away this power of discrimination from the Secretary of War, so that all men who want to appear before this board of review may have the privilege of doing so, and not have the privilege confined to those who can get the ear of the Secretary of War.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Well, if the gentleman thinks the amendment is wise, I shall not contest it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Would not the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa result in sending every case that is tried by court-martial before this board?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. It would. I think the Secretary of War can be trusted to do absolute justice and to order a case before the board wherever there is a scintilla of reason for doing so. The kind of men we have in that position will do justice. The present Secretary of War could not do any injustice.

Mr. HULL. I think my colleague [Mr. HEPBURN] will recognize the fact that if his amendment should be adopted, it will be twenty years before the board of review can catch up with its work. It seems to me that some showing ought to be made before a case can go before the board.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know how many cases there may be to go before the board, but I do know that we should regard it as a very great hardship if there was some censor placed over each litigant who wanted to appeal to a court of review in a criminal case. We would not submit to that for a moment, and I do not see why we should submit to it in this case. If it is a wise thing, if it is necessary to effectuate justice in these cases, to have this review, then let it apply to every case and not merely to those which may happen to meet the approval of the Secretary of War. The Secretary will not act in these matters personally. He will remand them to some inferior, possibly to a clerk in some division, so that really you are not intrusting this power to a high functionary but possibly to some clerk.

I am not willing that this censorship shall be exercised in that way. If it is right to provide for this appeal at all, let us extend the privilege freely to all persons who may claim that injustice has been done them and that they ought to have a second day in court.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the proposition of this bill is not to create a tribunal in the nature of a final court of appeal to decide these cases; it is simply, for the convenience of Congress, to establish a tribunal before which evidence can be submitted and the cases fully investigated, and then referred to Congress for action. This is not, as my colleague seems to assume, a proposition to establish a final court of appeal.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that even if a man does not get a hearing before this board of review, that does not shut him off from appealing to Congress. He has still left the same rights that he has now.

Mr. HULL. Certainly. The idea of the Committee on Military Affairs was this: We are overloaded with work in the line of reviewing the decisions of courts-martial. Our hearings in such cases are purely ex parte, and we are able to devote only a few minutes to each case. A large number of cases are clearly meritorious, while on the other hand many of them are not; and our idea was to provide some tribunal by which the facts could be investigated and submitted to Congress for action. It seems to me that the bill as originally submitted was a good one.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. If we do not find that it is broad enough, we can make it broader in another Congress. Let us pass this bill and make a good start in the right direction.

Mr. HULL. Take another point. Gentlemen talk about these reviews going back twenty or thirty years. Why, sir, nearly all our bills relating to these matters go back for that number of years. Immediately after the war there were retiring boards which discriminated against volunteer officers who had been promoted to the regular Army. If such cases were submitted to the Congress of the United States authoritatively, Congress would in many cases reinstate officers who had been arbitrarily retired by the action of boards composed of regular army officers. But the report of the Military Committee, hastily prepared, does not carry the weight it should have.

It has been suggested that these military men have trials before their friends. Let me say that in many cases of courts-martial of army officers that have been before the Military Committee there has been shown the most absolute and direct prejudice influencing the action of such courts; the findings were the result of jealousies and petty bickerings among officers of the Army. I think that the great benefit of this bill will be that we shall have an authoritative sifting of facts which will enable us to do justice in the action taken by Congress, whereas at present the findings of the Military Committee in many cases do not result in securing justice because of our inability to get our bills passed.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Does not my friend know that neither the Judiciary Committee nor Congress is loaded down with bills introduced for the purpose of reversing the action of the courts in criminal cases?

Mr. HULL. And does not my friend from Illinois know that in criminal cases the law provides for appeals from one court to another, so that the parties concerned may have an adjudication to determine whether the law has not been wrongly applied and injustice done? In such cases there is a jury of twelve men, not selected with the idea that they are either friends or enemies of the accused—disinterested men, his peers. Such men try him and ascertain the facts. And then if the court has erred in regard to the law, as some courts-martial do, an appeal can be taken to a higher court, where the question of law can be adjudicated and the case sent back for retrial if error or wrong has been committed.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And yet, notwithstanding that, I have no doubt more persons are wrongly convicted in cases tried on the criminal side of our courts than are wrongly convicted by courts-martial—I mean more in proportion to the number of cases tried. Now, Congress is not bothered in the one class of cases, because it is the policy of the law and of Congress that there shall be a finality in the determination of such cases. If in such cases as the gentleman has put, cases tried before courts-martial, there ought to be an appellate court I am ready to vote for such a court.

Mr. HULL. I think my friend from Illinois misinterprets this bill in the statement he has made. The court here provided is not an appellate court. It is simply a court of review. It has no power to reach a final decision; it can only submit the facts to Congress, which is the body to decide finally upon the question. The bill does not propose to take from Congress one particle of its power. The findings of this court of review are not absolutely conclusive. The court will simply submit to the proper officers of the Government a finding as to the facts which must be acted upon by Congress before the findings of the court can have any effect whatever.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been very carefully considered by the Committee on Military Affairs, on which there are ten ex-soldiers and ex-officers of the Union Army and one ex-officer of the Confederate army. The members of the committee have had the opportunity to become acquainted with this class of cases and to see the necessity for a bill of this character.

Mr. HEPBURN. My colleague [Mr. HULL] suggests that one of the functions of this court of review would be to transmit the evidence it may take to Congress for its advisement.

Mr. BINGHAM. After approval by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HEPBURN. There is nothing in the bill with regard to transmitting the evidence. The bill simply provides that the proceedings of this court of review, its findings and recommendations, shall be sent up—not the record of the testimony.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Well, we will put in a provision in regard to the testimony.

Mr. HEPBURN. Again, the gentleman from West Virginia suggests that this bill in its present form does not change in any manner the rights of the individual who may appeal to the justice of Congress. I submit that it does. Suppose that this individual happens not to be among those favored by the Secretary of War; suppose the Secretary refuses to send his case to the court of review. Then the individual comes to Congress handicapped by that fact, and his condition is made so much worse; because it will be said that he has had an opportunity to seek a reëxamination of his case by the court of review, that he has appealed to the Secretary of War, that the Secretary has examined his case and has refused to transmit it.

Thus there is substantially an additional finding against him; and he is not in the same status that he otherwise would be. His case is in a worse condition than if this bill had never passed.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The committee is willing to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HEPBURN, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That it shall be lawful for said board of review to hear and consider any additional evidence in each case as may properly be brought before it, under such rules and regulations as may be established by the Secretary of War, and it is hereby authorized to subpœna witnesses and to administer oaths when necessary; and the proceedings and findings, with the recommendations of said board, shall be forwarded to the Secretary of War for his consideration and action: Provided, That the Government shall be put to no expense on account of witnesses summoned on the part of the applicant.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move to amend by inserting after the word "findings," in line 6 of the section just read, these words: "Together with the evidence upon which the findings are based."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend section 3 by striking out the word "provided" and the following words in that section:

Provided, That the Government shall be put to no expense on account of witnesses summoned on the part of the applicant.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House as amended favorably.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I desire to make a motion that is privileged before that. In order to test the sense of the committee I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion takes precedence.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Should not the motion be that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. That is the correct form, and I modify the motion.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. CANNON of Illinois, and it was rejected.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I now renew my motion that the committee rise and report the bill favorably as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 199, had directed him to report the same to the House with amendments, and with the recommendation that as so amended it do pass.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON of Illinois) there were—ayes 77, noes 5.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

ADMISSION OF NEW MEXICO.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Rules to submit the report I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this order the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 353) "to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," and that said bill be considered in the House; that after three hours' consideration thereof, if so much be necessary, the previous question shall be considered as ordered on pending amendments and the engrossment and third reading and final passage of the bill; and then, without intervening motion, the vote shall be taken upon the third reading thereof, and upon the final passage of the bill; and, should a motion to reconsider be made, upon a motion to lay the latter motion on the table.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I demand the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he will allow an amendment in regard to the Territory of Oklahoma?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That amendment would hardly be in order on this bill. Besides, it would hardly be the province of myself, having charge of this rule, to permit an amendment of that kind. The previous question has been ordered.

Mr. REED. There will be no difficulty in getting at it by unanimous consent.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I would not guarantee unanimous consent upon any proposition; and besides, if the gentleman will observe, there is a limited time. This bill having already been debated for a day in the House, this rule provides for three hours more. Now the bill for the admission of Oklahoma may need as much time as has been given to the bill to admit New Mexico.

Mr. REED. That can be arranged. Will the gentleman inform the House whether the Committee on Rules have had a petition addressed to them by the Committee on Territories for time for consideration of the Oklahoma bill?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I could not inform the House upon that subject, for the reason that I have not gone over all the resolutions and petitions that have been sent to the Committee on Rules. I observe that there are quite a number of them, perhaps twenty-five or thirty.

Mr. REED. You have no knowledge of any such thing?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have no knowledge of any such resolution.

Mr. REED. I am informed that such a petition was presented to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That may be so. It was proper that this bill, having been considered under a previous order for one day, should be disposed of by itself.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Just as was done in the admission of the other Territories in the Fifty-first Congress.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me rather a singular transaction that the people of a Territory which, if I am correctly informed, has 300,000 inhabitants, 95 per cent of them born in this country, citizens of the United States, have not been able to secure time for the consideration of their case, while this bill, which has been rejected time out of mind by various Congresses, should receive the support of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will the gentleman permit me to say that at the time the rule was reported authorizing the consideration of the bill to admit the Territory of New Mexico as a State, the bill concerning the Territory of Oklahoma had not yet been reported. Now, with that the Committee on Rules has nothing to do, and it is in nowise responsible for it.

Mr. REED. But the bill is reported to-day.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There are a great many other measures reported.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. REED. I should be very sorry not to permit the gentleman from Alabama to participate in the debate.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The gentleman says it is strange that the Committee on Rules should report a resolution for the consideration of the bill to admit New Mexico. Let me ask the gentleman if it is not very strange that the Republican party has stood here in power for thirty years refusing a civilization older than Maine can boast of, older than New York can boast of, older than the civilization of any of our States, admission into the sisterhood of States? [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. REED. Does it not occur to the gentleman from Alabama that he has put into that question something in the nature of what would be personal vehemence if the momentum had had more weight attached to it?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. It was the truth, and truth always has momentum.

Mr. REED. Does it not strike him that he has been bringing into this discussion, which concerns a constitutional question largely, some little element of partisanship? And when we consider how free the Southern gentleman always is from partisanship, is he not a little ashamed that he has broken over the invariable rule of his section of the country upon a topic like this? [Laughter.] I must say that it saddens me so much that I can not proceed. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to have the rule reported again.

The SPEAKER. It will be again reported.

Mr. REED. I reserve my time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the rule.

The resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] if under that order as it is framed the bill would be open to amendment?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I think it would be open to amendment. The usual amendments which may be offered to a bill in the House may be offered to this bill.

Mr. BURROWS. But this is to be considered for three hours under general debate in the House, and a gentleman might take the floor and occupy it an hour, and somebody else might occupy it for another hour. There is no proposition for the offering of amendments. If it was to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole there would be no difficulty about it. We simply want to avoid any controversy about amendments.

Mr. PERKINS. Is it not the same question that was involved the other day, when we had to amend a rule?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No; the same question is not involved.

Mr. BURROWS. I think there ought to be some understanding about that. There ought to be an opportunity to amend, in other words.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If there is any question as to that——

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes there will be no objection to adding that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BURROWS. Let it be amended so as to read, that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have no objection to that modification.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the rule as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

That after three hours' consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minutes rule, or so much thereof, etc.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman.

Mr. REED. I reserve my time, and yield such portion as needed to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa rose, and the Chair stated that he could not recognize the gentleman.

Mr. REED. I stated that I reserved the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood.

Mr. REED (continuing). With the intention of yielding it to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman. The gentleman from Iowa rose and addressed the Chair, and the Chair stated that he could not recognize him, the gentleman from Maine having control of the time. The gentleman has nine minutes.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose in rising now to throw any obstruction whatever in the way of the passage of the bill for the admission of New Mexico to statehood. No man who has lived in a Territory will protest or object to a people residing in a Territory coming to Congress and petitioning to be relieved from the thraldom which we have had to undergo in the last two years in my Territory. I have been somewhat surprised, however, at the course of the gentleman from Ohio who presented this rule. The first proposition which I submitted to this House upon taking my seat here last August, was an amendment to the rules authorizing an increase in the membership of the Committees on Public Lands and Indian Affairs, so that two Delegates could serve on those committees instead of one.

The gentleman from Ohio, who was then in charge of the report of the Committee on Rules of this House, opposed my proposition, and said that the Territories were about to be admitted to statehood; that we had only four Territories, and there were ten committees at our disposal, and that should be sufficient. It was the first time in my recollection that an effort had ever been made to curtail or reduce the representation of Territories in Congress upon a committee in which the Delegates were interested.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will the gentleman point out any Congress in which two Delegates were authorized to be put upon the same committee?

Mr. FLYNN. If the gentleman will refer to the records of the Fifty-second Congress and of the Fifty-third Congress, he will find that there were two Delegates upon the Committee on Territories, and are now acting upon it. I asked for the same right of representation upon the Committee on Public Lands and the Committee on Indian Affairs, because I was more interested in the matters pending before that committee than any other gentleman upon the floor of this House. The gentleman from Ohio opposed it then, as the representative of the Committee on Rules, claiming that we were about to be admitted into statehood and did not need that representation.

Do not misapprehend me. I have no stone to throw in the way of the admission of the Territory of New Mexico. If my vote could decide the proposition, and would take it beyond the White House, New Mexico would be a State to-morrow; but I do have some interest in the Committee on Territories. The other day that committee signed a request to the chairman to present to the Committee on Rules asking them to set aside a day for the consideration of and a vote on the proposition for the admission into the Union of Oklahoma. Nothing has been done with that petition by the Committee on Rules, and the gentleman in charge of this resolution states that if such a resolution or request ever was presented to the Committee on Rules he does not know anything about it.

There is no political party in my Territory—and we have three of them there—that has not resolved at all their conventions in favor of statehood. I do not see what objection can be made to allowing us to have a day to discuss the Oklahoma bill and to have us treated in the same manner as the other Territories are. I want to state frankly now, either for the edification of this House or the country, that I do not believe a single Territory will be admitted while Grover Cleveland is in the White House. My Territory is somewhat different from the others. Those of you in the East who seem to be afraid of "silver Senators," as you have styled them, and who talk about "rotten boroughs," need have no fear of Oklahoma. We have to-day in my Territory more school children attending school than the entire citizenship in one of the Territories whose bill has passed this House.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Why do you not state that about Nevada?

Mr. FLYNN. I know nothing about Nevada.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. You can read something about it in the census reports.

Mr. FLYNN. I was not in Nevada when it was admitted; but I am confident that in the State of Nevada every vote cast there is counted; and I trust the gentleman from Ohio can say the same thing for his side of the House. [Applause.] Our Territory to-day has more inhabitants than any other Territory in the Union, and we have the proud record that ours is a Territory of people of American birth, as our inhabitants are 95 per cent native-born Americans.

In the Territory of Oklahoma the words "anarchist" and "socialist" are unknown. You taught us to vote in your districts before we went to Oklahoma. You were glad to receive our votes before we went to reside there, whether in the States of North and East or South even, when you were candidates for Congress; and why will you not now allow us Statehood and enjoy the same privileges we had before we went there?

You then allowed us to vote for President. Every letter they wrote you then was promptly answered, because the writer was a constituent. But because these people have seen fit to go out there into the grandest new country that has ever been opened up in the history of this nation, and perhaps because through a misfortune—probably it will be so regarded on the other side of this House—the people of Oklahoma have seen fit to vote the Republican ticket—you are going to stand here and say that the other three Territories which elect Democratic delegates shall be entitled to Statehood regardless of qualification or anything else, and that Oklahoma, because she is Republican, shall not be admitted.

I do not deny that the other Territories are entitled to admission to Statehood. But if you lived in my Territory and saw fifty or sixty "carpet-baggers" sent in there in defiance of the plank in your platform which guaranteed us "home rule," you would be standing here just as I am, and asking at the hands of Congress relief from that yoke. You would ask that you and your neighbors should be treated as you had been in the States from which you had come.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE].

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr FLYNN] complains that his Territory has not been given representation on the Committee on Public Lands. I submit that with the record of this Congress and the action of that committee toward the Territory of Oklahoma he is the last man who ought to complain that his Territory has not been fairly treated. I do not believe that he has submitted to that committee a solitary measure demanded by his people which has not been favorably reported or a substitute for it; and I believe that all his propositions in one shape or another have been passed by the House, and most of them by both Houses.

Mr. FLYNN. Allow me a word. I find no fault whatever with the Committee on Public Lands. I was referring to the gentleman from Ohio in his opposition to the motion which I had made for additional representation. Let me say that nobody has treated the Territory of Oklahoma more fairly than the Speaker of this House and the gentleman who is now on the floor [Mr. McRAE] representing the Committee on Public Lands. I have no fault to find in that regard. But we are demanding statehood; that is what we are asking now.

Mr. McRAE. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will dismiss that matter with a single remark. The gentleman admits that he can not justly complain of any action of the Committee on Public Lands, nor of this Congress, so far as legislation is concerned. He has gotten all his people have asked for, although he has repeatedly assailed the Democratic Administration. The Territory has been treated as fairly by a Democratic Congress as if it was Democratic.

Now, as to the statehood proposition. I hold in my hand his own bill for the admission of Oklahoma, and it is entirely different from that reported by the Committee on Territories. It provides for incorporating into the new State the Five Civilized Tribes, still recognizing and preserving the Indian tribal governments.

I know something of the Oklahoma people, and I say to this House that I do not believe that one-third of the people of Oklahoma, including Republicans, Democrats, and Populists, are in favor of the admission of Oklahoma until the future status of the Indian country as regards the General Government has been settled. I do not believe that the bill which has been reported to this House meets the approval of any political party in Oklahoma. All parties demand, if it can be had, single statehood for Oklahoma and the Indian Territory. There is no man who will go further than myself in promoting the interest and prosperity of that honest, courageous, patriotic body of citizens who inhabit that Territory.

I do not believe that they want or need statehood until the Indian problem is finally settled. They are not now prepared for admission with the present lines; they do desire and have asked for it with the Indian country, and they are entitled to this. Whenever they have made expression they have almost with one voice declared a preference for single statehood, that is, statehood of the Territory of Oklahoma and the Indian country. Now, Mr. Speaker, until the Dawes Commission has reported upon the propositions submitted to the Indians, or until Congress is ready to take hold of the question, as I am almost certain it will do this at the next session of this Congress, no enabling act should be passed for the Territory of Oklahoma.

When that has been done it can be made one of the greatest and grandest States in the Union. They have as many whites in the Indian country as in Oklahoma, and are as well prepared for statehood. It is to the interest of all concerned to delay the consideration until it can all come in together upon equal terms. We can not safely take up the question of Statehood for the Indian Territory until the Commission has made a report. But when that is done I shall insist upon single Statehood.

I do not undertake to say whether the State will be Democratic or Republican; but, without regard to that, I say when that time comes I will go as far as anyone in advocating the admission of all that country as one State; but until that green spot is wiped from the map of the United States and the Indian governments prohibited the people of Oklahoma do not want admission and we do not want it. Let us, like patriotic legislators, like men who have the interest of Oklahoma and the whole country at heart, insist that the Indian problem shall be settled before we undertake to make a State out of Oklahoma, leaving as large a body of white people and as large an area of better land by its side unprovided for. I ask you, gentlemen, to remember that this can not be admitted into the Union except as a separate State. It can not be attached to another State without the consent of that State and if we dispose of Oklahoma now we must perpetuate the tribal governments of the Indians indefinitely. They are un-American, and can not stand much longer.

Now, the gentleman from Oklahoma knows, his bill shows that he knew when he began, that his people wanted single Statehood, not dual Statehood. His people earnestly desire single Statehood; and when the proper time comes they will join one and all in support of such a proposition. So far as I am concerned, I want it understood here and in Oklahoma that this Democratic Congress, if you please, is in favor of the proposition to make one State out of the two Territories, and that it is not afraid to go to the people of Oklahoma upon the idea that the admission of Oklahoma shall be postponed until the question of single Statehood can be rationally and honestly considered. I believe that I can safely promise that this will be accomplished at the next session.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask a vote on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LACEY. I make the following motion, to recommit this resolution with instructions.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I think a motion to recommit would not be in order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recommit with instructions to provide also for the consideration of the bill to admit Oklahoma.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I make the point of order against that motion.

Mr. LACEY. What is the point of order?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. This is a proposition to do indirectly what can not be done directly. The proposition of the gentleman is equivalent to an amendment which would not be in order——

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to hear from the other side.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, the rule brought in by the Committee on Rules is one fixing a certain order of business—providing a certain order in which the House shall transact business for a given number of hours on this day. Now, the Committee on Rules may provide in that order that the morning hour shall first be dispensed with, or that the call of committees should be first dispensed with and that this bill should be taken up, and after its consideration other matters should then be taken up and considered by the House during the number of hours set apart by the committee in the rule which we are considering.

Now, we go into the question of the admission of Territories. The rule deals with that question. Here are two Territories clamoring for admission; the question involved is the admission of the Territory of New Mexico, and the same rule therefore ought to provide, and may properly provide, that the debate upon both of these bills, one after the other, shall be permitted to run a given length of time, and that the vote should then be taken upon each separate bill. This House may be willing to vote for the admission of a Democratic State, provided equally fair treatment is accorded to this side of the House on the same question.

This amendment or motion to recommit provides that action shall be taken on the admission of both the States, one with a population of 250,000 of that "ancient civilization" the gentleman from Alabama referred to—the Aztec civilization—and the other with a population of 300,000 Anglo-Saxons, ready for admission to State citizenship in the Territory of Oklahoma. I see no reason, therefore, why the two can not be considered during the same number of hours. The motion to recommit makes no other change in the order except to provide for the consideration of the admission of Oklahoma. The propositions are of the same character. They relate to the same subject-matter.

Now, the Committee on Rules may bring in a resolution, and it is no unusual thing, providing for instance that the Army appropriation bill shall be considered for a given number of hours, and then a vote shall be taken upon the bill; and immediately following that, that the consideration of the Naval appropriation bill shall be entered upon, and that the vote shall be taken after a certain number of hours, the time for both bills being disposed of in one single rule. It is in the power of the House to do so, and it has been done in fixing the order of business over and over again on reports from the Committee on Rules providing for the transaction of the public business.

In the Fifty-first Congress, first session, page 2012, a rule was adopted giving two days for the consideration of a number of public building bills, and thus giving time for a large number of the same class of bills in a single order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa will observe that this rule does not deal with an order of business as suggested by the gentleman, such as it sometimes does, to wit, that certain days shall be devoted to the consideration of measures reported from one particular committee, and certain days devoted to the consideration of measures reported from another committee. Nor could it be regarded as dealing with the question of the assignment of time for the consideration of reports of committees. This rule specifically provides for the consideration of a particular bill—for the admission of the Territory of New Mexico—prescribes the time that the bill may be considered by the House as in Committee of the Whole, and fixes the limit of time within which the vote shall be taken.

Therefore the Chair does not think it would be in order to amend that rule to embrace the consideration of the Territory of Oklahoma, because it is a different subject-matter. If it would not be in order to amend the resolution by embracing that question, then it would not be in order to do the same thing by a motion to recommit, because that is but another method of amendment, and we can not do by indirection what the rules forbid to be done directly.

Therefore the Chair thinks that the motion to recommit with instructions, suggested by the gentleman from Iowa, is not in order, and the question is on the adoption of the resolution reported from the Committee on Rules.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 353) to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. This bill has been read to the House when previously considered, and I suppose it is not necessary to read it again.

The SPEAKER. Under this order the bill is to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, under the five-minute rule, and general debate under that order is exhausted, so that the bill will be read by sections for amendment and discussion under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the inhabitants of all that part of the area of the United States now constituting the Territory of New Mexico, as at present described, may become the State of New Mexico, as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That all persons who shall have resided within the limits of said proposed State for sixty days, and are otherwise qualified by the laws of said Territory to vote for representatives to the Legislative Assembly thereof, are hereby authorized to vote for and choose delegates to form a convention in said Territory; and the qualifications for delegates to such convention shall be such as by the laws of said Territory persons are required to possess to be eligible to the Legislative Assembly thereof; and the aforesaid delegates to form said convention shall be apportioned among the several counties within the limits of the proposed State in proportion to the population of each county by the census of 1890, exclusive of all Indians, upon a basis of one delegate for each two thousand inhabitants in each county, and one additional delegate for a fraction of over one thousand inhabitants therein, the same to be apportioned as follows: Bernalillo County, 9 delegates; Chaves County, 1 delegate; Colfax County, 3 delegates; Dona Ana County, 5 delegates; Eddy County, 1 delegate; Grant County, 5 delegates; Lincoln County, 2 delegates; Mora County, 5 delegates; Rio Arriba County, 6 delegates; San Juan County, 1 delegate; Union County, 1 delegate; San Miguel County, 12 delegates; Santa Fe County, 7 delegates; Sierra County, 2 delegates; Socorro County, 5 delegates; Taos County, 5 delegates, and Valencia County, 5 delegates; 75 delegates in all; and the governor of said Territory shall by proclamation order an election of the delegates aforesaid in said Territory, to be held on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1894, which proclamation shall be issued within ninety days after the passage of this act; and such election shall be conducted, the returns made, the result ascertained, and the certificates to persons elected to such convention issued in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of the said Territory regulating elections therein for Delegate to Congress. All persons resident in said proposed State, who are qualified voters of said Territory, as herein provided, shall be entitled to vote upon the election of delegates and upon the ratification or rejection of the constitution, under such rules and regulations as said convention may prescribe, not in conflict with this act.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer an amendment to that section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OUTHWAITE). There are certain committee amendments to that section. According to the print of the bill as read, in line 21, page 2, there is an amendment, and also in line 23, just below it.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I move that the committee amendment in line 21, to insert the words "Guadalupe County, two delegates," be agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Also in line 23 there is an amendment to strike out the word "twelve" and insert the word "ten;" so as to read: "San Miguel County, ten delegates.'

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to amend line 29, page 2, by striking out the word "first" and inserting the word "third;" also in line 36, page 3, to amend by striking out the words "delegate to Congress" and inserting the words "members of the Legislature."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, in support of these amendments, that this bill differs in this respect from either of the other bills reported for the admission of Territories as States into the Union. The election for delegates to the constitutional convention is called at the time of the regular election in November. In my judgment this election ought to be held separately from the annual election, into which partisan politics so largely enter. That would secure a better class of delegates to this convention and free it from the partisan politics which must largely dominate at that time.

With reference to the second amendment, in line 36, on page 3, let me say that I desire to make this bill conform to like bills this House has passed hitherto, and make the regulations therein the same as for members of the Legislature, so that the returns shall be canvassed the same as in the case of members of the Legislature. I can see no reason why this bill should differ from the bill for the admission of Utah and the bill for the admission of Arizona, and other bills that we have passed for the admission of Territories to statehood. Certainly when you elect these delegates to your constitutional convention, the same machinery employed as in the case of the election of members of the Legislature ought to be employed.

If it be desired to eliminate partisanship from the consideration of this bill, to bring the people of the Territory to a judgment upon the one question of their admission to the Union, and the formation of a constitution that they will approve, then certainly the same machinery should be employed that you employ in the election of members of the Legislature. I know of no good reason why these returns should be canvassed by the Secretary of State.

For my own part, Mr. Speaker, I am not here concerned as to the future politics of New Mexico. I believe that the Republicans of that Territory are willing to take their chances with the Democrats in the future elections that may be held there. I understand that it is the unanimous sentiment of both political parties in the Territory of New Mexico that they should be promptly admitted to statehood. I read in this report, setting forth the advantages of New Mexico, that the people of that Territory are largely occupied in the sheep and cattle industries.

If that be the case, I think if we can provide for the early admission of New Mexico, that the Republicans do not need to hesitate about taking their chances with the Democrats of that Territory. So I desire here on this occasion to raise no partisan question; and if we here on this side of the Chamber are willing to eliminate that, I desire to know from the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. JOSEPH] why he is not willing, in the construction of the bill, to eliminate that question also?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JOSEPH. Mr. Speaker, I will say for the information of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PERKINS] that all the citizens of New Mexico, irrespective of political parties, have been in favor of the immediate admission of that Territory into the Union as a State; but during the session of the Thirtieth Territorial Assembly that Assembly appointed a commission to audit and investigate what is commonly known in New Mexico as the floating militia debt of that Territory, a militia debt which was largely incurred during the war of the rebellion, in defense of the Union. This investigation was promulgated for the purpose of ascertaining what the legal status of that debt was, preparatory to the admission of New Mexico into statehood.

That commission, I am informed, reported, after due deliberation and investigation into the matter, that there were more of these militia warrants in circulation in the Territory of New Mexico than there were vouchers for them in the hands of the adjutant general of the militia of that Territory.

And it is for that reason that every citizen and taxpayer in the Territory of New Mexico is now anxious for a postponement of admission until New Mexico can have another legislative assembly meet, and act, and upon a legal and fair basis fund this militia debt of the Territory.

The new State will not only assume but be called upon to pay this militia debt that the Territory has incurred; and it was for that reason that the Committee on Territories saw proper or deemed it proper to postpone the admission until New Mexico could have another legislative assembly, so as to fund this militia debt upon a fair and equitable basis. I ask this House to sustain the action of the Committee on Territories, who have passed upon the question, on the reasons I have given.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to have the gentleman from New Mexico make some explanation of the change in this bill from that for the admission of Arizona and Utah in the matter I have pointed out on page 3, line 36.

Mr. JOSEPH. I have tried to explain to the gentleman the motive of this postponement of admission.

Mr. PERKINS. It is not the matter of postponement that I speak of. If you will look at your bill you will see.

Mr. JOSEPH. Where does the gentleman's amendment come in.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to strike out "Delegate to Congress" and insert in lieu thereof "members of the Legislature."

Mr. JOSEPH. Oh, I do not object to that. That is acceptable.

The CHAIRMAN. The first amendment of the gentleman from Iowa was to strike out the word "first," on page 2.

Mr. PERKINS. My first amendment was to cause the election to be held at a time separate from your political election. Now, I am not particular as to what the time shall be. Any date that the gentleman may name would be acceptable, but I do not think that the elections ought to be held at the same time as the regular election.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Is it not better from the fact that at the time of the regular election you get a fuller expression of the people's sentiment on the question. You get a fuller expression from the voters.

Mr. PERKINS. I think, if the gentleman from Arizona will allow me, that the questions entering into that partisan election will largely control the action in this election of delegates to the constitutional convention; and therefore you will not get as high class or order of men in this constitutional convention as you would if the election were held at a separate date.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I think that is going rather too far. I will say to my friend I do not think it would be shown to be the fact.

Mr. PERKINS. I think that is the rule that has been followed. I think that was the rule with reference to the gentleman's own Territory.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes, it was; and that was because we had no chance of a general election. We had already adopted our constitution, and it would have been an unnecessary expense both to the Government and to the State.

Mr. PERKINS. I think it has been the uniform rule of Congress to provide for these separate elections.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It may be the case; but it may not have been possible to have had it in all cases when there was to be a general election.

Mr. PERKINS. That rule has been established for reasons I have now adduced by every Congress. I think there ought to be no departure in this case. I am willing to cooperate with the gentleman from New Mexico in getting favorable action on this bill, but I think, in justice to those interests which I in part myself represent, that these purely partisan features of the bill should be eliminated. I only ask for all interests in New Mexico an equal opportunity, and I desire when that constitutional convention shall be held that it may be representative of the very best sentiment of your Territory and secure the very best possible results. I feel confident that the amendment that I propose will conduce to that end. [Cries of "Vote!"] Now, I am not particular, as I have said, as to the date. The gentleman can name any date in lieu of that I have suggested.

Mr. JOSEPH. Mr. Chairman, I will say for the information of the gentleman that the committee saw proper to fix this date for the election of delegates to the constitutional convention, because on that day the people of New Mexico will elect a Delegate to the Fifty-fourth Congress of the United States, and members to the Thirty-first Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico; and it is thought that that would bring out a full expression of all the legal voters in that Territory, and the committee saw proper to have these delegates to this constitutional convention elected upon the same day that the Delegate and territorial officers are elected. And it is so much less expensive, as my friend from Arizona suggests.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It costs as much to elect these delegates to the constitutional convention as it does to hold a general election.

Mr. GEAR. Are the voters in the Territory of New Mexico different in their interests from the voters in any other Territory in this country in the past?

Mr. JOSEPH. I think not.

Mr. GEAR. Then why do this committee bring in a bill here for the admission of New Mexico, violating the precedents in the cases of all the other Territories that have been admitted for fifty years past, the precedent of having a nonpartisan election for a constitutional convention?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There has been no precedent such as the gentleman suggests. The gentleman can not find the case of a Territory that has been admitted when the election for the constitutional convention came near the time for the general election that the elections were not held together.

Mr. GEAR. The State that I in part represent had three or perhaps four different elections held at times different from the general election.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes, but they were at periods quite remote from the general election. I wish that in the case of Arizona the election for the constitutional convention could be held at the same time as the general election, so that there might be a full expression of the sentiment of the people, and at the same time a saving of expense. It costs thirty or forty thousand dollars to hold one of these elections.

Mr. GEAR. Well, $30,000 is of no account in a result which is to last for all remaining time.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not think the expression of the people's will is likely to be different on one day from what it is on another.

Mr. PERKINS. Not if it can be concentrated on the question at issue; but if it can be scattered over the questions of the election of members of the Legislature and of a Representative in Congress, and if there can be trading back and forth, accompanied by indifference as to the character of the delegates to the constitutional convention, it may make a great difference.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. But the two parties hold their conventions to nominate candidates, and does not the gentleman think that when it comes to the great question of a constitutional convention the personnel of the delegates will be carefully looked after by each party, and that they will select the very best men they have in the Territory to act in that capacity, so that whichever party succeeds in the election there will at least be a good representation in that convention?

Mr. PERKINS. This bill draws the partisan line very taut. If the delegates alone were to be chosen at the election, Populists and Republicans, in a measure, might vote for Democrats, and Democrats and Populists might in part vote for Republicans, but when you place the election on this partisan basis there is no opportunity for a fair expression of popular opinion in the election of delegates.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Oh, the gentleman does not know the people of that part of the country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is exhausted. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PERKINS. I understood the gentleman from New Mexico to accept my second amendment.

Mr. JOSEPH. The amendment on line 36; yes, I have accepted that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection the amendment will be agreed to.

The Clerk read the last paragraph of section 3, as follows:

Fourth. That provision shall be made for the establishment and maintenance of a system of public schools which shall be open to all the children of said State and free from sectarian control.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting, on page 5, in line 52, after the word "control," the following: "And in all of which public schools the English language shall be taught."

Mr. Speaker, I believe that in the consideration of this bill in the Fifty-first Congress the Delegate from New Mexico accepted the amendment which was offered by me at that time. From this testimony then taken before the Committee on Territories, it appeared that in many of the public schools of New Mexico only the Spanish language was taught, and that there was quite a number of the schools in which the English language was not taught at all. If the Delegate remembers, I offered this amendment to the bill in the Committee on Territories and it was accepted by him, and I presume that it will not be objected to now.

If the Territory is to be admitted as a State of the Union, and I hope it may be, we certainly should have in every public school in that State the English language taught. Many of the citizens of the present Territory do not speak English, and in a large percentage of their schools the English language is not taught. Now, if the Congress of the United States is to vote to admit the Territory as a State among the States of this Union we certainly ought to provide that in all of the public schools there the English language shall be taught. I am satisfied that the German, the French, the Spanish, or any other language may be taught in the schools, but I am especially anxious, and I believe the people of this country are, that in this and in all of the States the English language shall be taught in all the public schools. I hope the amendment will be accepted by the Delegate from New Mexico.

Mr. JOSEPH. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois, I will say that I did at one time consent to have that provision inserted in this bill, but that was seven or eight years ago, when we had not yet established in New Mexico what is called the American public school system. We have that system there to-day, and I say now that in New Mexico we have as good a public school system as there is in any State or Territory in the Union, and that the English language is taught in every public school within the Territory.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. It was not so at the time I speak of, and if it is now taught in all the schools of your Territory, where is the objection to the adoption of the amendment which I have offered? It does not take from you any of the privileges you now have; it does not prohibit nor prevent you from teaching any and all languages in your schools which you may desire to have taught there, but simply requires that in all of your schools the English language must be taught as one of the branches of education. Where is the American citizen who will object to this reasonable provision?

Mr. JOSEPH. No, English was not then taught in all the schools, although it was taught in most of them. There were, however, schools in the rural districts where it was not taught, but to-day, by the report of the superintendent of public instruction of New Mexico, which I have copied into the report on this bill, it will be seen that in the 619 public schools in the Territory of New Mexico the only language that is taught is the English language, and that by authority of existing law. The only Spanish book that is permitted to be be used in our schools is a Spanish and English primer.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. If the English language is taught now in all your public schools, is there any objection to inserting a provision in this bill that the English language must be taught in all those schools, but not prohibiting the teaching of any other language?

Mr. JOSEPH. Mr. Speaker, I do not object to that provision in itself; but if the people of New Mexico are to be proscribed and discriminated against in this way, they will not enter this Union on an equal footing with the people of the other States, and for that reason I shall insist that the rights of the American citizens of New Mexico shall be respected.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Do you decline to accept the amendment?

Mr. JOSEPH. I decline to accept it.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Then you will have to have a quorum to pass your bill.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman from New Mexico will not object to so reasonable an amendment as this. It does not prohibit the teaching of the Spanish or any other language in the public schools if the Legislature chooses to provide for it. All the amendment does is to provide that the English language shall be taught. Now, it seems to me that the gentleman is standing in his own light and reflecting upon the intelligence and character of the citizens of his Territory in objecting to so reasonable, so just, so proper an amendment as that which has been offered by my colleague.

Mr. JOSEPH. That restriction has never been inserted in the bills for the admission of other Territories, and for that reason I object.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Granting for argument's sake that it has not been inserted in any other bill in the history of the legislation respecting the admission of Territories, this is the first Territory where the Spanish language was taught in its schools and was the prevailing language of the Territory that has ever asked for admission into the Union as a State.

Mr. JOSEPH. The gentleman is mistaken. California, Texas, Colorado were in the same situation. Their people spoke Spanish.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. But they taught English in their schools, and more people of those Territories could speak the English language than any other language.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. So they do now in the six hundred and ninety public schools in New Mexico.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. It seems to me that the gentleman from New Mexico is standing in his own light and in the way of the interests of his constituents when he objects to an amendment of this character. Does the gentleman upon reflection still insist upon his objection?

Mr. JOSEPH. I do, most emphatically.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Well, I trust that there is patriotism enough in the Democratic party in this House to decline to admit New Mexico into the Union as a State unless so just and so proper an amendment as this be adopted. As my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Illinois] has stated, when the bill for the admission of this Territory was before the committee in the last Congress, the Delegate from New Mexico admitted that in many of the schools English was not taught.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. In a majority of them.

Mr. BROWN. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] a question?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWN. I will ask the gentleman if it is not right and proper that where a State maintains its own public schools and makes all the provision that is made for their support, it ought to have exclusive jurisdiction of what is taught in those schools?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. No, sir; I deny that proposition under the circumstances of this case. I say that when any section of the country that is governed by Territorial laws seeks admission into the sisterhood of States, regulations should be prescribed which will make that Territory a part of the Republic a credit and not a disgrace. The English language is the language of our common country. Upon the use of that language, in my judgment, depends largely the perpetuity of our Union, and to admit a Territory like New Mexico as a State and permit her to provide by laws or regulations that the English language shall not be taught in her schools is a disgrace to the American nation.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. There is no such provision in the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. And I say now, as I was saying when interrupted by the gentleman from Indiana, that I trust there is patriotism enough among the members of the Democratic party in this House to decline to permit this Territory to become a State unless the amendment proposed by my colleague be adopted.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Speaker, I earnestly hope that the gentleman in charge of this bill will accept this amendment. It is a well-known fact, I believe, and one which can not be disputed, that 70 per cent of the population of New Mexico are either Spanish or of Indian descent; that the laws there are published in alternate columns of English and Spanish; that the instructions of the courts to the juries are in English and interpreted into Spanish; that the arguments of the counsel to the jury are interpreted into Spanish from the English. And it seems to me it is only a proper precaution when these people come here and ask Statehood in the American Union to require that their children shall be taught the language of the United States, the language that we have been taught.

I want to say here and now, that while I advocate the admission of this Territory and stand prepared by letters from my personal friends out in that country to vote for this bill, I never can and never will vote for it unless the English language can be taught in the common schools of that country by law.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. It is taught there now.

Mr. GEAR. It is no argument to say that this bill with such an amendment would differ from former Territorial bills. There have been no corresponding or similar conditions heretofore. No Territory has ever been admitted into the Union with 70 or 80 per cent of its population who do not understand and speak the English language; and under these circumstances no Territory should be, or by my vote can be, admitted without such a requirement as this amendment proposes.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Does not the gentleman know that the English language is now taught in every public school in the Territory of New Mexico?

Mr. GEAR. I will take that for granted. I will accept the statement of the Committee on Territories and the Delegate from New Mexico on that question. But we have a right, and not merely a right, but it is a trust confided to us, to see that the children of that Territory are educated in the language of the Government under which they live.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I am disposed to criticise very severely the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] that we have a right or that it is our duty to interfere in the domestic affairs of the people of a State——

Mr. GEAR. The gentleman's position may doubtless be true from his standpoint, but this is not a State; this is a ward of the Government.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I am not at all surprised at the gentleman's views. The party to which the gentleman belongs, and of which he is a very distinguished member, has always evinced a disposition to interfere with everything in the States, to enter into the domestic affairs of States, and control State governments as far as it is possible for them to do so.

Mr. GEAR. The gentleman standing right there in his place denied the right of the Territory of Oklahoma to cast a vote on the location of a county seat. I do not wonder that he is now advocating this kind of a policy.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I took exactly the contrary position; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. GEAR. I beg the gentleman's pardon. You refused to concur in an amendment which proposed to give the people of Oklahoma that right.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. No, the gentleman is mistaken. I took the position that Congress should not pass a law regulating the time or manner of elections in Oklahoma. I contended that the Legislature of that Territory was the proper tribunal to attend to such matters. I stood on the same principle on that matter that I stand on here now.

Mr. GEAR. My friend will permit me a single remark. He is to-day chairman on the part of the House of a committee of conference on a bill pending between the two Houses; and he is standing out against a Senate amendment to that bill giving the people of the Territory of Oklahoma the right to locate their own county seat by an election.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I have stood here successfully opposing the gentleman from Iowa and his party associates who sought to violate State rights by having Congress enact laws to regulate purely local affairs in the Territory of Oklahoma, which should be left to the Legislature of Oklahoma.

The action of the gentleman in regard to the Oklahoma case I regard as very high-handed.

The law as enacted by the people of Oklahoma provided that there should be no election for five years for changing county sites, and now in the interest of a great railroad corporation a bill is brought into Congress which seeks to override the action of the people.

The contention of myself and Democratic friends is that this matter should be left to the Legislature of Oklahoma.

Mr. GEAR. The gentleman makes this one mistake: A Territory is not a State "clothed with sovereign power to determine all questions concerning its own domestic affairs;" it is a ward of the Government; and we are legislating for it. When the State is admitted it can attend to all its own matters; but in the present position of the case we have the right to make conditions precedent to its admission.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, who is entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. But the gentleman from Iowa has seized it. [Laughter.] I insist that the principles for which I contended upon the town-site bill were exactly the same as those I contend for here—that Territories shall regulate their domestic concerns.

I insist that the people of New Mexico shall have the same privilege that Pennsylvania exercises in allowing the German language to be taught and not prohibited; that the people of Wisconsin exercise in allowing the Norwegian language to be taught and not prohibited; that the people of Louisiana exercise in allowing the French language to be taught and not prohibited; that the people of Colorado and California exercise in allowing the Spanish language to be taught and not prohibited.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The gentleman will allow me to say right there that this amendment does not prohibit the teaching of the Spanish language in the public schools of New Mexico; but it does require that the English language shall be taught.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. You propose to invade a State and direct what the people shall teach in their schools. Such legislation by Congress is obnoxious. It is establishing a dangerous precedent system. I say let that matter be arranged like any other domestic question.

The fact that this legislation is obnoxious to the people of New Mexico ought to control our action in this matter.

The Democratic party has sought to prepare a bill for the admission of New Mexico so that it will be satisfactory and pleasing to the good people of that Territory.

I read from a recent work on New Mexico:

> The New Mexicans of Spanish decent are among the most honest-dealing people of the world. They have not to be sued for a debt, but will pay it to the last cent either in money or service.

And as I have been in the Territory I speak from personal knowledge in my assertion that the people of New Mexico, whether of Spanish or American descent, compare most favorably with the people of any Territories we have admitted. They are people of intelligence, pluck, endurance, and progressive spirit, and I am in favor of leaving this matter entirely to their judgment.

Mr. PERKINS. What is this entire act? Why do you come here with an enabling act, if the whole business in regard to questions of this kind is to be turned over to New Mexico?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. We propose simply to admit these people as a State, and let them arrange their own domestic concerns.

ANCIENT CIVILIZATION OF NEW MEXICO.

When New York City was a forest inhabited by wild beasts, when Boston was a barren waste, and Philadelphia was unknown, there was a high civilization in that part of our common country known as New Mexico. A high order of architecture, painting, music, and arts of all kinds flourished. Of the territory acquired from France in 1803, of Spain in 1819, and of Mexico in 1848, the country comprised within the limits of what is now New Mexico was by far the most advanced in all that is called modern civilization.

From the less civilized country surrounding this territory we have carved out States, each of which, at the date of admission, had less than half the population of the Territory which this bill proposes to admit into the sisterhood of States. From the original boundaries of New Mexico, as it was acquired in 1846, we have cut off and created the States of California, Nevada, Colorado, and, so far as this House is concerned, we have also formed and admitted Arizona and Utah.

As many members seem to be misinformed as regards the civilization and history of New Mexico, I beg to give some facts in regard to this interesting subject.

NEW MEXICO THREE HUNDRED AND SIXTY YEARS AGO.

In 1527 De Narvaez was sent out to conquer and colonize the mainland of Florida and subject it to the crown of Spain. His expedition was unfortunate, and becoming dismembered achieved nothing of importance. The treasurer of the expedition, Cabeza de Vaca, was shipwrecked on the coast, captured by the Indians, and worked his way westward from tribe to tribe in the capacity of a slave.

When in the neighborhood of the Mississippi he met with three of his comrades in arms who had also been wrecked, and they became the companions of his journeys and adventures, of which he afterwards made a report to his sovereign. His knowledge of medicine and surgery soon earned for him a great reputation among the savages and his amiable character soon won their affection.

CABEZA DE VACA IN NEW MEXICO.

He found the Indians of New Mexico a peaceful and hospitable people. Prince, in his history of New Mexico, quoting from de Vaca's report, says:

> The land of plenty when reached was one where the natives had permanent structures for houses. Through this good land they traveled, finding everywhere settled habitations and plenty of corn and beans. The people gave them cotton shawls, better than those of New Spain, many beads and certain corals found on the South Sea, and fine turquoises that came from the north.

They presented de Vaca with some valuable emeralds which they said were brought from some lofty mountains toward the north, where there were populous towns and very large houses. Indeed, the architecture of some of the cities was such as to excite the wonder and admiration of the European. In some of the large settlements there were communal houses built around a large open square into which they opened. They were several stories high and of solid masonry that could withstand the wear and tear of ages.

Then there were the cliff cities, built upon the faces of sheer precipices and invulnerable to the attacks of enemies. The architecture of these strange dwelling places is unique and wonderful, and the secrets of their construction are buried with the ancient tribes who built them.

AZTECS AND NEW MEXICAN CIVILIZATION.

There has been much discussion as to the origin and history of the early inhabitants. Bancroft does not admit that they were identical with the ancient Aztecs, but he says, page 4 of his History of New Mexico:

> It is also still the custom of most writers to refer to the ruins and relics of this region as undoubtedly of Aztec origin, and to adopt more or less fully the theory that the ancestors of the Pueblo tribes were Aztecs.

And in a footnote, same page, he quotes from his Native Races:

> I do not mean to express a decided opinion that the Aztecs were not, some hundreds or thousands of centuries ago, or even at a somewhat less remote period, identical with the natives of New Mexico, for I have great faith in the power of time and environment to work unlimited changes in people. * * *

History speaks of the Aztecs as a proud, noble-hearted, ambitious race. At the time of the Spanish conquest they were in an advanced stage of civilization. Arts and industries were encouraged, and faithfulness and patriotism were common qualities among them. Their heroes compare favorably with those of any nation at any time, and Guatemozin, the last Aztec king, far surpassed any who have succeeded him in Mexico, both in patriotism and nobility of heart and purpose.

There is no doubt they degenerated, but nevertheless when Columbus discovered America there was as much civilization in New Mexico as was found in many localities in Europe during the Dark Ages.

As de Vaca and his companions pressed forward they heard rumors of the passage of a marauding band of Spaniards, and seven years from the date of leaving Spain they met a body of their own countrymen under the command of Diego de Alcaraz. These men had abused and pillaged the peaceful inhabitants, who in may places had entirely abandoned their homes and ceased to cultivate the ground.

Da Vaca says that everywhere he went he tried to restore peace and that he left the natives happily engaged in their usual occupations. Proceeding to Sonora, in Mexico, he obtained transportation to the City of Mexico, where he made a report to the viceroy, and was then sent on to Spain. His name has ever been revered in New Mexico as the kindly, generous-hearted Christian who practiced faithfully the teachings of the golden rule.

FRIAR MARCUS IN NEW MEXICO.

Da Vaca finds a rival for the title of discoverer of New Mexico in the person of Friar Marcus, who first visited the Zuni Pueblos in 1539, but as this missionary was accompanied by Estavanico, the negro guide and interpreter of Da Vaca, it is probable he followed in the path of the latter. The Indians gave him a warm welcome and at every place brought him food and ornaments, and everywhere he endeavored to conciliate them. He then sent the negro ahead of him and arranged a code of signals between them.

The negro was taken prisoner by the governor of Cibola and put to death, and the Friar returned without having accomplished much, but bringing back fabulous stories he had heard of the great and populous cities in the interior. The following year he returned accompanied by Coronado with two hundred and fifty men at arms and occupied the city of Cibola. He did not make a permanent settlement, but returned, leaving three priests to convert the savages. These priests, though liked by the young people, were hated by the old people, and were by them put to death. A similar fate overtook three zealous Franciscans who undertook to evangelize these savages.

DON JUAN DE ONATE IN NEW MEXICO.

In 1597 Don Juan de Onate entered New Mexico with 700 soldiers and 130 families for colonization, and was successful in overcoming the natives and establishing colonies. The Indians were impressed as slaves to work in the mines, until, maddened, by the oppressions of their masters, they revolted and expelled the Spaniards in 1680, retaining possession of the country until 1692.

In this year De Vargas was appointed governor and reconquered the province. From his time to the beginning of the present century there were twenty-four governors in Santa Fe.

THE BRAVEST AND MOST HARDY SUBJECTS OF NEW SPAIN.

In 1806 Lieut. Zebulon Montgomery Pike entered New Mexico. He speaks of the New Mexicans as "the bravest and most hardy subjects of New Spain." He adds:

Their isolated and remote situation causes them to exhibit in a superior degree the heaven-like qualities of hospitality and kindness, in which they appear to endeavor to fulfill the injunction of the Scripture which enjoins to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and give comfort to the oppressed of spirit; and I shall always take pleasure in expressing my gratitude for their noble reception of myself and the men under my command.

IN 1882 NEW MEXICO A DEPOT OF TRADE.

The road from St. Louis to Santa Fe was traveled occasionally early in this century, but was not permanently open until 1822, when Santa Fe commenced to figure as the great depot of Western trade.

In 1837 the New Mexicans rebelled against the selection of a colonel in the Mexican army for their governor, and insisted upon their right to a native governor. Perez was defeated and executed, and was succeeded by Gonzales, a Pueblo Indian, who was in turn superceded by Armijo, who proved to be their last Mexican governor.

It is surprising that New Mexico has maintained the enterprise and progress which we see there to-day, when we consider the ill treatment and bad faith these people have experienced at the hands of the Government of the United States.

From 1545 to 1821 New Mexico was one of the provinces of Mexico, with rights and representation in all respects equal and similar to any of the provinces of Mexico, or any of the provinces of Spain.

A SOVEREIGN STATE OF MEXICO FROM 1821 TO 1846.

From 1821 to the date of its cession to the United States it was a state of the Republic of Mexico, with representation in the Mexican Congress the same as all the other states of Mexico.

After the declaration of war between the United States and Mexico, and while Taylor was victoriously following up the enemy in the south, Col. Kearny was sent from Fort Leavenworth to New Mexico to accomplish its conquest. He dispatched Capt. Cook as an ambassador to treat with Governor Armijo at Santa Fe.

Meanwhile Kearny received his commission of brigadier general, and at the same time private instructions from the Secretary of War authorizing him to offer to these people the friendship and protection of the United States, and in case of their wishing to become a part of our Government, prompt admission to the privileges of statehood. This he actually did in his addresses to the people at Las Vegas and other places.

Armijo determined to make a stand against the invaders and took up a strong position of defense, but his army gradually melted away before the advance of the United States army, not because the people lacked the courage to resist, but because they were not in sympathy with Mexico and were friendly to the Government of the United States. Thus the government of New Mexico was transferred from Armijo to Gen. Kearny without bloodshed or violence. This took place August 19, 1846.

STATEHOOD PROMISED TO NEW MEXICO.

Bancroft, in his History of New Mexico, page 417, says that—

Gen. Kearny made an address to the people in the plaza, giving them assurances of full protection "as subjects of the United States."

As stated by Prince, in his History, page 302, Kearny used these words:

I do hereby proclaim my intention to establish in the department a civil government, on a republican basis, similar to those of our own States.

Thereupon all the officers of the Mexican Government then present took the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States, and the American flag was unfurled above the city.

Bancroft, pages 417 and 418, says:

Three days later Kearny's position was fully explained in the formal proclamation which is appended.

The proclamation, dated August 22, 1846 (I read from Bancroft, page 418), says:

It is the wish and intention of the United States to provide for New Mexico a free government, with the least possible delay, similar to those in the United States.

It is true that Gen. Kearny's proclamation also contained these words:

The people of New Mexico will then be called upon to exercise the rights of freemen in electing their own representatives to the Territorial Legislature.

But the people fully understood that their position in relation to the United States was to be fully equal in dignity to that they had so long occupied in the Mexican Republic, and this was made more manifest by this expression in Gen. Kearny's proclamation:

The undersigned hereby absolves all persons residing within the boundary of New Mexico from further allegiance to the Republic of Mexico, and hereby claims them as citizens of the United States.

These promises were certainly sufficient to entitle the people of New Mexico to immediate statehood; but to make the case stronger the treaty of peace by which New Mexico became part of the United States gave an additional pledge of the same character.

Article IX of this treaty, dated February 2, 1848, and officially promulgated July 4, 1848, was in these words:

Mexicans who, in the Territories aforesaid, shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic, conformably with what is stipulated in the preceding article, shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States, and be admitted at the proper time (to be judged of by the Congress of the United States) to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States, according to the principles of the Constitution. * * *

The people, relying on this promise from the Government which they regarded as the greatest and most honorable in the world, immediately proceeded to hold a convention and adopt a constitution which was submitted to the people, who almost unanimously adopted it. In June, 1850, they elected a Congressman, and in July they elected two United States Senators.

The Senators and Representatives proceeded to Washington and to their surprise were refused admission. Congress, however, passed an organic law declaring New Mexico a Territory and admitted a Territorial delegate as her representative.

STATEHOOD DEMANDED FOR FORTY SIX YEARS.

From that time the demands that this great Government should redeem its promises to the people of New Mexico have been unceasing. More than half the Legislatures of the Territory have petitioned Congress for admission to the sisterhood of States.

In 1871 the Legislature passed a law authorizing the assembling of a constitutional convention, which prepared and submitted a broad and liberal constitution. At the election following more than 20,000 votes were cast for the Delegate to Congress, and only between 3,000 and 4,000 were cast against the constitution. Notwithstanding this, Congress adjourned without taking favorable action.

On May 21, 1874, House bill 2418, for admission of New Mexico, was acted upon in the House; 160 votes were cast for it and only 54 against it. The bill was slightly amended in the Senate and on February 24, 1875, the bill passed that body; 32 Senators voted for it, and there were but 11 votes against it.

On March 3, 1875, a motion was made to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended by the Senate. There was 154 votes for the bill and 87 against it, a few less than a two-thirds vote, and it therefore failed.

In the Forty-fourth Congress a bill to admit New Mexico passed the Senate by an overwhelming majority, but failed in the House. Bills to admit New Mexico were introduced into the Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh, Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, and Fifty-first Congress, and the Fifty-second Congress by a vote of 177 to 3 passed an enabling act, but it was not voted on in the Senate.

It is singular that one of the arguments against admitting New Mexico in 1850 was, the people were too far advanced in some of their views.

In the Forty-fourth Congress the bill was opposed by some upon the ground that the people were not sufficiently American, and in the Fifty-first Congress the Republican party opposed the admission of New Mexico for no reason, so far as I could observe, except that they feared that the new State would be Democratic.

This unjust action is emphasized from the fact that New Mexico has now more population than was possessed by any of our Territories, with one exception, at the census immediately preceding their admission into the Union as States. In order that this may be fully understood, I have prepared the following table, which gives very full information on this subject. It is as follows:

Table showing date of admission of each State, the representative ratio at date of admission, the population by the census taken next preceding the admission, the population by the census next following the admission, and the ratio of increase during decade of admission.

State.	Date of admission.	Representative ratio on previous census.	Population by census next previous to admission.			Population by following census.			Per cent of increase.

*Including all except whites. †Estimated.

New Mexico has an area of 122,580 square miles, which is greater than any State that was ever admitted except Texas and California.

MINERAL RESOURCES OF NEW MEXICO.

I would like to explain to the House the vast resources and wealth of New Mexico, but will only state that precious and useful minerals abound, and that commoner precious stone are plentiful. Coal is found in every county, but is exceptionally abundant in the two northern tiers. In variety it runs from anthracite to bituminous; from the glistening peacock to the brown lignite. The deposits now being worked show 80 per cent of fixed carbon and only 5 per cent of ash.

That gold and silver abounds in this Territory has been known to the world for hundreds of years.

Mr. GEAR. The State I live in permits the German to be taught in the public schools, but it requires the English to be taught.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. That is also the case in Illinois.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If you can require a language to be taught, then you can prohibit another from being taught, I suppose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOSEPH was recognized.

Mr. BOATNER. I move that the time of the gentleman be extended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. JOSEPH].

Mr. JOSEPH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] made a statement to the House a few moments ago that I can not afford to let go to the country unchallenged. He has stated here that from 70 to 80 per cent of the people of the Territory of New Mexico do not speak or write the English language. That, Mr. Speaker, is not the fact. I wish to state here now in the presence of this House that we have in New Mexico over 200,000 people, and that only about 50 per cent of them are Spanish-Americans, and that 75 per cent of that 100,000 Spanish-Americans not only speak but write the English language.

For the gentleman, therefore, to make a statement here that 70 or 80 per cent of the 200,000 people in that Territory are unable to speak the English language, would be a slander on the intelligent hundred thousand Americans who have recently settled in that fair Territory.

The gentleman further stated that all of our records of the courts are kept in the Spanish language. The gentleman has been misinformed as to that. If he has been informed that that is the case, his informant was mistaken. All of the records of all the courts, down to the county courts and the justices of the peace even, are required to be kept in the English language.

Mr. GEAR. That is the statute.

Mr. JOSEPH. And such slanders can only come from people who never visited New Mexico and know nothing of the condition of affairs there.

Mr. GEAR. I beg the gentleman's pardon, I have been there.

Mr. JOSEPH. Slanders such as these, have been made over and over again in former Congresses to destroy the good reputation of the people of that Territory and delay the time of its admission into the Union. The newspapers of the East have also enlisted in the cause for the purpose of defeating the admission of the Territory into the Union, for fear, I presume, that the representation from that Territory will be opposed to some of the legislation which has been so strongly favored by the people of the East.

Mr. GEAR. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. JOSEPH. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. GEAR. Does not the gentleman from New Mexico know that the law of government requires the statutes and the proceedings of the courts to be published in the English language? Does not the gentleman know that to convey the information to juries, as set forth in the evidence, that the testimony and the charge to the juries must be translated?

Does not the gentleman know that even in your ballots you have the two languages, "una republicana ballita" and "una democratica ballita," in your elections for the benefit of those people who do not speak the English language? And if I overstated the percentage of the population who do not speak the English language I will take it back; but from personal knowledge I should judge that about three-fourths of the population do not speak English. I have a number of friends out there who have written to me upon this very question, and I wish to state that I am friendly to the admission of the Territory and am prepared to vote for the bill under proper conditions. I have letters received from friends there within the past twenty-four hours asking me to support and vote for this bill. I feel an interest in the Territory and I am glad to vote for its admission in a properly prepared bill.

Mr. JOSEPH. Well, for the information of the gentleman from Iowa, it is true as he states that interpreters are appointed for the district courts and for the juries and also for the Legislative Assemblies. This was done in 1846, because at that time almost the entire population spoke only the Spanish language. That custom which was then inaugurated still prevails in the Territory, because it was a custom and not because it is really necessary.

Mr. CRAIN. The same things happen in my State.

Mr. GEARY. In California also.

Mr. JOSEPH. Exactly the same condition prevails in other States—in California and Texas, and wherever there is a large portion of Spanish-speaking Americans. No such provision as the gentleman seeks to incorporate in this bill was ever placed in any other bill admitting any of these States; and I want to protect the people of my Territory from being proscribed by such a condition as this. I want them to be protected within their constitutional limits.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOATNER. I move to strike out the last word.

It occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] and others who favor this amendment are taking unnecessary trouble upon themselves by seeking to provide against an evil which in all human probability will never occur.

Now, I represent in part a State which at the time of its admission into the Union was inhabited very largely by people whose mother tongue was the French language. In many parts of that State the French tongue was spoken exclusively. A great many of the people did not understand a word of English. They spoke the French language habitually in their families. They were a large majority of the voters of the State, and for many years controlled the State government. There was no provision of this sort in the act admitting Louisiana into the Union, and yet among the first acts adopted by the Legislature after the State was organized was one adopting the English language as the language of the courts, requiring all records and all court proceedings to be had in English.

It is very true that a great many juries would be empanelled upon which probably there would not be one man who understood English. The lawyers argued their cases in French. The pleadings, while they were written in English, were read in French. The actual language of the courts was French, that is, in the French parts of the State. Yet the very great desire of the people was to acquire the English language.

Mr. GEAR. The provision to which the gentleman refers was contained in the Federal statutes.

Mr. BOATNER. No, it was not. There was no such provision in the act admitting Louisiana.

Mr. GEAR. I think you will find there was a provision of that kind in the general statutes.

Mr. BOATNER. In the statutes of Louisiana, yes.

Mr. GEAR. No, in the Federal statutes.

Mr. BOATNER. But no Federal statutes could control the proceedings in the State courts of Louisiana after it was admitted as a State.

Mr. GEAR. In the Federal courts.

Mr. BOATNER. Well, we did not have much use for Federal courts in those days. What I want to impress on the gentleman from Iowa is that there has always been a very general desire on the part of the people to acquire the English language. Their children were taught English, and the English language rapidly came into general use; and for many years the English language has been in general use in every part of the State.

Mr. GEAR. But the population of the old Territory of Louisiana was of a rather different class from that coming down from the Aztec races, which we find in the Territory of New Mexico to-day—not intending in any way to say anything disparaging to the people of New Mexico.

Mr. BOATNER. I take it that the Anglo-Saxon element in the Territory of New Mexico will dominate. They have done it everywhere else and they will do it there.

Mr. GEAR. I agree with the gentleman as to that.

Mr. BOATNER. These people, whom you say do not speak the English language, will want to speak it as soon as they can. They will insist that their children be taught the English language in the public schools.

Mr. GEAR. Admitting that to be true, which I believe to be true, what objection can be made to putting this clause into the organic law, the enabling act?

Mr. BOATNER. Because whenever a Territory is entitled to admission into the Union, it is entitled to admission upon the same terms as all the other Territories have been admitted.

Mr. GEAR. Not necessarily.

Mr. BOATNER. And Congress ought not to cast a stigma upon the people of any Territory, by assuming that the people of that Territory, when admitted to statehood, will adopt a policy which will not be in harmony with American institutions.

Mr. GEAR. The gentleman is too good a lawyer to stand on this floor and say that Congress has not the right to dictate whatever it may deem to be just to the people of any incoming proposed State.

Mr. BOATNER. No; I will not make that admission at all. I will admit that Congress has the power, but I do not admit that it has the right. I say that if the Territory of New Mexico is not inhabited by a class of people who are entitled to be invested with the rights of American citizenship, if that Territory is not in a fit condition to be admitted into the Union upon terms of equality with other the States as they were admitted, why then that Territory ought not to be admitted. If she is in that condition, then we ought not to cast a stigma upon that Territory by putting into the act which admits her to the Union provisions which would seem to indicate that we had not confidence in the State government to be organized under the enabling act.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, in conclusion, in reference to this amendment offered by myself, that I can not understand why it can be believed by anyone that the adoption of this amendment would cast a stigma upon the Territory of New Mexico. We are an English-speaking people. All our proceedings in courts and otherwise must be in the English language.

Here is a Territory seeking admission into the Union as one of the States, and that Territory has a large preponderance of people who speak not the English language but a language foreign to ours. As I stated before, while on the Committee on Territories and when a bill for the admission of this Territory was under consideration, I raised the same question there, and and it was stated by the Delegate from New Mexico [Mr. JOSEPH] at that time, that in a majority of the schools of that Territory the English language was not taught.

Mr. JOSEPH. That is a mistake of the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. No, sir; that is not a mistake.

Mr. JOSEPH. I never made such a statement.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. You agreed to the amendment, and every member of that committee will bear me out in the truthfulness of the statement. But to-day we are told that in all the schools the English language is taught. Possibly the question raised in the Committee on Territories may have induced the people of that Territory to commence teaching the English language, and I believe, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, that if we admit New Mexico, as I hope we will, that when admitted it shall be with the understanding that although you may now teach the English language, that hereafter you must teach it as well as any other language which you may care to teach. I have a great respect for the Spanish language and for the German language. Of course, I do not know anything about the Spanish language, but of the German language I do know something. I have also a great respect for the French language and all other languages; but above them all I have a greater and higher respect for the English language, the language of the American people, and of all our country. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.] I shall never give my vote to admit any Territory into the United States which through its Delegate will insist upon prohibiting an amendment of this character, which is simply to require the teaching of the English language in the common schools, but does not prohibit the teaching in the public schools of any other language or languages which the people of that Territory may desire to have taught in such schools.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will admonish the occupants of the galleries that they are here by permission and courtesy of the House, and they are not to make any demonstration of applause or disapproval, and if it should occur again the Chair will instruct the Doorkeeper to clear the galleries.

The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, which the Clerk will again report.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate has been exhausted on that motion.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then I move to strike out the last four words. Mr. Speaker, I am not sure, so far as any information has been offered or presented in this debate, how I shall vote upon the proposition of admission; but in reading the paragraphs of the bill, the sections which appeal to me as they have appealed in all previous bills relating to the admission of Territories into statehood, are the paragraphs directing the benefactions or gifts of the General Government to the Territory coming into statehood for educational purposes.

No feature of the bill appeals to me so strongly as the several paragraphs with reference to these benefactions; not alone the vast extent of 100,000 acres to the State for the use and support of an agricultural college, or the lands to the extent of two townships in quantity for the establishment of a university in New Mexico, but section 9, which declares so generously for the support of the common schools within said State. I submit the several sections of the bill covering the lands and acreage for educational purposes:

SEC. 6. That upon the admission of said State into the Union sections numbered 2, 16, 32, and 36 in every township of said proposed State, and where such sections, or any parts thereof, have been sold or otherwise disposed of, by or under the authority of any act of Congress, other lands equivalent thereto in legal subdivisions of not less than one-quarter section, and as contiguous as may be to the section in lieu of which the same is taken, are hereby granted to said State for the support of common schools, such indemnity lands to be selected within said State in such manner as the Legislature may provide, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the second, sixteenth, thirty-second, and thirty-sixth sections embraced in permanent reservations for national purposes shall not at any time be subject to the grants nor to the indemnity provisions of this act, nor shall any lands embraced in Indian, military, or other reservations of any character be subject to the grants or to the indemnity provisions of this act until the reservations shall have been extinguished and such lands be restored to and become a part of the public domain.

SEC. 8. That 100,000 acres of land, to be selected and located as provided in the foregoing section of this act, are hereby granted to said State for the use and support of an agricultural college in said State, as provided in the act of Congress making donations of land for such purposes.

SEC. 9. That 10 per cent of the proceeds of the sales of public lands lying within said State, which shall be sold by the United States subsequent to the admission of said State into the Union, after deducting all the expenses incident to the same, shall be paid to the said State, to be used as a permanent fund, the interest of which only shall be expended for the support of the common schools within said State.

SEC. 10. That all lands herein granted for educational purposes, except as hereinafter otherwise provided, shall be disposed of only at public sale, and at a price not less than $5 per acre, the proceeds to constitute a permanent school fund, the interest of which only shall be expended in the support of said schools. But said lands may, after such regulations as the Legislature shall prescribe, be leased for periods of not more than five years, in quantities not exceeding one section to any one person or company; and such land shall not be subject to preëmption, homestead entry, or any other entry under the land laws of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, but shall be reserved for school purposes only.

SEC. 11. That the lands, to the extent of two townships in quantity, authorized by the sixth section of the act of July 22, 1854, to be reserved for the establishment of a university in New Mexico, are hereby granted to the State of New Mexico for university purposes, to be held and used in accordance with the provisions of this section; and any portion of said lands that may not have been selected by said Territory may be selected by said State. But said act is hereby so amended that none of said lands shall be sold for less than $5 per acre, and the proceeds shall constitute a permanent fund, to be safely invested and held by said State, and the income thereof be used exclusively for university purposes. But said lands may be leased in the same manner as provided in section 10 of this act. The schools, colleges, and universities provided for in this act shall forever remain under the exclusive control of said State, and no part of the proceeds arising from the sale or disposal of any lands herein granted for educational purposes shall be used for the support of any sectarian or denominational school, college, or university.

This vast acreage is the gift of the people to the new State. I assert it is clearly the function and province of Congress in giving or donating this vast amount of land not to exclude the teaching of any other language, but to incorporate in this bill with this gift a designation or a direction that the language of the people of the United States, our people, our nation, the language of our laws, shall be a part of the instruction, not necessarily of the university education, not necessarily of the agricultural education, but of the common-school teaching, the education of all the young men who in the future are to dominate and control that State. [Applause.] Therefore I say to the gentleman the great future we all hope for his people can be best aided and secured by an early instruction of the youth in the common language of our Republic. The amendment will do this.

We can not control the basis which you will make for your citizenship or your voters in the election of members of Congress or of the Legislature who will make your laws in the future. You can make it the basis of a month's citizenship as against the citizenship of my State with its number of years. I take no exception to that right. It belongs to Statehood. But I do believe that the English language, with no exclusion of other languages, as the language of the nation and its laws, should be prescribed peremptorily, and should be the basis of the education of the young men of your State.

Mr. CRAIN. The amendment does not cover that.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. CRAIN. Not at all.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. SMITH of of Illinois, and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JOSEPH. I ask for a division.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Now let every friend of the American public stand up. [Laughter.]

The House divided; and there were—ayes 63, noes 69.

Several MEMBERS. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of no quorum is made, and the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SMITH, and the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. WHEELER.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 81, the division still continuing.

Mr. BURROWS (during the count by tellers). What is the vote, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. Do not announce the vote yet Mr. Speaker. It is not completed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum has yet voted. Gentlemen desiring to vote will please come forward and pass between the tellers.

Mr. BURROWS. Has a quorum voted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum has yet voted.

Mr. BURROWS. No quorum has voted; then I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Gentlemen are still passing between the tellers every few seconds.

Mr. BURROWS. All right.

The division being completed, the tellers reported—ayes 76, noes 94.

Mr. BURROWS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Clerk began to call the roll.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, some gentlemen, I am informed, do not understand just what the amendment is. I therefore ask that it be again read so that it may be fully understood, and I ask that we may have order while it is read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order. The Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH].

The amendment was again read.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 84, nays 117, answered "present" 3, not voting 148; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ELLIS of Oregon. I have voted "aye" on this question, but I desire to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. STRAIT. I do not know how he would vote if present.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. COOPER of Texas with Mr. WRIGHT of Pennsylvania.
Mr. ELLIS of Kentucky with Mr. SCRANTON.
Mr. STRAIT with Mr. ELLIS of Oregon.
Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana with Mr. PHILLIPS.
Mr. HUTCHESON with Mr. KIEFER.
Mr. SCHERMERHORN with Mr. BELDEN.
Mr. FORMAN with Mr. WHEELER of Illinois.
Mr. HAINES with Mr. HARTMAN.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. MORSE.
Mr. CULBERSON with Mr. GROUT.
Mr. HATCH with Mr. HARMER.

For this day:

Mr. ABBOTT with Mr. SWEET.
Mr. RICHARDS with Mr. WADSWORTH.
Mr. PAYNTER with Mr. GROW.
Mr. DENSON with Mr. COGSWELL.
Mr. MUTCHLER with Mr. WANGER.
Mr. REILLY with Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts.
Mr. TURNER of Virginia with Mr. GILLET of New York.

Mr. DANIELS. I desire to say that on this vote I am not paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. SICKLES.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 52, on page 5, add the following:
"And for teaching in the English language such studies as are taught in the public schools, but not to the exclusion of other languages."

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. The proposed amendment differs from the one just voted on—the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I make a point of order that this amendment is substantially the same as the amendment just voted upon.

Several MEMBERS. Too late.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. The amendment is not the same at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OUTHWAITE). The point of order does not come too late. What is the point?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. That this amendment is a repetition of that which has been voted on; it simply puts the same proposition in different language.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I was about to say this amendment differs from the one just voted on in this, that amendment provided that the English language itself should be taught. I do not think it was intended to be exclusive, but this expressly provides that every branch of study shall be taught in the English language, but not to the exclusion of teaching in any other language. It provides that all studies shall be taught in the language which is the language of this country, but permits the same studies to be pursued in other languages.

The pupils of the public schools should have an opportunity to pursue their studies in the English language, while at the same time this amendment does not preclude the Territory of New Mexico (or the State, if admitted), in which the Spanish language is spoken, from teaching these same studies in that or any other language. It would not prevent teaching these branches in the German language, or the French, or any other language which the State might choose to sanction.

In various States of the Union there are provisions for teaching in different languages. I understand the State of Illinois undertook to limit the teaching of the different branches in the schools of that State to the English language. It has been said that the Republicans lost the State of Illinois on that question; that the Germans of that State resisted such legislation.

This amendment does not go that far. It would leave the Legislature of New Mexico to decide in what languages all branches may be taught in the public schools, but provision must be made that in every public school an opportunity shall be afforded to learn the English language. I submit, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, that we can not afford in this country to refuse to adopt the proposition expressed in this amendment.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Does the gentleman understand his amendment to provide that the Spanish language should be taught in the English language?

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. No, sir.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is the effect of it.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. The amendment simply means this, that if the grammar of the Spanish language is taught, it will be taught according to the Spanish language; if the grammar of the English language is taught it will be taught according to the English language. The grammar of the particular language will control the language in which that grammar is taught. There is no provision of the proposed amendment which prevents the teaching of any branch in the language which the children are accustomed to speak. The purpose is to open the way for those who can use the English language to do so, and afford others an opportunity to learn it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The amendment reads, if I understand it, that all branches shall be taught in English. Now, if you say that "all branches" shall be taught, that certainly embraces Spanish. Consequently, according to the language of the amendment, you provide that the Spanish language shall be taught in English. That would seem to be an absurdity.

Mr. BURROWS. Let the proposed substitute of the gentleman from Illinois be read.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. I offer the substitute I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 52, after the word "control," insert:
"And in all of such schools the English language shall be taught as one of the branches of education."

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I claim that that is subject to the point of order. It is using different language to attain the same purpose which was sought to be accomplished by the amendment just voted down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois on the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. This is different from what the other amendment offered by myself provided. I understand a number of gentlemen on the floor considered the amendment I offered before would exclude the teaching of any other language than the English language. That was the objection urged against the amendment——

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. No one could have understood it in that way.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The statement of the gentleman himself makes the point of order good against this amendment.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. I would like to know how the substitute gets in?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois offers it. The time of the gentleman from Ohio had expired.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Then the amendment is offered as a substitute for mine?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order has been made against it, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. But I had not concluded my remarks.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. The amendment of the gentleman being ruled out, then my amendment is before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. MAHON. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The English language shall be taught in said schools: Provided, That all other languages may also be taught.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is offered as a substitute.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I wish to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that Willick's brigade of the Federal Army, a body of brave German soldiers, who were considered as among the best and the bravest, did all their fighting pursuant to commands given in the German language. The commands were given to them in German; and I venture to assert that no member of Congress would have insisted that they should not take part in the service of the Government unless they could speak the English language and receive their commands in English.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the amendment and the substitute be reported together.

The amendment of Mr. WILSON of Ohio and the substitute of Mr. MAHON were again reported.

Mr. PERKINS. I should think, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman in charge of this bill might well afford to accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

I find in the report which the majority of the Committee on the Territories have submitted to the House, this statement:

It is true that a large portion of the population in New Mexico speak the Spanish language, and that among the older persons, descended from the original settlers of the country, some still remain ignorant of English.

I also understand that New Mexico has been an applicant for admission to the Union for something like forty-seven years, and in each instance this question of alienation has been presented.

Now, the chief objection raised by the Delegate from New Mexico to the amendment is that it is a discrimination against his people, and upon that point the contention on the other side is based. But, sir, I hold in my hand a copy of the bill for the admission of Utah and I find this proviso:

Provided, That polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited.

That amendment, I believe, was accepted on the other side of the House, and certainly it points more of a discrimination against the people of Utah than this provision that the English language shall be taught in the public schools of the State.

Now, when we consider that during this long period of nearly half a century the people of that Territory have adhered to the Spanish language, and that during a large portion of that time the Spanish language has been that which was taught in the schools, it occurs to me that it is not an unreasonable provision to ask, in the enabling act which we contemplate passing here, and which we desire shall guard the many thousand acres of public land that we grant for the support of public education in that State, that this safeguard should be provided, and that it should afford some additional incentive to the people of that State to separate themselves from their ancient customs and come in fact into the Union of the United States.

I repeat, I think it is not at all an unreasonable provision; and I shall be glad if the gentleman from New Mexico will signify his acceptance of the amendment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The substitute was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. I desire to modify that amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman send the modification to the Clerk's desk?

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. I will modify the amendment, and hand it to the Clerk as modified.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio wishes to modify his amendment, and if there be no objection this paragraph will be passed over, with permission to the gentleman to return to it.

There was no objection.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 4. That in case a constitution and State government shall be formed in compliance with the provisions of this act, the convention forming the same shall provide by ordinance for submitting said constitution to the people of said State for their ratification or rejection, at an election to be held in said Territory on the Tuesday after the first Monday of March, 1895, at which election the qualified voters of said proposed State shall vote directly for or against the proposed constitution, and for or against any provisions separately submitted. The returns of said election shall be made to the secretary of said Territory, who, with the governor and chief justice thereof, or any two of them, shall canvass the same; and if a majority of the legal votes cast on that question shall be for the constitution, the governor shall certify the result to the President of the United States, together with a statement of the votes cast thereon and upon separate articles or propositions, and a copy of said constitution, articles, propositions, and ordinances. And if the constitution and government of said proposed State are republican in form, and if all the provisions of this act have been complied with in the formation thereof, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to issue his proclamation announcing the result of said election, and thereupon the proposed State of New Mexico shall be deemed admitted by Congress into the Union under and by virtue of this act on an equal footing with the original States from and after the date of said proclamation.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I move to strike out lines 24, 25, 26, and 27 of section 4.

I do this at this time simply to indulge in two minutes of explanation. I had intended always to vote for the admission of every Territory; but when the question has been brought before the Congress of the United States, and the gentlemen who propose to admit this Territory vote against the English language, or at least what is equivalent to it, when an amendment is offered that it shall be taught, and that the studies in the schools shall be in the English language, and when that proposition is voted down, I can not vote for the admission of that Territory, and never will, under those circumstances.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. When 70 per cent of the people can not read the English language, what are you going to do?

Mr. BOWERS of California. Teach them the English language, the language of the nation to which they seek admission as a State. You can teach the children of that Territory the English language just as quickly as you can teach them any other language, and teach them to be citizens of the Union.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. In what language are you going to print the ballots upon which they vote for or against the Constitution?

Mr. BOWERS of California. That is not the question at issue. I do not care about that. The question is a question of the public schools.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. If you print the ballots in English not more than 30 per cent can read them.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I am not going to discuss that question at all. I am not discussing the question of ballots. I am discussing the question of the public schools.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Do not you think it is utterly absurd to try to bring this nation of greasers in as a State?

Mr. BOWERS of California. No, I think just as much of a Californian as any other person in the world. They are just as good men, whether born in Mexico, New Mexico, in California, or anywhere else, and they make just as good American citizens. My point is that when you admit a Territory into the Union as a State, I want the studies in the public schools to be in the language of the country. And when that question is made an issue here, I will not vote to admit any Territory unless that provision is inserted in the enabling act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from California withdraw his amendment?

Mr. BOWERS of California. I withdraw the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILSON] as modified. The Clerk will report the amendment in the form in which it is now offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, after line 52, insert the following:

"And for teaching the English language as a branch of study in all public schools, but not to the exclusion of other languages."

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The ayes seem to have it; the ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I call for a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the gentleman make the demand for a division. The gentleman from Alabama asks for a division. As many as favor the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILSON] will rise and be counted.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 69, noes 75.

Mr. GEAR and Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Are we voting now on the amendment to the amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We are voting upon the amendment as modified by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. I understood that my amendment was adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; the gentleman's amendment was not adopted. A division was demanded. The question is now being taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio as modified.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Speaker pro tempore appointed as tellers Mr. WILSON of Ohio and Mr. TRACEY.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. WILSON of Ohio was again reported.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the Clerk read the paragraph of the bill to which this amendment is proposed, so that we may see the connection in which the amendment comes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the reading of the preceding words?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I object.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I should think you would.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 81, nays 115, answered "present" 4, not voting 152; as follows:

YEAS—81.

Adams, Ky.	Davis,	Kem,	Reed,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. MARTIN, left the House two hours ago on account of sickness, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. TURNER, is detained from the House on account of sickness, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia with Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa, until further notice.

For this day:

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. MEREDITH with Mr. WAUGH.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland with Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania.

Mr. WEADOCK with Mr. FUNSTON.

Mr. GORMAN with Mr. HOOKER of New York.

Mr. BARTLETT with Mr. NORTHWAY.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain that motion at this time, under the order.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Well, one moment. Has the Speaker examined the order. A number of gentlemen think that under the interpretation of that order an adjournment can now be had, but as I understand the Speaker has examined the order and thinks differently.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the order and is of the opinion that he can not entertain such a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That 10 per cent of the proceeds of the sales of public lands lying within said State, which shall be sold by the United States subsequent to the admission of said State into the Union, after deducting all the expenses incident to the same, shall be paid to the said State, to be used as a permanent fund, the interest of which only shall be expended for the support of the common schools within said state.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the word "ten," which is the second word in section 9, and insert the word "five."

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. That was done in December last.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I thought it was read as ten.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. It was read as five.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment will be considered as agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That all lands herein granted for educational purposes, except as hereinafter otherwise provided, shall be disposed of only at public sale, and at a price not less than $5 per acre, the proceeds to constitute a permanent school fund, the interest of which only shall be expended in the support of said schools. But said lands may, after such regulations as the Legislature shall prescribe, be leased for periods of not more than five years, in quantities not exceeding one section to any one person or company; and such land shall not be subject to preëmption, homestead entry, or any other entry under the land laws of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, but shall be reserved for school purposes only.

Mr. FUNK. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the words in lines 3 and 4, "at a price not less than $5 per acre," and insert "to the highest bidder, subject to the approval of the governor, secretary of state, and State treasurer."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will send up his amendment.

Mr. FUNK. I do this, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of stating that in my opinion a great deal of this land can not be sold at $5 per acre for years to come, and that if it was left to the discretion of the State officers, or some commission, they might sell it at some price and get something out of it. If you put a restriction upon the price and say that it shall not be sold for less than $5 per acre, it will be years before it can be sold; but if you leave it without restriction, and leave it to the people of the Territory, the people who live there, they can sell it and get something out of it.

I have traveled over that Territory, and I know that there are hundreds of thousands of acres that are not worth 10 cents an acre, and can not be for years; but if they can take and sell them at their own discretion, with the approval of a commission of their State officers, they can be sold for something, and it would be of some benefit to them.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, this matter was fully canvassed by the committee when other bills relative to other States were being considered, and it was thought that it was better to retain the provision as it is in the bill, so that these lands might be held until they should rise in value. If they are sold now at public outcry they would necessarily have to be sold to syndicates who would hold them for speculation, because if offered in small tracts they would not bring any price at all. I think it a great deal better to let this provision stand as it is. The Senate took the same view, and a like view was taken in all the hearings before the House committee.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I am profoundly surprised at the suggestion of my friend from Illinois [Mr. FUNK]. There are some matters as to which we may not have had enough opportunity to try experiments, and as to which therefore we may be justified in having different opinions. But, sir, as to the question of the disposal by the several States of the lands which have been appropriated for their benefit, to the use of, or the foundation of, educational institutions within their borders, we have had an almost endless series of experiments. There are, I believe, but two cases in which the liberty has been left to the State that is now proposed by my friend from Illinois in this case where liberty has not been so misused as to fritter away the public benefaction.

There has not, I believe, been a single case where the lands have been withheld from sale until a substantial price could be obtained where such withholding has not inured to the benefit of the State and of the institutions for whose benefit the lands were set aside. It seems to me, sir, that the result of the experiments on this question ought to convince this Congress that the limitation in the bill is a most reasonable one, and that the only question is, not whether it should be weakened, but whether it should not be strengthened and the figures raised at which any sale of these lands should be permitted.

Mr. FUNK. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that there can be no objection whatever to letting the people who live in New Mexico control this matter. I have faith in the people who live there, and I would have faith in any set of men who might be elected to the offices named in my amendment to control the matter honestly and judiciously in the interest of the State and of the people. I believe it would be to the interest of all concerned in that new State if they were permitted to control this matter.

Sir, in my opinion there are thousands of acres of land there that can not be sold for $5 an acre within fifty years of this time, but if no limit was put upon the price, then those lands could be sold for some price and the State would get something out of them, and the lands would probably be improved.

Mr. BOEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. Gentlemen are discussing an amendment that has not been reported to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is in error. The amendment was read, but the Clerk will report it again.

The amendment was again read as above.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, this is a question as to which experience is surely one of the most useful guides. The State which I represent here was admitted into the Union less than five years ago under an enabling act somewhat similar to this, only in that act the minimum price fixed for school lands was $10 an acre instead of $5 as here proposed. Now, let me tell you our experience. In that short time, less than five years, we have sold about 89,000 acres of those lands at an average price of $19.53. The interest on the money that we have received from the sale of that small fraction—only about 4 per cent—of our school lands is now sufficient to pay the entire tuition expenses of our schools. It amounts this year to $8 per capita for the school children of the State, and constitutes an ample fund to pay the expenses of tuition.

We can well afford to hold the remaining 96 per cent of those lands for higher prices. Great fortunes have been made in this country by private individuals buying lands and holding them for an advance, but no individual is so well situated as a State for an operation in that way. The individual must realize on the investment within his lifetime in order to make a success of the speculation, but the State will be to all intents and purposes as young a thousand years from now as it is to-day. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois ought not to prevail.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. FUNK, it was rejected.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that the special order in respect to this bill be postponed and continued until to-morrow after the second morning hour.

Mr. BURROWS. The balance of the time under the order to be taken after the second morning hour to-morrow?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. That request is made, I understand, with a view to adjourning now?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. With a view to adjourning now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] asks unanimous consent that the completion of the special order be postponed until to-morrow after the expiration of the second morning hour. Is there objection?

A MEMBER. What time would it take to complete it now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are twenty minutes remaining before taking the vote. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Several members objected.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OUTHWAITE). The Chair can not entertain that motion.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I think the Chair misapprehends the special rule. I have just read it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has carefully considered the terms of the special rule; and although he regrets to so hold, he is of opinion that a motion to adjourn can not be entertained at this time.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will ask the Chair as a question of order what there is in the special rule that prevents an adjournment. We must have three hours of consideration; but the rule does not say when; and at the expiration of the three hours——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] the Chair will read the language which in his opinion governs this question:

That after three hours' consideration thereof, if so much be necessary, the previous question shall be considered as ordered on pending amendments, and the engrossment and third reading and final passage of the bill; and then, without intervening motion——

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Precisely.

Mr. REED. "And then, without intervening motion."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (reading):

The vote shall be taken upon the third reading thereof and upon the final passage of the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. That is, after the previous question is ordered.

Mr. REED. The word "then" comes in there. "Then without intervening motion."

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. As I construe the order, there may be two hours of debate to-day and one hour of debate to-morrow.

Mr. REED. This is certainly carrying the construction of the phrase "without intervening motion," to what might be called an extreme, even after the wildest exhibitions we have had heretofore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will now have the Clerk proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I am satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that if the Chair will indulge me for a moment, he will see that he is in error as to my motion being out of order. I call the attention of the Chair particularly to the language of the order. It says that, "after three hours' consideration * * * the previous question shall be considered as ordered."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And it says also that "immediately upon the adoption of this order" the three hours' consideration shall be had.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Now it will take but fifteen minutes to conclude the three hours.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I understand that perfectly. [Cries of "Regular order!"] Gentlemen will make nothing by calling the "Regular order." I submit to the Chair, the order says that immediately after the adoption of the order——. [Renewed cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will not undertake to speak against the confusion which gentlemen are creating.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair submits to the gentleman that there are but fourteen minutes left of the time——

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And the Chair has considered this question carefully, and is inclined to adhere to his opinion. Without any personal feeling in the matter but simply from a careful consideration of the rule, and believing that to adjourn at this time would leave this rule unexecuted and leave the subject open to another rule, the Chair declines to entertain the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I renew my request for unanimous consent that the completion of this order be postponed until after the expiration of the second morning hour to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the completion of this order be postponed until the expiration of the second morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object.

The Clerk was proceeding to resume the reading of the bill when—

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Wait one moment. The Chair has ruled that my motion to adjourn is not in order. From that decision of the Chair I respectfully appeal.

Mr. BURROWS. That is right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That appeal, the Chair holds, is out of order; it can not be entertained at this time. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois (during the reading). That, Mr. Speaker, is an exhibition of arbitrariness that is without precedent.

The Clerk read section 14, as follows:

SEC. 14. That all lands granted in quantity or as indemnity by this act shall be selected under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior from the surveyed, unreserved, and unappropriated public lands of the United States within the limits of said State of New Mexico. And there shall be deducted from the number of acres of land donated by this act for specific objects to said State the number of acres therein heretofore donated by Congress to said Territory for similar objects.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, my motion is in order. I move to strike out the last clause read by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the clause of the section proposed to be stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

And there shall be deducted from the number of acres of land donated by this act for specific objects to said State the number of acres therein heretofore donated by Congress to said Territory for similar objects.

Mr. BURROWS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out what the Clerk has just read.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I rise to debate the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The gentleman moves to strike out the clause just read by the Clerk. Before proceeding I wish a page to bring me the special order or rule under which we are operating.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman proceeds, as far as I am concerned, I withdraw the objection to the arrangement proposed. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman from Texas and others to have objected.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Can we not have unanimous consent to let this matter go over until to-morrow?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I hope that will be done.

Mr. WELLS. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will first submit the request of the gentleman again.

The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the continuation and completion of this order be postponed until to-morrow immediately after the expiration of the second morning hour. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. I object.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the Chair indulge me for a moment? I had a consultation with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER], and also with the Chair, and it was agreed, as the gentleman from Alabama will bear me out, that at 5 o'clock, if the House did not object, we should adjourn, with the understanding that the time remaining of the three hours fixed by the rule would be taken to-morrow morning after the second morning hour. Upon that agreement, supposing of course it would be carried out by the House, I notified several gentlemen on this side that the vote would not be taken to-day, and they consequently left the Hall. I submit that it would not be proper to push this to a conclusion, under the circumstances, to-night.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I think the agreement between these gentlemen ought to be carried out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas withdraw the objection?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. At the request of several gentlemen, I stated I would ask unanimous consent for this postponement when the hour of 5 o'clock arrived, but I took pains in more than one case to remind the gentlemen that one objection would defeat the proposition; but it has been so universal to accede to such arrangements, when made by gentlemen who have charge of bills, that some gentlemen have left the House, supposing that no vote would be had to-night.

I am very sorry that objection is made on this side to the arrangement.

Mr. COCKRELL. If there was an agreement, I of course withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then, by unanimous consent, the continuation of this order, there being now eight minutes of the three hours remaining before the time for taking a vote, will be postponed until to-morrow morning after the expiration of the second morning hour, and that the House do now adjourn. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WOLVERTON, for three days, on account of important business.

And then, on motion of Mr. WHEELER of Alabama, by unanimous consent (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. LUCAS, from the Committee on Pensions: A bill (H. R. 3264) granting a pension to Jesse R. K. Lamb, alias Fred. P. McCadden, Company D, Seventh United States Infantry. (Report No. 1174.)

By Mr. MOSES, from the same committee: A bill (H. R. 6659) to increase the pension of Capt. Isaac D. Toll. (Report No. 1175.)

Also, the bill (H. R. 5621) to increase the pension of Ann Catherine Hull. (Report No. 1176.)

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9546) granting a pension to Joshua S. Dye, of Lincoln County, Ky., and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and a resolution of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

Also, a bill (H. R. 7588) for the relief of Addison Baker—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7589) for the relief of Newton Boughn—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALDRICH: Petition of D. W. Wilson and 18 others, of La Grange, Ill., members of fraternal orders, asking for an amendment to income-tax bill which will exclude such organizations—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of the Chicago Board of Trade, approving the plan for a national exhibit at the Cotton States and International Exhibition—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. ARNOLD: Two petitions of citizens of Billings and Millersville, Mo., praying the passage of the Manderson-Hainer bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BELL of Colorado: Resolutions of Washington Camp, No. 1, Patriotic Order Sons of America, and of Silver State Council, No. 3, Junior Order United American Mechanics, favoring passage of House bill 5246—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. BELTZHOOVER: Petition of William B. Kaufman and others, of New Cumberland, Pa., against taxing incomes of beneficiary societies—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BOEN: Protest of the Evangelical Lutheran Immanuel Church of the town of Polk Center, county of Polk and State of Minnesota, by A. Kuhring, pastor, Herman Schmitz, Daniel Gerlach, and Nick Echstein, trustees, against changing the preamble of the Constitution of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BROOKSHIRE: Resolution of Lodge No. 188 of the American Railway Union, of Brazil, Ind., against House bill 7382, the Tawney arbitration bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BYNUM: Petition of 41 citizens of Indianapolis, Ind., for passage of an act recognizing the services of military telegraph operators—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COGSWELL: Petition of Andrew J. Wilson and others, of Salem, Mass., against taxing incomes of beneficiary societies—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DALZELL: Resolutions of the Philadelphia Board of Trade in favor of amending the interstate-commerce law so as to permit pooling under certain conditions—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DRAPER: Petition of 85 citizens of Jamaica Plain, 13 of Norwood, 14 of Boston and Brookline, and of David F. Hays and other citizens of Roslindale, Mass., that the pending tariff bill may be so amended as to exempt fraternal beneficiary societies, etc., from the income-tax provisions—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Rev. George Bullen and other citizens of Newton, Mass., that legislation may be passed preventing the introduction of any lottery matter, etc., within the limits of the United States—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GRADY: Petition of Jacob West, of Harnett County, N. C., for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HUDSON: Petition of A. I. Campbell, asking to be paid money due him under treaty with the Sioux Indians—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SIPE: Three petitions of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of a law by Congress placing the telegraph service under control of the United States Government—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SNODGRASS: Papers to accompany House bill 7577—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. STORER: Memorial of Cincinnati Builders' Exchange in favor of passage of House bill 7402—to the Committee on Railroads and Canals.

By Mr. WILSON of Washington: Petition of Davies & Graus, of New Whatcom, Wash., in opposition to the passage of House bill 5746—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of 87 citizens of the State of Washington, favoring House bill 5746—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolutions of the ministers and delegates of the Tacoma Association of Southwestern Washington, and a petition of 22 citizens of Pullman, Wash., for the destruction of all lottery schemes and enterprises—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of 13 citizens of Port Townsend, Wash., protesting against the income tax on whisky—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 28, 1894.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when,

On motion of Mr. TELLER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriations, as submitted by the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, to complete sundry fish-cultural stations; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending certain alterations in that portion of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill which relates to the office of the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the joint resolution (H. Res. 196) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government be read the second time and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Hale,	Patton,	Teller,
Berry,	Harris,	Peffer,	Vest,
Blackburn,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,	Vilas,
Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Proctor,	Voorhees,
Faulkner,	Kyle,	Quay,	Walsh,
Gallinger,	Mitchell, Oregon	Sherman,	White.
George,	Mitchell, Wis.	Sloup,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Twenty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is no quorum present. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Sergeant-at-Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON, Mr. BATE, Mr. IRBY, Mr. TURPIE, Mr. PALMER, Mr. CALL, Mr. PASCO, Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. PERKINS, Mr. PLATT, Mr. PUGH, Mr. MCLAURIN, Mr. DOLPH, Mr. DIXON, Mr. MILLS, and Mr. COKE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE-PRESIDENT (at 10 o'clock and 22 minutes a. m.). Forty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the joint resolution be read a second time, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Chair be kind enough to state the motion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, to dispense with further proceedings under the order of the Senate to secure a quorum.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the joint resolution be read the second time and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the joint resolution be committed with instructions to the committee to report as an amendment thereto what I hold in my hand, the sundry civil appropriation bill for the coming fiscal year, as it has passed the other House.

I do not propose to ask, and I suppose no one will insist that it shall be done, to have the proposed joint resolution read at the desk, because it would take several hours. I suppose the statement of it will be enough. I move that the joint resolution be committed with instructions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read the second time by its title, and the Chair will entertain the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (H. Res. 196) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.

Mr. HOAR. I object to the third reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was unable to hear the remark of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Is it proposed to read the joint resolution again to-day?

Mr. COCKRELL. The question is not on the third reading of the joint resolution. The question is on its reference.

Mr. HOAR. I move to commit with instructions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the same with the sundry civil appropriation bill as an amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose it is not necessary to have that bill read at length.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I give notice that if the joint resolution shall be reported, I shall move to amend it by substituting the proper and ordinary appropriation bills for the fiscal year beginning July 1. I do not see any reasons why the majority should ask the minority to dispense with all the ordinary methods of making appropriations for the support of the Government in order that they may pass a tariff bill which we suppose is contrary to the opinion and desire of the country and contrary to its true interests, and we are confirmed in that position by the statement of many eminent Democrats on the other side of the Chamber that certain provisions of the bill are liable to very much stronger objections than I have stated.

Two eminent Senators on the other side have declared that a provision which is still in the measure wipes out the sovereignty and autonomy of the States. Other Senators have declared (one of them at least, if not more, a member of the Committee on Finance) that one of the principal provisions in the bill not only does not meet their personal approval, but that it is socialistic, that it is sectional, that it is a blow at property itself. Another Senator who has acted upon the Committee on Finance during a part of the present session, has declared that certain duties which the bill contains not only violate the pledges he has personally made and the pledges his party has made, but the sound construction and interpretation of the Constitution of the United States itself.

Mr. President, we are asked not merely to submit the question whether the tariff bill shall pass after suitable discussion and debate in the judgment of a majority of the Senate—that is one thing; we are asked not merely not to filibuster, as it is called—that is one thing; but with a measure before us so offensive to the men whose votes are essential to its passage, so offensive to us who are nearly a majority of the whole body, and so offensive to the people of the United States if any inference can be drawn from their recent expressions of political opinion, we are asked, in order that the Senate may devote its entire time to the exclusion of all other public business whatever to, I will not say the perfection, but the finishing, the getting through of that measure, to depart from the ordinary, time-honored, uniform, and essential mode of providing for carrying on the Government and to pass at one swoop a joint resolution which continues for thirty days from the 30th of June all the appropriations of the Government for the current fiscal year.

Mr. President, the other side of the Chamber have this matter in their own power. Lay aside the tariff bill, take up your appropriation bills, and devote yourselves to them to-day. We can readily pass the appropriation bills. The Committee on Appropriations has had them in its possession for weeks, some of them for months. There are six appropriation bills, I am told, already before the Senate reported from that committee. The true way is to take up the most important of those bills and pass them, giving to-day to them; sit this evening, if it is necessary, until a reasonable hour, and then take up the next one.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts will please suspend. The hour of half-past 10 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

PETITION.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of W. F. Beaman and 26 other citizens of Massachusetts, praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MILLS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

USE OF RENTED CARS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit a resolution, which I ask may be read, printed, and lie over until to-morrow.

The resolution was read, and ordered to lie over and to be printed, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce is hereby instructed to inquire into the expediency of regulating by law the employment and use of sleeping and parlor cars, not owned by railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce, the cost of operating them, the charges made for their use, and what would be a reasonable charge for the seats, berths, and sections therein.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 32) declaring Massachusetts avenue through the grounds of the Naval Observatory a public street; agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HEARD, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, and Mr. POST managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1954) to amend section 1379, chapter 1, Title XVI, Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to appointments of assistant paymasters in the Navy; and

A bill (S. 2135) to provide that a term of the circuit and district court of the United States for the district of Vermont may be held at Montpelier.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 199) to authorize the Secretary of War to appoint a board of review in certain cases;

A bill (H. R. 6069) to reimburse John Nelson for money paid in 1863 to avoid a draft; and

A bill (H. R. 6447) to fix a term of the Federal district and circuit courts of the southern judicial district of Mississippi, to be held at Meridian, Miss., to include the counties named.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 27th instant approved and signed the act (S. 1995) granting to the Eastern Nebraska and Gulf Railway Company right of way through the Omaha and Winnebago Indian Reservation, in the State of Nebraska.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 66, line 16, page 197, after the word "reasonable," to strike out "times" and insert "hours, between March 1 and August 1, in each year;" so as to read:

Which books shall, at all reasonable hours, between March 1 and August 1 in each year, be open to the assessors and inspectors, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the Senate ready for the question on agreeing to the amendment?

Mr. CHANDLER. On that I ask for a division.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A division is called for on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. VEST. We may as well have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it seems to me that the pending section, section 66, is somewhat objectionable, and I suggest to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] that it certainly ought to be reformed. If the committee will allow the section to be now stricken out, when the bill goes into conference it can be then put in proper form. I think everybody must admit that it is not now in such form as that it ought to pass.

I do not deny the right of the Government, in a matter of this kind, to require corporations to keep books, and that those books, under proper methods, shall be subject to examination by the Government or its agents; it seems that that is necessary in the collection of taxes, but the provision ought to be as inoffensive as possible.

To say that a great corporation like the Pennsylvania Central Railroad Company, or any of the other great railroads, shall be at the mercy of every official of the Government, it seems to me is going entirely too far.

This is not a trifling question. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] yesterday, it was said, exhibited more heat upon it than he had a right to do. I am in favor of the provision of this bill for an income tax; but this income tax is not to be made odious in the beginning, is it? Is the Senator from Missouri and are the other members of the committee anxious to go to the country with a provision touching this subject which will make the bill odious to every lover of liberty in this country and throughout the world?

Mr. President, there are certain fundamental principles of government which can not be sneered at, which can not be laughed down, which can not be treated as trifles. The Senator from Missouri yesterday was inclined to be sarcastic and severe upon the Senator from Delaware, who had in warm language denounced the provisions of this section. He did not denounce them any more than he should have done; he did not denounce them any more than the Senator from Missouri would have done if he were not in charge of this bill.

I repeat, there are certain fundamental principles which underlie a free government. One of them is that every man's house is his castle. I know that will be sneered at by a great many people, but it means more than the words would seem to imply; it means that his house is not to be invaded; it means that there are certain things in the course of his business that he has a right to hide within himself, and that he has a right to keep within his own breast.

There are certain other fundamental principles. One is that there shall be no invasion of a man's premises without a warrant; another is the right of habeas corpus. A great writer upon English law declared that the three principles I have mentioned lie at the foundation of a free government, and that any invasion of them is an invasion of the fundamental principles of liberty.

To say that every corporation which pays an income tax shall open its books to the examination of every revenue officer is a palpable and plain violation of the first two propositions I have named. It is equivalent to proceeding by general warrant, or, as it is termed in France and some other countries, by an administrative warrant.

I am making no factious opposition to this provision. I think there is a fundamental principle in it which can not be violated, and which ought not to be violated; and I agree with the Senator from Delaware, who in substance declared, as I understood him, that anxious as he was to vote for the bill, even that anxiety would not induce him to vote for a principle of this kind.

There is not any sense in it; there is not any propriety in it. There is no earthly reason why the very purpose which is sought to be accomplished can not be accomplished in a constitutional and legal manner. If the committee are to be so determined to have this provision just as they want it, then, in my my judgment, they must take the consequences of it.

I admit the right exists in the Government to require corporations to keep books, and that the Government through its officers, has the right in a proper way to have access to the books; but how are they to have access.

Are the books to be kept open every day for the idle curiosity of a revenue officer, or worse than that, for the purpose of obtaining information upon which the speculator may operate?

There is no need of the Government having access to such books more than once a year, and that is when the revenue returns are made, and when the officer shall come to make his report, if the Government thinks the return has not been a fair one, there should be a provision in this bill that the Government may examine the books. How should it be done? In accordance with the principles which have been applied in all cases, at all times, amongst English-speaking liberty-loving people.

I repeat, Mr. President, that this is an important question, and one which the committee ought to carefully consider. Do the committee propose to violate a tradition and a principle which are dear to every lover of liberty throughout the world simply because such a provision got into this bill in improper shape? Do the committee intend to say that they will not amend it? They have provided in the first part of the section down to the word "order," in line 15, that corporations shall keep books, and that they shall enter the transactions that may be conducted from day to day, so that when the time comes, if the Government official desires, he may have access to truthfully kept books.

How shall the Government get access to such books? How does any well-established government invade the premises of a private citizen for proof of a crime? In the first instance, by the allegation on the part of somebody, supported by affidavit, that there is a necessity for such an examination, then ask the corporation to see its books, and if it declines, go into court and compel their production. Then they are under all the safeguards of the law.

I do not undertake to say to the committee how this thing should be done, but I know it ought to be done in a different way from that proposed. The committee know that, and everybody knows that.

I want to vote for the income tax, but I do not want to vote for it if it is put in an odious and offensive form, and I shall not vote for it if it is put in such form.

If it were absolutely essential that the Government should have access to the books of corporations to preserve equality of taxation, that might be another thing; but that is not necessary. These returns are made once a year, and should be prima facie evidence of their correctness in the first instance. If anyone should think they are not correct, proper provision should be made so that question can be tested according to law. That is all I ask of the committee.

That is all, I understand, the Senator from Delaware asks of the committee. It is not an unreasonable suggestion, and is one, I insist, that the committee ought to examine. If the committee have not the time to properly arrange the matter now, let the whole section go out, so that in conference it may be fixed in accordance with the established principles of a free people and a free government.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment after the word "year" by inserting "upon the due order of some judge of a United States court."

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I think no one can read section 66 without having it excite his special wonder as to how and why it came into this tariff bill and into the income clause of it. It provides, as it came from the House of Representatives, for an examination by assessors and inspectors, yet these officials do not exist and their appointment is not provided for in this bill; and until the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] yesterday suggested that this clause was almost identical with the internal-revenue law providing for the collection of the tax upon distillers of whisky and brewers of beer, I certainly was at sea as to how the provision could have been inserted here, and I am fully satisfied that it should have no place in this bill.

I am not like the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], for I am not in favor of an income tax either upon individuals or corporations. By any vote which I can give I shall endeavor to make the income provision of the bill as objectionable as possible, in the hope that the Senate may ultimately strike out the entire provision relating to the income tax, believing, as I do, that it is unjustifiable as a method of producing the revenues needed for the support of the Government, except in case of dire and exceptional necessity, in fact, as a war necessity; and that in time of peace it is a most dangerous step leading to socialism, on the one hand, and in the direction, on the other hand, of the creation in this country of a moneyed aristocracy, which, paying the expenses of the Government, will ultimately seek, and probably obtain, its entire control. I think the latter danger is the one more greatly to be dreaded. The greatest disaster that can befall the great Republic is that it should pass under the rule of men of great wealth, and this is the first direct invitation to them to assume that control.

But this particular section is extremely novel in some of its terms. By the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri it is required not only of corporations, but of companies and associations, that they shall keep books that shall be open to the most exceptional and dangerous character of inspection. If companies and associations—by which I take it partnerships may be intended——

Mr. ALLISON. Partnerships are excluded by an amendment already adopted.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am pleased to hear it, but that does not appear in the printed bill. If companies and associations, if partnerships or not, are included to be subjected to this sort of objectionable espionage, this character of unwarranted inspection, upon what principle is it that private individuals or partnerships are excluded from the same inspection and espionage? If it is proper for the one it should certainly be imposed on the other. No reason, no logical excuse can be given for this constant inspection of the books and the business of corporations, companies, and associations which will not apply with just as much force to the business, the books, and the accounts of individuals and partnerships. Such inspection if it has any legitimate use is for the purpose of preventing fraud. Are companies, associations, or corporations more apt to attempt fraud when it comes to the matter of the collection of taxes than are private individuals? No such general proposition can be insisted upon.

Mr. President, there is another novel feature about this section. Within the clause and nowhere within the limits of the bill can be found any punishment for the violation of the provisions of the section. It is without a punitive section. Unquestionably in the internal-revenue act, from which this section was probably taken, there was a general provision for the punishment of distillers and brewers who might violate any of the provisions of the bill, but there is nothing of that sort in this bill. There is in the general statutes, so far as can be ascertained, no general provision of law which will reach the man, the corporation, the company, or the association that shall violate this section; that shall refuse to keep full, regular, and accurate books of account, or, keeping such books of account, shall say to the assessor, the inspector, the internal-revenue officer or agent, or the collector, in short any Government official: "These books are not open to your inspection; you shall not see them." They can shut their doors against the Government officer and prevent him from entering the counting room of the corporation or company for the purpose of making such inspection; and where in the bill is the penalty for such disobedience of the statute?

There is no more foolish, I think I might say there is no more unsafe, sort of legislation than that which simply announces a principle or proclaims a duty and affixes no penalty for disobedience of the law, and does not provide for its enforcement. It is a worthless provision, a useless thing, one of parade and not of service, and for that reason alone, it seems to me, should be stricken from the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HALE. Let it be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the amendment after the word "year:"

Upon the due order of some judge of a United States court.

Mr. PEFFER. Let the amendment as proposed to be amended be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as proposed to be amended will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The amendment if amended as proposed will read:

Which books shall, at all reasonable hours, between March 1 and August 1 in each year, upon the due order of some judge of a United States court, be open to the assessors and inspectors, etc.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Missouri will yield to the suggestion made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and strike out this section. It would save a great deal of time, because numerous amendments will be offered to it undoubtedly unless it be stricken out.

The Government is thoroughly protected by provisions already in the bill as respects the income tax. In the first place, if a corporation or an individual shall fail to make a return, it is the duty of the collector or deputy collector, upon the best information he can ascertain, to make a return; and when that return is made there is a penalty of 50 per cent added, and in case a false or fraudulent return is made in the opinion of the collector, because it must rest in the opinion of the collector, then a penalty of 100 per cent is added.

That puts the corporation or company upon the defense, unless it yields to the severe penalty proposed. So I think there is ample and safe protection without this section. I doubt very much whether it is a wise thing for us to undertake to say just how all the books of all the corporations organized wholly under State authority, about which we have no jurisdiction except that of the collection of taxes, shall be kept, merely for the purpose of securing 2 per cent upon the earnings of those corporations.

I agree with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] that no reason can apply for searching the books of corporations which will not also apply to the searching of the books of individuals. Indeed, a corporation is less liable to tamper with its books, because in the nature of things there must be a large number of people surrounding a corporation.

Mr. CULLOM. Who have a right to investigate?

Mr. ALLISON. A board of directors, a president, a bookkeeper, a cashier, or what not, have a right to investigate and do investigate, whereas a private individual can keep his own books as he chooses to keep them and his own secrets as he chooses to keep them. Thus if an individual desires to evade the tax the opportunity for such evasion is greater in the nature of things than in regard to books where a great number of people have the right of inspection, and ordinarily do inspect them.

So I hope that without taking a vote on the various amendments, the Senator from Missouri will consent to strike out this section wholly. No harm can result from it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I think the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa is sound. I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the provisions of the Revised Statutes, title "Internal Revenue, chapter 2, Of Assessments and Collections," where section 3173 provides:

It shall be the duty of any person, partnership, firm, association, or corporation, made liable to any duty, special tax, stamp, or tax imposed by law, when not otherwise provided for.

The section proceeds to require a return of the amount of tax which any person owes. Then, at the bottom of the section, follows this provision:

And if any person on being notified or required as aforesaid shall refuse or neglect to render such list or return within the time required as aforesaid, or whenever any person who is required to deliver a monthly or other return of objects subject to tax fails to do so at the time required, or delivers any return which, in the opinion of the collector, is false or fraudulent or contains any undervaluation or understatement, it shall be lawful for the collector to summon such person or any other person, having possession, custody, or care of books of account containing entries relating to the business of such person, or any other person he may deem proper, to appear before him and produce such books, at a time and place named in the summons, and to give testimony or answer interrogatories, under oath, respecting any objects liable to tax or the returns thereof.

Then there follows, in section 3175, a provision as follows:

Whenever any person summoned under the two preceding sections neglects or refuses to obey such summons, or to give testimony, or to answer interrogatories as required, the collectors may apply to the judge of the district court or to a commissioner of the circuit court of the United States for the district within which the person so summoned resides for an attachment against him as for a contempt. It shall be the duty of the judge or commissioner to hear the application, and, if satisfactory proof is made, to issue an attachment, directed to some proper officer, for the arrest of such person, and upon his being brought before him to proceed to a hearing of the case; and upon such hearing the judge or commissioner shall have power to make such order as he shall deem proper, not inconsistent with existing laws for the punishment of contempts, to enforce obedience to the requirements of the summons and to punish such person for his default or disobedience.

I think those provisions will apply to the income tax if the present bill passes. They are ample to secure all the testimony which collectors of internal revenue may need, and the rights of the citizen and the rights of the corporation are protected, because if any undue attempt is made to inspect the books of any person or corporation, that person or corporation can refuse to allow the inspection, and can only be made to submit to the inspection by the order of a court; which, of course, will protect the rights of the person or the corporation against any undue interference.

There is a further provision imposing a penalty upon persons refusing to appear and testify. It is section 3179:

SEC. 3179. Whenever any person delivers or discloses to the collector or deputy any false or fraudulent list, return, account, or statement, with intent to defeat or evade the valuation, enumeration, or assessment intended to be made, or, being duly summoned to appear to testify, or to appear and produce such books as aforesaid, neglects to appear or to produce said books, he shall be fined not exceeding $1,000, or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court, with costs of prosecution.

So this clause stands absolutely without justification unless it is intended to create a new, cruel, wicked, and uncontrollable right of the internal-revenue officers to invade the premises and examine the books and records of every corporation in the country. As I understand the proposed law, if there is a corporation whose net profits amount to $100 a year, it must pay $2 to the United States Government; and in order that it may be compelled to pay that $2 it must keep books exactly as provided in this section, and it is subject to have all its books inspected at any time by any internal-revenue collector or deputy collector.

I submit that the Senator from Missouri can not avoid abating somewhat the obstinacy with which he clings to the provisions of the bill as it has come from the committee or from the Democratic caucus, creating it as a perfect and sacred instrument, and allow this clause to go out.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I can not assent to the request that all of this section shall be stricken out. I have no pride of opinion about it, for I am not the author of it. It came to us from the House of Representatives, approved by the Treasury Department. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue thought it was a necessary enactment. At the same time I recognize the force of what was said by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] in regard to the seemingly harsh features of this transaction. As to the rhetoric about outraging rights and trampling upon liberty and the palladium of the Constitution, I pay very little attention to it.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Missouri approves the legal points but doubts the propriety of the rhetoric?

Mr. VEST. I do not choose to let the Senator from New York make any part of my speech, whether it is a good one or a bad one. I simply wish to say that this is an excise provision and not so harsh as a great many excise provisions which have not excited any rhetoric in this Chamber that I am aware of. When we submit to having a lady examined by customs officers and made to take off even her clothing in order that the excise laws or the import laws, as you choose to term them, may not be violated, we should not be so extremely critical of an enactment like this in regard to corporations.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has prepared an amendment which I have changed in certain regards and which I present to the Senate as a substitute, in the hope that it may terminate the debate, which is my principal object. I move to strike out all of section 66 after the word "order" in line 15, and substitute for the part stricken out what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "order" in line 15, section 66, page 197, insert:

And whenever a collector or deputy collector of the district in which any corporation, company, or association is assessable, shall believe that a true and correct return of the income of such corporation, company, or association has not been made, he shall make an affidavit of such belief and of the grounds on which it is founded, and file the same with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and if said Commissioner shall, on examination thereof, conclude there is good ground for such belief, he shall issue a request in writing to such corporation, company, or association to permit such inspection to be made; and if such corporation, company, or association shall refuse to comply with such request, then the collector or deputy collector of the district shall make from such information as he can obtain an estimate of the amount of such income, and then add 50 per cent thereto, which said assessment, so made, shall then be the lawful assessment of such income.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri offers the amendment as a substitute. The first question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the Senator from New York. The substitute will be in order after amendments to perfect the text have been disposed of.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Does the Senator from Missouri wish to be understood as saying that the affidavit made by the deputy collector shall be filed with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or with the collector of internal revenue?

Mr. VEST. With the Commissioner.

Mr. HILL. The amendment just proposed by the Senator from Missouri goes further than the point we were discussing. It is more than an amendment to the subject-matter of the section. The section only relates to the keeping of books and the inspection of books.

I am inclined to doubt the legality of this whole proceeding, and it strikes me that not only should this section be reconstructed, but that the preceding section of the bill must also be reconstructed.

My theory of this matter is that you can authorize by statute a collector to impose a tax in any way he sees fit, by investigation, by inquiry, from his personal knowledge, or in any other manner that the statute may authorize; and if a citizen, doubting the propriety of his assessment, makes an application to the collector, who for this purpose is to be the assessor, and submits to his jurisdiction, the citizen can then be sworn, and he can be required to produce his books and papers. But I submit, as a question of constitutional law, that no power can be conferred upon the collector in the first instance to compel an examination of the assessed party nor an inspection of his books and papers, and that an order of the court would not confer any such jurisdiction. Therefore the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, while well intended, and in that respect would help the bill if it were constitutional, does not reach the point involved.

Now, it is that distinction which must be observed. The voluntary application of an assessed party for a reduction of the taxation, whereby he presents himself to the officer and gives jurisdiction to an officer to make an inquiry, and whereby the collector may be vested with the jurisdiction not only to swear the assessed party, but also to inspect the books, is one thing. The other is where the party stands back upon his reserved right, and simply says to the collector, "Do as you please, sir; you may make up my taxes as you please. You can not examine me; you can not examine my books." I submit that when he places himself upon his reserved rights, when he stands upon his constitutional privileges, he can not be compelled either by the order of a court or by any statute first to be sworn himself, and second to submit his papers for examination.

The Senator from Colorado I think has been studying this question, and I should like to hear his views upon this particular point before I go any further, if he would oblige me with them.

Mr. TELLER. I have been reading the report referred to, but I have not read very much of it. I prefer not to express an opinion at this time.

Mr. HILL. I cite a case upon this point, the case of Boyd vs. The United States (116 United States Reports, 616), which was argued in December, 1885, and decided in February, 1886. I will read the whole of the headnotes:

The fifth section of the act of June 22, 1874, entitled "An act to amend the customs-revenue laws," etc., which section authorizes a court of the United States, in revenue cases, on motion of the Government attorney, to require the defendant or claimant to produce in court his private books, invoices, and papers, or else the allegations of the attorney to be taken as confessed, held to be unconstitutional and void as applied to suits for penalties or to establish a forfeiture of the party's goods, as being repugnant to the fourth and fifth amendments of the Constitution.

Where proceedings were in rem to establish a forfeiture of certain goods alleged to have been fraudulently imported without paying the duties thereon, pursuant to the twelfth section of said act: Held, that an order of the court made under said fifth section, requiring the claimants of the goods to produce a certain invoice in court for the inspection of the Government attorney, and to be offered in evidence by him, was an unconstitutional exercise of authority, and that the inspection of the invoice by the attorney and its admission in evidence were erroneous and unconstitutional proceedings.

It does not require actual entry upon premises and search for and seizure of papers to constitute an unreasonable search, and seizure within the meaning of the fourth amendment; a compulsory production of a party's private books and papers to be used against himself or his property in a criminal or penal proceeding, or for a forfeiture, is within the spirit and meaning of the amendment.

It is equivalent to a compulsory production of papers, to make the nonproduction of them a confession of the allegations which it is pretended they will prove, etc.

* * * * * * * *

A proceeding to forfeit a person's goods for an offense against the laws, though civil in form, and whether in rem or in personam, is a "criminal case" within the meaning of that part of the fifth amendment which declares that no person "shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself."

I call attention right here to the fact that this is a proceeding whereby the collector is enabled to double the amount of the assessment, which for every purpose is an effectual judgment against the assessed party. It is a forfeiture; it is an increase of his taxes; a penalty within the meaning of the law. Then the syllabus says:

The seizure or compulsory production of a man's private papers to be used in evidence against him—

It is the broad doctrine enunciated—

is equivalent to compelling him to be a witness against himself, and, in a prosecution for a crime, penalty or forfeiture, is equally within the prohibition of the fifth amendment.

Both amendments relate to the personal security of the citizen. They nearly run into and mutually throw light upon each other. When the thing forbidden in the fifth amendment, namely, compelling a man to be a witness against himself, is the object of a search and seizure of his private papers, it is an "unreasonable search and seizure" within the fourth amendment.

Search and seizure of a man's private papers to be used in evidence for the purpose of convicting him of a crime, recovering a penalty, or of forfeiting his property, is totally different from the search and seizure of stolen goods, dutiable articles on which the duties have not been paid, and the like, which rightfully belong to the custody of the law.

Constitutional provisions for the security of person and property should be liberally construed.

In the light of this authority it strikes me that not only this whole section should be eradicated, that it can not be amended so that it will not violate these constitutional provisions, because the whole effect of the inquiry is to do what? To enable an assessment to be made, to enable a forfeiture possibly to be had, a penalty to be inflicted—it is called a penalty—and a penalty perhaps double the amount of the taxation. All these are semijudicial proceedings. They result in a forfeiture of property. They result in a tax being duly levied.

Therefore it seems to me that this section should go out; that it should not be amended in the form specified, because that does not help the case any under the authority cited; but that the previous section should be amended so that the collector should not have the right, if a party does not appear before him to ask for a reduction, to summon that party, to compel him to go upon the stand and compel the production of his books and papers.

Senators recollect the situation in the Tilden case. Mr. Tilden declined to make any return. He allowed the Government to make his return. They claimed this very right of inquisition against them. The case went to the courts, in some phases; I do not recollect now the precise form. Finally the whole question came to the Supreme Court of the United States, although the preliminary and intermediate proceeding did not.

Mr. President, I have stated what I think is the situation and the law. The citizen can stand upon his reserved rights. "Yes, you may assess me. You have that power. I may decline to make a return if I have a mind to do so. You may assess me any amount you please. All right. I may pay it or appeal or do something else, but if I do not submit myself to his jurisdiction, he can not summon me to go before someone and be sworn. He can not summon me to produce my books and papers to make me give evidence against myself."

Where is the constitutional protection here which usually accompanies every statute of this character, namely, that the answers of the witness shall not be used against him in any civil or criminal proceeding? It has been held over and over again that a statute which omits these necessary guarantees to the witness is unconstitutional.

Mr. President, we are treading upon most dangerous ground in these very enactments, and the provisions do not seem to have been prepared with that care which ought to accompany a statute of this character.

Mr. VEST. Waiving the criticism and the comment of the Senator from New York—it is greatly to be regretted that he or someone else did not have the duty assigned him of drafting these provisions—I should like to ask the Senator if there is not a provision upon the statute book of New York to-day that gives the collector the power to make a taxpayer answer questions under oath?

Mr. HILL. None whatever.

Mr. VEST. That is, he is compelled to declare himself in the event that there is a question as to his assessment?

Mr. HILL. No; I will explain what there is, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. VEST. Very good.

Mr. HILL. It is the very case I cited. If he appears before them and asks for a reduction, then the party can be sworn. He makes an application to the assessor.

Mr. VEST. Granting all that the Senator says to be true, which I do not admit—for I can not for an instant contemplate a condition of the collection of revenue in any State where the party can stand silent and refuse to give information or make any return and still be held innocent of any penalty; that, it seems to me, is destructive of the collection of all revenue; but waiving that, under the amendment which was drawn by the Senator from Mississippi and amended by myself, the provision is simply that if the collector of internal revenue believes that a corporation is concealing its assets to avoid a tax he shall make an affidavit of the fact and send it to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

If he believes there is ground for the statement, he requests in writing the corporation to make a return, and if the corporation refuses to make the return he can then do what the Senator from New York concedes any collector has a right to do—make up the return according to the best information he can get.

Mr. HILL. However, he must make it not from the sworn examination of the party, but——

Mr. VEST. There is nothing about a sworn examination in this amendment. You can not force the party to come up and swear.

Mr. HILL. What is the point, then? I do not see any——

Mr. VEST. The point is you collect the revenue upon the assessment made by the collector from the best information he can obtain, which is the provision in regard to individuals in the bill. We put corporations on the same footing with individuals.

Mr. HALE. That is what I wanted to ask the Senator, because I have some trouble in getting at just what his amendment does cover. Has the Senator any doubt, if the amendment is adopted, that corporations, in submitting to the income tax imposed here, will have the same rights of appeal and hearing upon all of the processes of collecting the revenue that individuals have?

Mr. VEST. The right of appeal is given to everybody under the bill.

Mr. HALE. The Senator thinks the general provisions found in the preceding section which provide for appeal and hearing are not cut off by the rather drastic provisions of his amendment. He will notice that this amendment, which it seems to me has great merit as far as it goes, does not in any way refer to any question being tried or tested before a tribunal except the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who, from all the facts which he may gather, may at once resort to what is called the dooming features of the bill. I did not find in the amendment as it was read anything that gives the right to the associated persons forming a corporation of the same appeal and hearing provided in the previous section for individuals.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Maine will allow me, I think the amendment the Senator has offered provides that the dooming shall be final. I think there is such language in the amendment.

Mr. HALE. That I do not remember.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let it be again read.

Mr. VEST. It simply says that they shall be held to be the assessment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then, how can the Senator say the cor po ration has an appeal to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the same as an individual when it shall be final?

Mr. VEST. I suppose when judgment is rendered, unless there is an appeal, it is a finality. It is like the judgment of a court, which may be reversed in the appellant jurisdiction above. It does not say that it shall be final.

Mr. CHANDLER. But here as to personal incomes are very elaborate provisions, giving the right of appeal, first, from the assistant collector to the collector, then from the collector to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and testimony is to be taken on notice, and then there is a finality. We discussed that yesterday. Now, as to corporations, the Senator seems to provide that the collector of internal revenue can assess a tax and add 50 per cent to it, and that shall be final without any appeal; and yet he says to the Senator from Maine that he thinks the right of appeal exists. I want the Senator to reconcile his statement with the clause in the amendment he offers.

Mr. VEST. I have not any trouble myself in regard to it, I confess, for the simple reason that when a corporation refuses on the request of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to make any statement I do not think it ought to have an appeal.

Mr. HALE. And the individual has an appeal?

Mr. VEST. An individual does not refuse at the request of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. There is no such provision as to individuals. Here is a specific provision that when the Commissioner of Internal Revenue makes requests in writing and the corporation declines to accede to it and stands boldly and defiantly against the law and says, "We do not propose to assist you at all in the collection of this tax"——

Mr. HALE. Right there, even after there has been brought to the attention of the Commissioner by the collector the refusal to render tax or submit books, does the Senator think upon that the corporation should be doomed at once without any hearing, when the dooming feature is not applied in any case to the individual without a hearing? Of course the Senator understands that this feature, which has been always known as the dooming feature, is a very drastic provision; it is very punitive; in many cases it is destructive of business, and it is not intended that it shall be applied. It seems to me it ought to be subject to the common wisdom exercised in all legislation that an extreme penalty shall not be inflicted without due hearing. I will say, further, that as I listened to the amendment of the Senator that part had not been looked out for. The amendment, of course, may have been drawn in some haste. I do not think the Senator would want to submit corporations to any different procedure from individuals.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will allow me, it seems to me in most of the States the law prescribes a provision in relation to the return of schedules of taxes in the first place, and then a penalty attaches for a false return. For instance, in my State, the provision is as follows:

> If any person or corporation shall give a false or fraudulent list, schedule, or statement required by this act, or shall fail or refuse to deliver to the assessor, when called on for that purpose, a list of the taxable personal property which he is required to list under this act, he or it shall be liable to a penalty of not less than $10 nor more than $3,000, to be recovered in any proper form of action, in the name of the people of the State of Illinois, on the complaint of any person.

It seems to me that when the Government officer comes to make up the amount that is to be paid, if the corporation or individual is called upon to make a report and fails to do it in a way satisfactory to the Government officer, there ought to be a penalty for it, and we should not give him authority to dig into the private business of either a person or a corporation.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Missouri is seeking a perfectly legitimate object. There must be abundant precedents in all the States for what he is trying to do; that is to say, all the States I think have a process of getting at a true assessment of taxable property. I will state very briefly the process in my own State. All our work of making lists, assessments, and collections of taxes, etc., is done by the unit of our government, the town. We have a board of assessors and a board of relief. Early in October notice is given to every citizen who has taxable property that he must make out a list and swear to it.

If he does not make out his list within a certain time the assessors make it out to the best of their ability for him, giving him notice that he may appear in January before the board of relief and show that the assessors have done him injustice. Upon that hearing they have a right to strike out any item or to add any item that they please. Nothing is said about his bringing his books. I suppose they might honestly ask him, having some doubt of him, "Are you willing to submit your books to our examination?" But there is no compulsory process. If he thinks it is a little more than it ought to be, and yet does not wish to go into any further hearing, he will pay it.

In short, the process is this: The officers of the town assess the property if a man does not bring in his own list. They give him a chance to be heard. They will reduce it, and after hearing him they may add to it, but he goes before them and states his case, and shows why there ought to be a reduction and why there ought not to be an increase. There is no offensive process about the matter, but it is thrown upon the citizen himself. He has a fair hearing before a board of respectable neighbors.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the Senator from New York on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. CHANDLER. On that I ask for a division.

Mr. HARRIS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. SMITH (when Mr. MCPHERSON'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON] is absent from the Chamber on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

Mr. PATTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], who is absent from the city and will be away for some days. I announce the pair for the day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote. I find the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] is absent.

Mr. DANIEL (after having voted in the affirmative). I see that the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE], with whom I have a general pair, is not present. I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MARTIN], and let my vote stand.

Mr. CAMDEN (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], whom I do not see in the Chamber. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CULLOM. I inquire whether the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. CULLOM. I stand paired with that Senator. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Allen,	Daniel,	Kyle,	Pugh,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Lindsay,	Ransom,
Berry,	George,	McLaurin,	Roach,
Blanchard,	Harris,	Mills,	Vest,
Brice,	Hunton,	Mitchell, Oregon	Vilas,
Caffery,	Irby,	Murphy,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Jarvis,	Pasco,	Walsh,
Coke,	Jones, Ark.	Peffer,	White.

NAYS—17.

Aldrich,	Gallinger,	Hoar,	Sherman,
Allison,	Hale,	McMillan,	Shoup.
Chandler,	Hawley,	Perkins,
Dixon,	Higgins,	Platt,
Dolph,	Hill,	Proctor,

NOT VOTING—36.

Blackburn,	Frye,	Manderson,	Quay,
Butler,	Gibson	Martin,	Smith,
Call,	Gordon,	Mitchell, Wis.	Squire,
Camden,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Cameron,	Gray.	Morrill,	Teller,
Carey,	Hansbrough,	Palmer,	Turpie,
Cullom,	Jones, Nev.	Patton,	Washburn,
Davis,	Lodge,	Pettigrew,	Wilson,
Dubois,	McPherson,	Power,	Wolcott.

So the amendment to the amendment was laid on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HALE. Although it is not upon that amendment, while the roll call was being taken I found the general provisions with reference to imposing penalties after full hearing.

If the Senator from Missouri will turn to page 178, if it is not already clear in his mind, he will find that, following the general provisions for a return by a list of property assessable, for refusing to return such list or neglecting to do so, upon the matter being certified by the deputy collector to the collector and by the collector to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, as the Senator provides in his amendment, certain penalties of 50 per cent may be assessed, it being the execution or invocation of the dooming power. The proviso at the end of page 178 declares "that no penalty shall be assessed upon any person," and the words follow, as the Senator will see, in smaller letters, "or corporation, company, or association." Are those words included?

Mr. ALDRICH. They are in.

Mr. HALE. Then it will read:

That no penalty shall be assessed upon any person or corporation, company, or association for such neglect or refusal or for making or rendering a false or fraudulent return, except after reasonable notice of the time and place of hearing, to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

My only question is, with the words "corporation, company, or association" in the provision declaring that this penalty shall not be assessed upon such except upon a hearing, as that applies distinctly to returns or lists for income or neglect or refusal to make returns, whether upon this new feature of dooming a man because he will not let his books be seen, which is another and distinct matter from either returning or neglecting or refusing to return income lists, the general proposition that no penalty shall be laid without a hearing would apply.

The provision is "that no penalty shall be assessed upon any person or corporation, company, or association for such neglect or refusal;" and such neglect or refusal is found in the pages preceding, which cover only returns of lists. Therefore, I am afraid that the general provisions which apply to hearings being given before this great penalty is imposed would not apply to this new and distinctive feature where the doom is put on and 50 or 100 per cent added for refusing to open the books. In that view, if that doubt is properly a subject of consideration, I ask the Senator whether he would have on this distinct subject-matter penalties imposed without a hearing?

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, a single word in reply to the Senator from Maine. No rule of law is better established among civilized nations than that every litigant shall have his day in court. The provision which we are considering now differs from the House provisions of the bill in this, that here is a case under the amendment as proposed, in which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue addresses a request in writing to a corporation to make a return. There is notice of the fullest sort. There is a request from the Commissioner. It seems to me that the corporation to which it is addressed has its day in court.

If it declines to accept the invitation or request, then nothing else is better established in law and equity than that the party is estopped afterwards from complaining that due notice was not given. No principle can be better established than that, and it ought to apply in an excise law above all others. It seems to me that in what the Senator has stated none of the facts are applicable.

Mr. HALE. Then the Senator holds that the proviso at the bottom of page 178, which provides for a list and making returns, does not apply here because the circumstances are different, and it ought not to apply?

Mr. VEST. Yes; I think this is a specific provision.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator whether his theory of this additional 50 per cent, or whatever it is, is that it is a fine or penalty?

Mr. VEST. I think it is a penalty upon the parties, so called.

Mr. HOAR. Has it not been expressly asserted by the courts, and is it not the settled constitutional law of this country, that no fine or penalty can be assessed except by a judicial tribunal?

Mr. VEST. I think the Commissioner of Internal Revenue could assess it as a penalty for the refusal to make a return or pay the tax. It is done in all the excise laws. Under the State laws you do not have to go into a court and institute a regular suit in order to inflict a penalty.

Mr. HOAR. In my own State, speaking for one State only, they have always carefully avoided asserting any such power. When the man fails to bring in his list on due notice, public or personal, the assessor proceeds to make up as best he can his own judgment as to the extent of the man's property, called dooming in popular language; but it is the assessor's judgment of the amount of tax the man ought to pay in the getting at which he is under the constraint of his official oath as in all his duties; and if a man has without reason failed to bring in his list he is not at liberty to appeal from that judgment or to get an abatement. The man is not entitled to complain of a judgment which he has not done all that in him lies to instruct in due time.

But the State of Massachusetts (and I suppose it is true of all the other States; the Senator from Illinois read a similar provision from the law in his State) has never undertaken to say that a nonjudical officer might impose a penalty based upon certain proceedings of which he takes notice or finds resisted. I see the Senator from Tennessee standing at his place. I suppose he is waiting to lay the Constitution of the United States on the table if he can get at it in any way.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to lay the Senator from Massachusetts on the table just now, if I could do so. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that it is beyond the legislative power to authorize a nonjudicial officer to impose a fine or penalty; that it has to be ascertained by the courts and fixed by the courts.

I have a case here, to which I will refer, where that doctrine is asserted. The decision was given by Chief Justice Gray, then chief justice of the State of Massachusetts, now a distinguished member of the Supreme Court of the United States. That was a case where the Legislature had undertaken to vest in the common council of a city the authority to imprison and punish for contempt. That case applied to imprisonment; but certainly a fine is exactly the same in principle as imprisonment. Chief Justice Gray said:

The Legislature may also provide for the punishment, upon indictment and trial in the courts of justice, of any person who, being duly summoned, refuses to appear and testify before any board or tribunal upon a matter which it is authorized by law to investigate or decide. But the Legislature can not delegate to or confer upon municipal boards or officers that are not courts of justice, and whose proceedings are not an exercise of judicial power, the authority to imprison or punish without right of appeal or trial by jury.

That doctrine was reaffirmed in the decision rendered by Mr. Justice Harlan in the case of the Interstate Commerce Commission, recently published. The court say:

Such a body—

The court is speaking of the Interstate Commerce Commission—could not, under our system of government and consistently with due process of law, be invested with authority to compel obedience to its orders by a judgment of fine or imprisonment. Except in the particular instances enumerated in the Constitution, and considered in Anderson vs. Dunn (6 Wheat., 204), and in Kilbourn vs. Thompson (103 United States, 168, 190), of the exercise by either House of Congress of its right to punish.

* * * * * * *

The power to impose fine or imprisonment in order to compel the performance of a legal duty imposed by the United States, can only be exerted under the law of the land, by a competent judicial tribunal having jurisdiction in the premises.

The vital and fundamental objection to this whole scheme is, that it undertakes to vest in the collector or Commissioner, a nonjudicial tribunal, the power to impose a fine and collect it.

Mr. President, if our lively and wide-awake Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], who seems to be the Mentor of all of us, desires to make his motion, I yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. HARRIS. I avail myself of the kindly suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, and move to lay the amendment of the Senator from New York on the table.

Mr. HILL. I ask to have the amendment read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 16, section 66, after the word "reasonable," it is proposed to strike out the word "times" and insert "hours, between March 1 and August 1, in each year."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the amendment of the committee be again stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri from the committee will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "order," in line 15, section 66, it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the section and insert:

And whenever a collector or deputy collector of the district in which any corporation, company, or association is assessable shall believe that a true and correct return of the income of such corporation, company, or association has not been made, he shall make an affidavit of such belief, and of the grounds on which it is founded, and file the same with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and if said Commissioner shall, on examination thereof, conclude there is good ground for such belief, he shall issue a request in writing to such corporation, company, or association to permit such inspection to be made. And if such corporation, company, or association shall refuse to comply with such request, then the collector or deputy collector of the district shall make, from such information as he can obtain, an estimate of the amount of said income, and then add 50 per cent thereto, which said assessment, so made, shall then be the lawful assessment of such income.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is a reference made in the amendment to an inspection, but there is nothing left in the section in regard to the inspection, and there is nothing in the section as it would read if amended that will give any information as to what kind of inspection is authorized.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Secretary to read that part of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri which refers to the action of the Commissioner after the certification has been made to him by the collector.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. HALE. I propose to offer an amendment——

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator allow me to modify the amendment so as to correct a verbal inaccuracy in it?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I modify the amendment by striking out the word "such," before the word "inspection;" and after the word "inspection," by inserting "of the books of such corporation, company, or association."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask to have it read as it will appear with the modification.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read as modified.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let it be read in connection with the rest of section 66, so that we may have the whole thing before us.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think it is necessary in order to make it intelligible.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out the word "such," before the word "inspection" and after the word "inspection," by inserting "of the books of such corporation, company, or association;" so as to read:

SEC. 66. That it shall be the duty of every corporation, company, or association, doing business for profit, to keep full, regular, and accurate books of account, upon which all its transactions shall be entered from day to day in regular order, and whenever a collector or deputy collector of the district in which any corporation, company or association is assessable shall believe that a true and correct return of the income of such corporation, company, or association has not been made, he shall make an affidavit of such belief and of the grounds on which it is founded, and file the same with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and if said Commissioner shall, on examination thereof, conclude there is good ground for such belief he shall issue a request in writing to such corporation, company, or association to permit an inspection of the books of such corporation, company, or association to be made; and if such corporation, company, or association shall refuse to comply with such request, then the collector or deputy collector of the district shall make from such information as he can obtain an estimate of the amount of such income, and then add 50 per cent thereto, which said assessment so made shall then be the lawful assessment of such income.

Mr. HALE. After the words "examination thereof," I move to insert "and after full hearing upon notice given to all parties."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "thereof," it is proposed to insert, "and after full hearing upon notice given to all parties;" so as to read:

And if said Commissioner shall, on examination thereof, and after full hearing upon notice given to all parties, conclude there is good ground for such belief, etc.

Mr. HALE. Is that amendment accepted by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. VEST. Yes, I accept it.

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out the words "and then add 50 per cent thereto."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out in the fifth line from the bottom the words "and then add 50 per cent thereto."

Mr. HOAR. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri being so amended will make the Internal Revenue Commissioner the final judge of the amount to be assessed. The other is a mere penalty, which the Supreme Court of the United States and the State courts have decided over and over again, if I can understand their decisions, can not be enforced unless by a judicial officer.

If a penalty—and the Senator himself has said he understands it as a penalty—is expedient, and if it is a matter of sound public legislative policy that the penalty should be imposed in addition to the taxes upon the persons who unreasonably refuse to bring in their lists, it seems to me what the Senator from Missouri ought to do is to provide that the certificate should be sent by the internal-revenue officer to the proper circuit court of the circuit where the defendant is domiciled, that there should be a complaint, and that the penalty should be imposed upon that complaint. That is the only constitutional way, in my judgment, to reach it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am glad the Senator from Missouri has finally decided to abandon the indefensible and unconstitutional provisions of this section as it was originally reported by the committee. His action this morning does credit certainly to his intelligence and judgment.

I think I ought to say a single word in answer to his suggestions made this morning and yesterday in regard to the stringent provisions of the act of 1890. He says that we put into the act of 1890 provisions which were as objectionable as those contained in this section, and he cites the case of the examination of merchandise imported into the United States. I do not think the Senator intends really to make comparison between that provision and this. Of course Congress has the power to determine, as was said yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], the terms upon which any merchandise shall be imported into the United States, and any provision, however stringent as to the examination of such merchandise, certainly has no analogy to this provision as originally inserted by the committee.

The Senator from Missouri yesterday cited the case of the examination of national banks. National banks are public institutions, dependent for their existence upon a charter by Congress, which is granted upon condition that there shall be an examination by Government inspectors, and in that case there is no analogy to this.

In order that Senators may be advised as to the various aspects of this question, if it should reappear here upon the report of the conference committee or otherwise, I beg to call attention to certain speeches and arguments which were made in the year 1874 when the question of the repeal of the moiety law, so called, was before Congress; and I would especially call the attention to a speech made by the late Senator from Kentucky, Mr. Beck, to be found upon page 4035 and subsequent pages of volume 2, part 5, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, first session Forty-third Congress.

I refer also to an argument made by Mr. S. B. Eaton, of New York, before a committee appointed to consider moieties to informers and seizers of mercantile papers, etc., on page 66 of the report of that committee. The argument is a long one, but I believe is entirely conclusive and unanswerable in the premises.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRICE in the chair). Does the Chair understand the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] as accepting the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]?

Mr. VEST. No, sir; I do not accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, then, is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I now move to strike out the whole section, and I wish to say just a word on the motion.

I concede that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, just adopted, improves to the bill and is, I think, beneficial to it. I do not quite comprehend, however, the principle upon which it is based. The right of a collector to make up an assessment where a corporation refuses to file a return exists clearly enough. I do not see why the authority of the collector to make that assessment and to add a penalty, should depend upon an exhibition of the books. That is where it is left now. I think that it is a useless and unnecessary form.

I take the position also that it is wholly improper to ask a party assessed, in an adverse proceeding to him, to produce his books and papers, and then give an authority to the collector to add a certain penalty because the party does not pay the tax. That has nothing to do with the question of his refusal to exhibit his books. There is an intermixture of remedy which I do not appreciate. That is all I have to say upon that motion.

I think the whole section is unnecessary. I think the right of the collector to make the tax is given in the preceding sections; and this serving of notice upon the party and asking him to produce his books, when there is no authority to compel their production, is an entirely unusual proceeding to put in a statute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York to strike out section 66.

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes 19, noes 24.

Mr. HILL. While we are upon this same question of the right of the examination of persons and books, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to make a motion to amend section 56, which will save the trouble of reverting to it hereafter.

Mr. HARRIS. I suppose there will be no objection to that, Mr. President.

Mr. HILL. I move to strike out the words in section 56, page 175, line 24, "by the examination of such person."

The committee have already stricken out the words, "or his books or accounts." I see no reason for leaving in the words "by the examination of such person," because there is no provision made for compelling his attendance; there is no scheme provided whereby he can be examined. It simply provides that if he does not make a return, although he has a taxable income, the collector may make a list according to the best information he can obtain "by the examination of such person." It formerly stood, "or his books or accounts," but that has been stricken out. I think it seems to be conceded from the argument that there can not be a compulsory examination of the party assessed.

Mr. VEST. I should like, if the Senator from New York will permit me, to ask him a question. Why should not the collector give the party the opportunity to make a statement, a voluntary statement? He can ask the person, and if he does not choose to answer, let it go. I would not object to that.

Mr. HILL. It is simply the implied power conferred here that the collector may obtain such information by an examination of the person. I know some of the collectors who have been appointed. They are not the most intelligent people in the world; many of them know nothing at all about law; and they are to construe one of the most important statutes which any legislative body in the world could enact. If you say that the collector may make up the list "by the examination of such person with his consent," I have no doubt that would cover it.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator from New York will permit me, the collector could not imprison the person, he could not fine him for contempt, he could not use any coercive process whatever. All he could do would be to say "Mr. Smith," or "Mr. Jones, I should like to know if you have any objection to give me the amount of your income." If the man says "I will not give it," that is the end of it. Then the collector must make up the list from some other evidence.

Mr. HILL. If that be so, then there is no earthly necessity for giving this officer an implied power which he is not to have in fact.

Mr. VEST. There is no implied power given.

Mr. HILL. If he is to make the list from the best information he can obtain, that means including the examination of such person, when he has no power to make such examination.

Mr. VEST. I do not see how the provision can do any harm. I should consent to it being stricken out if I thought it would do any harm; but I do not see how it can.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator add the words "with his consent"?

Mr. VEST. That is implied. If there is no coercive process applied, of course the collector could not force the party to do it.

Mr. HILL. I renew the suggestion made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] this morning, that there seems to be a disposition to retain every line of this bill simply because it was put in originally.

There is no sense to that provision; it has no utility in it. The Senator concedes as much as that. It gives a wrong construction to the proposed law. You have stricken out the words "or his books or accounts." Why were those words stricken out? I suppose because of the interview with Mr. Carlisle, when he said the bill should be amended by striking out those features which might be regarded as inquisitorial. Why are these books and accounts there then? What was the motive for that? I do not know of any.

I do not believe in framing a statute that it is wise to leave in words, whereby a collector—who is not a lawyer, and very few of them are—may assume that he has power to make an examination. It does not say with the consent of the taxpayer. That would have covered it. In some way it should be distinctly shown by the statute, so that every person who reads it may understand it, that it is not by an examination of the person that the collector can make up this list on the personal inspection of the man. Is that what is desired? No. I can see no sort of reason why it should remain there. There is no sense in striking out "books or accounts." They did not help the matter in any way, and yet the committee saw fit in its wisdom to strike those words out. Having done so much, it seems to me now the other words should go out.

Mr. VEST. A single word. I do not propose to enter into a debate about it. I never heard of any interview with Mr. Carlisle, and never saw it. I have been too busy a man to get information from newspapers as to what other people have said about this bill.

The words "books or accounts" were stricken out to get rid of the idea that we were invading the privacy of the individual in making him give up his private papers. That was the reason it was done; and it is one that would suggest itself to almost any legislator.

I do not consider myself bound to adopt any amendment which is offered by the Senator from New York, or anybody else. He says he repeats what the Senator from Colorado said, that there is a disposition here to make this bill as odious and oppressive as possible. Of course, we have done that to-day when we adopted an amendment here voluntarily, which went even beyond what the Senator from New York says he asks in regard to this section, although now he proposes to strike it out.

This provision in the bill simply says that the collector may go to the party whose income is to be assessed and ask him what his income is, if he is willing to give it. Is not that right? Is there objection to a provision of that kind? Can the collector then arrest him; can he punish him in any way? It seems to me eminently proper that he should first go to the party and say to him, "Mr. Smith, it is my duty as an officer of the Government to assess your income tax. Have you any objection to stating to me what your income is? You have not made a return, and I come to you as the person best informed in the first instance from whom to get the information." Where is the objection to that? Is it right? Is it not respectful? Can there be any criticism upon it?

Suppose that there were no such provision here. Then we should doubtless hear it said, "Why do you not have a provision here to go to the party first who has all the information and give him a chance to put in his income? Why do you resort to coercive measures without any notice to him in regard to it?"

It does seem to me that this is in the interest of the citizen. I can not contemplate that any officer of the Government would be so utterly ignorant that he would undertake to exercise the powers of a court and punish for contempt by assessing a party without right when the law gives him no such authority.

In one breath we hear it is coercive and that you can not force the man to answer, and in the next breath we hear it said, "Some officer might undertake to do it." I think it is a fair presumption that the officers will obey the law as it is written, plainly and distinctly.

I am not captious about this. I do not object to the amendment because the Senator from New York has offered it. I have no pride of opinion about it. I did not make this statute. I took it as it came from the House of Representatives, and tried to amend it as best I could; and I do not think the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York ought to be adopted.

Mr. HILL. I have not made the suggestion that I feared the party would be arrested. I made the suggestion that I feared the average collector of internal revenue would think that he had some power of examination by reason of allowing this provision to remain in the bill. You have already given him the power to make such lists according to the best information he can obtain. That is a broad phrase. But whoever framed this bill can not escape the responsibility for endeavoring in the first place to leave at least an implied power, that it was intended to be done by the compulsory examination of such person and of his books or papers.

The interview to which I referred was the famous interview with Mr. Carlisle, when he announced to the world that there was to be a change of the sugar tax, and that there was to be a change in this tax in some of its inquisitorial features and a limitation of its existence to five years. That was the first I heard of the suggestion. It was called the Carlisle interview. In that interview with Secretary Carlisle, in which the suggestion of the sugar tax and the suggestion of the five years' limitation was made, it was also said that some of the inquisitorial features of the bill ought to be changed.

Mr. President, the committee then, acting in pursuance of some suggestion, which possibly they never saw, have stricken out the words "or his books or accounts," but they have left in the words "to make such lists, according to the best information he can obtain, by the examination of such person or any other evidence." The Senator suggests that which does not appear on the face of the proposed statute, that the object of having these words in the provision was to allow the collector to ask permission to examine. To suggest that to the collector is a useless formality. He can do that anyhow.

I want to make this statute plain. In my judgment, if the bill is passed it will be fruitful during the entire five years of litigation, fruitful of misunderstandings, and will lead to the harassing of the citizen and the injury of corporations.

Mr. VEST. In order to save time, of which I think more just now than of anything else, let me make this suggestion to the Senator: As he seems to think that there is some coercion in this matter, suppose we strike out "by the examination" and say "by inquiry of such person."

Mr. HILL. Add "with his consent."

Mr. VEST. With his consent or not. I suppose you can inquire of a man without his consent.

Mr. HILL. Let me explain my point. If a citizen desires to raise the question of the constitutionality of this provision if it shall be passed—and that question will be raised—in the first place, he may say, "I have not an income of $3,500 per annum." The collector says, "You have." The citizen says, "I decline to make a return;" he puts himself on his reserved rights and lets the collector do as he pleases; he does not want anything to do with the collector; he does not want any conversation with him; he does not want to have any interview with him for fear the collector may say that he admitted something, and he does not want to bother with the collector in any way.

Why should he be asked the question? This imposition is left to the discretion of the collector, and so much depends upon his good sense and judgment that there ought not to be left an opportunity for a quibble, there ought not to be left an opportunity for a misunderstanding whereby the collector may get into a wrangle with the man and have a dispute with him. Let each stand upon his reserved rights. That is my point. The collector of course may ask questions if he desires to do so, but there should be nothing in the statute which implies that the inquiry is to be made immediately of the person himself.

If the best information the collector can obtain or any other evidence is sufficient to enable him to make the assessment, and, if he has all the information he needs, especially when he can make up that tax in any form and to any amount he pleases, he certainly has power and discretion sufficient for any Federal official to have.

I think the amendment I have offered is a very proper amendment. I think it would help perfect this bill and relieve it from a criticism which the Senator says does not properly attach to it, but a criticism from which it certainly will be relieved if this provision is taken out. Therefore, Mr. President, I insist upon my amendment, and ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. HARRIS. In order to test the sense of the Senate upon the merit of the amendment, I move to lay it on the table.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that debate cease and that the vote be taken directly on the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. If we can come to a vote without further debate I shall withdraw the motion to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn; and the question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York, on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I announce once for all, for the remainder of the day, that I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. I announce the pair for the day.

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GORDON. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], so that both the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] and myself may vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FRYE. I vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] is paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

Mr. DANIEL. I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE].

Mr. GEORGE. I announce the pair of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Allison,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Power,
Chandler,	Hale,	Manderson,	Proctor,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Mitchell, Oregon	Pugh,

Daniel,	McPherson,	Sherman,	Wolcott.
Davis,	Mitchell, Wis.	Smith,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VEST. I neglected yesterday to make a motion in regard to section 56. I move to strike out in line 24, page 174, the words "or to such officer or agent as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may designate." The same words occur in line 6, in line 22, and in line 7 on page 175. I move to strike them out wherever they occur in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out section 67, in the following words:

SEC. 67. That the taxes imposed by this act upon dividends, interest, coupons, and annuities shall be levied upon and collected from all such dividends, coupons, interest, and annuities whenever and wherever the same may be payable to all parties whatsoever, including nonresidents, whether citizens or aliens, except as hereinafter provided; and every corporation paying any tax on such dividends, coupons, interest, or annuities may deduct and retain from all payments made on account thereof a proportionate amount of the tax so paid: Provided, That dividends, interest, or annuities accruing to corporations not doing business for profit or to States, counties, and municipalities, or to individuals on funds or securities held for charitable or educational purposes shall not be subject to such deduction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 68. That it shall be the duty of every collector of internal revenue, to whom any payment is made under the provisions of this act, to give to the person making such payment a full written or printed receipt, expressing the amount paid and the particular account for which such payment was made; and whenever such payment is made otherwise than by a corporation, such collector shall, if required, give a separate receipt for each tax paid by any debtor, on account of payments made to or to be made by him to separate creditors in such form that such debtor can conveniently produce the same separately to his several creditors in satisfaction of their respective demands to the amounts specified in such receipts; and such receipts shall be sufficient evidence in favor of such debtor, to justify him in withholding the amount therein expressed from its next payment to his creditor; but such creditor may, upon giving to his debtor a full written receipt, acknowledging the payment to him of whatever sum may be actually paid, and accepting the amount of tax paid as aforesaid (specifying the same) as a further satisfaction of the debt to that amount, require the surrender to him of such collector's receipt.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 68, line 11, page 198, after the word "payment," to insert "of any taxes other than the tax represented by an adhesive stamp or other engraved stamp;" so as to read:

SEC. 68. That it shall be the duty of every collector of internal revenue, to whom any payment of any taxes other than the tax represented by an adhesive stamp or other engraved stamp is made under the provisions of this act, to give to the person making such payment a full written or printed receipt.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 68, page 198, line 17, after the word "made," to strike out "otherwise than by a corporation;" so as to read:

And whenever such payment is made such collector shall, if required, give a separate receipt for each tax paid by any debtor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out section 69, in the following words:

SEC. 69. That no rule or regulation established by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue under this act shall be valid without the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury in writing; nor shall the same be binding upon any corporation, nor upon any person not an internal-revenue officer, until it has been printed and conspicuously posted in the offices of the Commissioner and the collector of the collection district in which such person or corporation has an office or residence.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out section 70 in the following words:

SEC. 70. That if any person, in any case, matter, hearing, or other proceeding in which an oath or affirmation shall be required to be taken or administered, under or by virtue of this act, shall, upon the taking of such oath or affirmation, knowingly and willfully swear or affirm falsely, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall, on conviction thereof, be subject to the like punishment and penalties now provided by the laws of the United States for the crime of perjury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next section was read, as follows:

SEC. 71. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall have power to relieve and release from all forfeitures and penalties imposed by this act, in such cases as he may deem proper; but this shall not apply to any penalties imposed by law as the punishment of a misdemeanor or other crime.

Mr. VEST. There is no necessity for section 71. The Secretary of the Treasury already has that power, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has it in certain instances with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. I therefore move to strike out section 71.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to strike out section 71.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. We have now finished the sections which relate to the income tax, and I make the motion which was reserved during the discussion. I move to strike out all the sections which relate to the income tax, so that they shall be eliminated from the bill if my amendment is sustained.

Mr. President, having very fully debated the various provisions of the bill as we proceeded with its consideration, I do not desire to delay the disposition of the bill to make any elaborate remarks at this time. I have endeavored to make myself understood upon the objections which I have presented to this feature of the tariff reform measure, and I shall content myself with simply stating briefly my objections to this measure, which I desire to go upon the record.

My objections to the retention of the income-tax provision in the bill may be epitomized as follows:

First. An income tax has no legitimate place in a tariff reform bill. It is unjust to those who desire to support a revision of the tariff but who can not consistently or conscientiously favor an income tax. If admissible at all, it should have been embraced in a separate measure. The effort to retain it in this bill has hindered, delayed, and sacrificed the cause of tariff reform, and compelled the surrender of many essential principles which should have accompanied a genuine tariff revision.

Second. An income tax is neither a Democratic nor a Republican principle and has never been approved by the people at the polls, but is one of the doctrines of the Populist party, the votes of whose Senators in the Senate are expected to be the means of fastening it upon the bill and upon the people.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from New York allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HILL. Not now. Let me conclude this statement of my objections to the income-tax provisions:

Third. It is an unnecessary tax. The debate has conclusively demonstrated the fact that the needs of the Treasury will not require the proceeds of this tax, but that sufficient revenues will be realized under the other provisions of the measure. No proper estimate has been furnished of the revenues expected to be realized from this tax, but it is blindly urged, without regard to anticipated revenue or consequences.

Fourth. It is a direct tax within the true intent and meaning of the Constitution, and not being laid in proportion to population, it is unconstitutional, and can not be enforced.

Fifth. It is unequal, unjust, and sectional in its design and operation, and is principally urged by the representatives of those States which will be least affected by its provisions. It is an attack upon the thrift, the energy, and the enterprise of the North rather than an honest effort to reach the accumulated wealth of the country by constitutional and just means.

Sixth. It is the revival of an odious war tax in a time of profound peace.

Seventh. The exemption of all incomes not exceeding $4,000 is an exemption unprecedented in the history of income-tax legislation here or anywhere in the world, and stamps the measure as the most offensive species of class legislation. While ostensibly aimed at the rich it permits one having an investment of $80,000, drawing interest at 5 per cent, to escape all taxation under it. Whether it injures the very rich or not, it clearly does not help the poor. It is not based upon any consistent theory. Either substantially all incomes should be taxed or none at all.

Eighth. It is unjust and indefensible in its discriminations. It necessarily exempts the income from six hundred and thirty-five millions of Government bonds, but denies the same exemption to State bonds. It exempts $4,000 from the individual income of a citizen derived from his general business, but denies him the same exemption if his income is derived from a corporate investment. It unnecessarily and injuriously discriminates against corporate investments by individuals, especially small investments.

Ninth. It is retroactive in its operation. It compels the payment of a tax upon incomes realized since January 1, 1894, being at least six months before the passage of the act, which should only apply to future incomes, if at all.

Tenth. It usurps those fields of revenue which properly belong to the States. Tariff taxation being exclusively under the Constitution the province of the Federal Government, it should mainly confine itself to that method of raising its necessary revenues without encroaching upon the rights, prerogatives, and revenues of the States. This measure not only provides for income taxation proper, but includes an inheritance and gift tax, thereby trespassing upon a field already occupied by many of the States. Incomes, if taxed at all, should be taxed by State rather than Federal authority. The States are suffering more from lack of sufficient and proper revenues than is the General Government. What are essentially local revenues should be reserved for local purposes.

Eleventh. Its provisions are inquisitorial and offensive in their character. A citizen is compelled to give evidence against himself, and to submit to the production and inspection of his books and papers. The political agents of the Government are invested with vast powers which are liable to abuse. Taxation may be increased 100 per cent, and other severe penalties may be imposed. It is a system of taxation adopted for a monarchical government, but unsuited for a free republic.

Twelfth. It violates the Constitution because it usurps those revenues derived from certain domestic corporations which the States have themselves created and the revenues of which corporations the States have set apart for the uses of their own State governments. Those revenues can not constitutionally be destroyed, diminished, or interfered with by the General Government. The proposed tax is an attack upon the sovereignty of the States, their reserved rights, the doctrine of home rule, and every just principle of government for which we have ever heretofore contended.

Thirteenth. The absorption of these legitimate State revenues by the General Government as here proposed will necessarily lead to increased direct taxation by the States, and add to the existing direct burdens of the people.

Fourteenth. The tax proposed is double that recommended by Secretary Carlisle.

Fifteenth. It will duplicate taxation, create friction, and provoke conflict or contention between the General Government and the States, is contrary to the established policy of the Government, is a step toward socialism, and is unwise from every point of political expediency.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator from New York to say that Secretary Carlisle recommended 1 per cent?

Mr. HILL. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTIN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MANDERSON. I was unfortunately absent when the Senator from New York commenced the reading of the paper he held in hand. Do I understand that it is an indictment drawn by him against the features of the income tax?

Mr. HILL. It partakes of that nature.

Mr. MANDERSON. I wish to add, then, another count. I do not know what its number may be.

Mr. ALLISON. It would be No. 16.

Mr. HILL. There is ample opportunity for a large number more, but in my great desire to be brief I left a great many out.

Mr. MANDERSON. This one is very brief. I add this count to the indictment.

It creates a class who are selected from their fellow-citizens to pay a part of the expenses of the Government, and is the first step towards the creation of a privileged few, constituting a moneyed aristocracy, who, contributing from their abundant revenues or incomes to the support of the Government, will rule it.

Mr. HILL. I accept the amendment.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from New York give me his attention for a moment? Did the Senator make any allusion to the great increase of officeholders the bill will inevitably make?

Mr. HILL. I did not for the reason, and frankness requires me to say it, that the bill possibly does not propose any increase of officeholders. While I am free to say that I think when the bill goes into operation it will require additional officeholders, yet I would not be justified, of course, in making that allegation, because the bill does not provide for any increase of officials.

Mr. HALE. Has the Senator any doubt whatever that all the various and involved provisions of the bill, covering so much new data and new labor, will result in a very large increase of the officials of the Treasury Department in the collection of the tax?

Mr. HILL. If the income tax provided by the bill is to be honestly and efficiently collected, I am inclined to think that in the course of a year or so, there must be an increase of Federal officials.

Mr. HALE. And a very considerable increase.

Mr. HILL. I should judge so.

Mr. HALE. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. HILL. But there are none provided for in the bill now.

Mr. HARRIS. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue thinks, as he expressed to me in a very recent interview, that a very small increase of the internal-revenue force will be necessary to the execution of the law; but perhaps a small increase will be necessary. Let the facts be understood. Has the Senator from New York yielded the floor?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. HARRIS. Then, if we can come to a vote upon this proposition, I shall be very glad to do so, and if we can not I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote.

Mr. ALLISON. After the observation that the Senator from Tennessee has made——

Mr. HARRIS. Very well; I withdraw it, when the Senator from Iowa refers to the observation.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator from Tennessee withdraw the observation or the motion?

Mr. HARRIS. I withdraw the motion, and not the observation.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Tennessee says that he has information from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that a very few additional employés will be required. I venture to say, without knowing, that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has not examined in detail, as we have here, the provisions of the bill. I yesterday called attention to the fact that the execution of one paragraph of the bill alone, requiring that each corporation, however little or however great, shall make a specific return each year to the collector of the district, will necessitate in each collection district certainly an additional force of four or five persons. When you spread it over the United States that single provision will require a large additional force.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. ALDRICH. This is a very important amendment, and I hope the Senator from Tennessee will withdraw the motion to lay on the table in order that a vote may be taken direct upon the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. It is important to the extent of determining the question whether we shall have an income tax or not, and it is important in no other point of view. We have debated the question for three months. I adhere to my motion.

Mr. HALE. Let us take a vote on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let us have a direct vote on the amendment of the Senator from New York. That course is very much better.

Mr. HARRIS. If we can do so without further debate I am ready to vote on the question.

Mr. HALE. We can.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to submit some remarks on this proposition.

Mr. HARRIS. I adhere to my motion to lay the amendment on the table, so as to exclude the Senator from New Hampshire and other Senators from submitting remarks.

Mr. CHANDLER. With the permission of the Senator from Tennessee, I will submit my remarks at a later period in the discussion of the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then I hope the Senator from Tennessee will withdraw the motion and let the vote be taken on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that debate shall cease, at least temporarily, and that the vote be taken on the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. That debate shall cease on this question.

Mr. HILL. That it shall cease on this question, and that we have a vote.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest to the Senator from New York that the difficulty is that if anyone debates the income-tax provision of the bill, or any other provision, it will be offensive to the Senator from Tennessee. Therefore, it will be a great deal better——

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair announces that debate is entirely out of order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. VEST. Regular order.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the request of the Senator from New York will be put. I think it is an exceedingly wise one—that debate shall cease, at least temporarily.

Mr. HILL. Under the liberal rules of this body, of course a Senator at some future time can discuss the income tax or any other provision. I simply ask that the debate shall cease and that we may have a direct vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York that debate shall cease and the vote may be taken on this amendment?

Mr. CHANDLER. It hurts one's feeling——

Mr. VEST. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to respond to the appeal of the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HILL. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Chair recognize me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that nothing is in order but to call the roll.

Mr. CHANDLER. Would it be in order to have the motion withdrawn? I am willing rather than to put any obstacle to a direct vote to assent to the request for unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks discussion is not in order. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. HILL. What is the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to lay the amendment of the Senator from New York on the table.

Mr. HARRIS. If unanimous consent can be given to take a direct vote on the amendment of the Senator from New York I ask unanimous consent (the yeas and nays having been ordered I can not withdraw it without unanimous consent) to withdraw my motion to lay the amendment on the table, but unless unanimous consent can be given, I adhere to my motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is it in order for me to say that I have no objection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is hardly in order for the Senator to state that he has no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Is there any objection to the withdrawal of the call for the yeas and nays? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, let us have the yeas and nays on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the yeas and nays be taken on that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York to strike out the sections relating to the income tax, on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DANIEL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE].

Mr. SHOUP (when the name of Mr. DUBOIS was called). My colleague [Mr. DUBOIS] is paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. If my colleague were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). By an arrangement with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], but as we would vote the same way on this question, I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS]. I transfer my pair to my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON], who is absent because of illness, and who would vote "yea" if he were present. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. DANIEL. I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE]. I understand I am at liberty to transfer my pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], and I therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM. I am informed that I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HOAR. My colleague [Mr. LODGE] is absent to fulfill an important public engagement in Massachusetts. He is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] would vote "nay" if he were present.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 40; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Hoar,	Perkins,
Allison,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Platt,
Chandler,	Hale,	Manderson,	Proctor,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Dixon,	Higgins,	Murphy,	Smith,
Dolph,	Hill,	Patton,	Washburn.

NAYS—40.

Allen,	Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Power,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Kyle,	Ransom,
Berry,	George,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	McLaurin,	Shoup,
Blanchard,	Gordon,	Martin,	Teller,
Brice,	Hansbrough,	Mills,	Vest,
Caffery,	Harris,	Mitchell, Oregon	Vilas,
Camden,	Hunton,	Pasco,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Irby,	Peffer,	Walsh,
Coke,	Jarvis,	Pettigrew,	White.

NOT VOTING—21.

Butler,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Call,	Gray,	Palmer,	Wilson,
Cameron,	Jones, Nev.	Pugh,	Wolcott.
Carey,	Lodge,	Quay,
Davis,	McPherson,	Squire,
Dubois,	Mitchell, Wis.	Stewart,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PUGH subsequently said: I was called from the Senate temporarily, and in my absence the vote was taken on the amendment of the Senator from New York to strike out all the sections relating to the income tax from the tariff bill pending before the Senate. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], and I see that he voted upon that amendment. I simply desire to state that if I had been present I should have voted against the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Inasmuch as I was charged with the duty of caring for the pairs on this side of the Chamber, I desire to state that the fact of the Senator's absence was overlooked by me. Otherwise I should have called the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact, he having doubtless voted inadvertently.

Mr. PUGH. All right.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] is detained from the Senate by sickness. If he had been here he would have voted against the motion of the Senator from New York to strike out the provisions of the bill for an income tax.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent, under the rules, to withdraw my vote on the amendment proposing to strike out the income tax provisions of the bill. I was paired with the honorable Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], and as that Senator has been about the Chamber during the morning, and as he votes after I do on the alphabetical call of the roll, I did not think of looking to see whether he was in his seat. I believe the rule allows the withdrawal of a vote by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that his vote on the question referred to by him may be withdrawn under the circumstances he has stated. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 72. That on and after the 1st day of July, 1894, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, by adhesive stamps, a tax of 2 cents for and upon every pack of playing cards manufactured and sold or removed, and also upon every pack in the stock of any dealer on and after that date; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall make regulations as to dies and adhesive stamps.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment in section 72, page 200, in line 9, after the word "cards," to insert "containing not more than fifty-four cards;" so as to read:

A tax of 2 cents for and upon every pack of playing cards containing not more than fifty-four cards.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill to the end of section 81, page 207.

Mr. PEFFER. At this point comes in the amendment which I proposed last Saturday evening in relation to the tax upon beer. It was proposed at that time in order to accommodate me, as I was about to be absent from the Chamber, but upon the request of Senators its consideration was passed over until we should reach this point in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After section 81, add as a new section:

SEC. —. That section 3339 of the Revised Statutes and all sections amendatory thereof be amended so as to provide that the tax on beer, lager beer, ale, porter, and other similar fermented liquors shall be $2 per barrel, and the said sections shall be and remain in force as part of this act, together with any and all laws and parts of laws made to carry into effect the provisions of this section.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I desire to say but a very few words in explanation of the amendment and in favor of it. As the Senate knows, I am very much opposed to a tax upon sugar. It is estimated by, I believe, all those who have taken the trouble to make an estimate that between $40,000,000 and $50,000,000 will be raised by a 40 per cent levy upon imported sugar. The last report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shows that something over 32,000,000 barrels of beer were produced in the United States, and as that is an article which does not lie long in bond, nor any where else, it is presumable that in subsequent years the quantity produced will not be any less.

If we levy a tax of $1 a barrel more than is now laid upon beer it will produce an additional revenue of between thirty-two and thirty-three million dollars for the year 1894, and in a few years a still larger amount.

In presenting the amendment I wish to call the attention of Senators to the fact that this additional tax upon the consumption of beer would not in any way increase the cost of it to the consumer, or at any rate if there should be any increase it would be in such form as that the consumer would not feel it. It could not be placed upon the price of beer per glass, for the difference in price would be so small that it could not be estimated. It would be a very small portion of 1 cent, practically infinitesimal.

If there were any difference at all between the present price and the price under this proposed amendment it would be in the quantity of beer given for a glass, and that would be so small as that even the beer drinker himself could not possibly detect it. That also would be infinitesimal. There is no question now about the income tax. That is going to remain in the bill. Here is an opportunity for the committee to remove the sugar duty entirely and replace it with a tax upon beer.

This is all I care to say upon my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLATT. I suppose sections 82 to 84 are stricken out. Is it necessary to read those sections?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They will be omitted unless specially requested to be read.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I was going to ask unanimous consent that the reading be omitted and that the proposed substitute for those sections be read, beginning on page 207, section 82.

Mr. PLATT. Before we come to that I desire to propose an amendment. I regret that it is so long, but it is not much longer than the section which relate to playing cards.

Mr. HARRIS. The amendment is to come in where?

Mr. PLATT. It is to come in at the end of section 81. I will state before the amendment is read that the object is to allow alcohol which is used in manufactures and in the arts to be used without the payment of tax. The provisions of the amendment are taken from a bill which was passed by the Senate in 1888, drafted, I understand, by the Treasury Department as embodying a scheme which would prevent frauds upon the Treasury if that measure should be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After section 81, page 207, after line 7, add the following additional sections:

SEC. —. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and hereby is, authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the filing of such bond as he may prescribe, to establish warehouses, to be designated as bonded alcohol warehouses, to be used exclusively for the storing of distilled spirits of an alcoholic strength of not less than 180 per cent of proof spirit, as defined by section 3249 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and in the distillers' original casks or packages, each of which warehouses shall be in the charge of a storekeeper, or storekeeper and gauger, to be appointed, assigned, transferred, and paid in the same manner that storekeepers and storekeepers and gaugers for distillery warehouses are now appointed, assigned, transferred, and paid. Every such warehouse shall be under the control of the collector of internal revenue of the district in which such warehouse is located, shall be in the joint custody of the storekeeper, or storekeeper and gauger, and the proprietor thereof, and kept securely locked, and shall at no time be unlocked or opened, or remain open, except in the presence of such storekeeper or storekeeper and gauger, or other person who may be designated to act for him, as provided in the case of distillery warehouses. And such warehouses shall be under such further regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe.

SEC. —. That distilled spirits of an alcoholic strength of not less than 180 per cent of proof spirit, as defined by section 3249 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, may, after having been properly gauged, marked, stamped, and branded in distillery warehouses, under regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and also stamped as hereinafter provided, be removed in bond from distillery bonded warehouses to a bonded alcohol warehouse, under such regulations and after making such entries, and executing and filing with the collector of the district in which such spirits were manufactured such bonds and bills of lading, and giving such other additional security as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. —. That such distilled spirits, after being deposited in such bonded alcohol warehouse, may, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, be removed to secure storerooms, and used in manufacturing establishments, as hereinafter provided, without payment of the internal-revenue tax, in the industrial arts, and in the manufacture of articles, preparations, compounds, acetic and other acids, and medicinal drugs, or chemicals made according to the directions of the United States or other national pharmacopœia or according to formulas, as published in any of the dispensatories in common use among physicians or apothecaries in the United States. But nothing herein contained shall be held or construed as authorizing the use of any distilled spirits upon which the internal-revenue tax has not been paid, in the manufacture of tinctures, proprietary articles, wines, liquors, cordials, bitters, or other alcoholic compounds which are used or sold as beverages, or which, in the opinion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, may be so used or sold. All articles excluded from the provisions of this act, manufactured or stored on any premises to which distilled spirits have been removed free of tax under the provisions of this act, and all articles manufactured or stored in violation of this act shall be forfeited to the United States.

Every person desiring to have a bonded alcohol warehouse or storeroom established, intending to commence or continue business therein, shall file with the collector of internal revenue of the district in which the building or room to be used as such warehouse or storeroom is located a notice in duplicate of his desire and intention, stating the location of the building or room, and such other information as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may require; and at the time of the filing of such notice shall execute a bond in duplicate in the form prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, conditioned that he will comply with all the provisions of law and regulations made in pursuance thereof pertaining to the business to be carried on by him, and that he will not use, or allow to be used, any distilled spirits entered into or removed from his warehouse or storeroom, by any person or persons whatsoever for any of the uses not authorized by this act, and that in case any such spirits shall be so used he shall pay, or cause to be paid, to the United States a sum double the amount of the tax on all such spirits so used, and shall pay all penalties incurred or fines imposed on him for violation of any of the provisions of this act.

Said bonds shall each be with at least two sureties, approved by the collector of the district, and for the penal sum of not less than double the amount of the tax on the estimated quantity of such spirits that are intended to be entered in such warehouse or storeroom, as the case may be, during a period of sixty days, but in no case shall the penal sum of said warehouse bond be less than $100,000, nor that of the storeroom bond be less than $5,000, and the said bonds shall be strengthened and renewed at such times, and shall contain such other conditions as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may require. The collector may refuse to approve said bond when, in his judgment, the situation of the warehouse or storeroom is such as will enable the warehouse proprietor or the manufacturer to defraud the United States; and in case of such refusal the proprietor or manufacturer may appeal to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, whose decision in the matter shall be final. One copy of the notice and application and bond will be forwarded to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and one of each will be retained by the collector

SEC. —. That all distilled spirits intended to be entered for deposit in a bonded alcohol warehouse, before being removed from the distillery warehouse, shall have affixed to each cask or package an engraved stamp indicative of such intention, to be provided and furnished to the several collectors as in the case of other stamps; and to be charged to them and accounted for in the same manner; and for the expense attending the providing and affixing such stamps 10 cents for each stamp shall be paid to the collector of the district on making the entry for such removal.

SEC. —. That any manufacturer, after having provided, at his own expense, on the premises, and connected with his manufactory, a secure storeroom, in which all spirits used in the manufactory shall be exclusively entered and stored, and to be separated by a secure wall from all other parts of such manufactory, and with one door only entering therein, and all other openings secured and fastened, and approved by the collector of the district and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, after the filing of the notice and bond as required by this act, may, under such bonds and securities as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, remove distilled spirits of an alcoholic strength of not less than 180 per cent of proof spirit as defined by section 3249 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in distillers' original casks or packages, without payment of the internal-revenue tax, from a bonded alcohol warehouse, as defined in this act, to his storeroom for use in his manufactory as hereinbefore provided. But such spirits shall remain in the original packages until withdrawn for immediate use. Every such storeroom shall be under the control of the collector of internal revenue of the district in which such manufactory is located, and shall be in the charge of a storekeeper, or storekeeper and gauger, and in the joint custody of the storekeeper, or storekeeper and gauger, and the proprietor thereof, and kept securely locked, and shall at no time be unlocked or opened, or remain open, except in the presence of such storekeeper, or storekeeper and gauger, or other person who may be designated to act for him, as provided in the case of distillery warehouses, and such storekeeper, or storekeeper and gauger, shall be appointed, assigned, transferred, and paid in the same manner that storekeepers, or storekeepers and gaugers, for distillery warehouses are now appointed, assigned, transferred, and paid. And in case the official bond of the storekeeper, or storekeeper and gauger, has been approved before the passage of this act, such officer shall file a new official bond, which must be approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue before he is assigned to duty under the provisions of this act.

SEC. —. That the storekeeper, or storekeeper and gauger, assigned to such storeroom shall, in addition to keeping such books and making such reports concerning spirits entered in and delivered and removed from such storeroom as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, have access to every part of such manufactory in which such distilled spirits are used, and make a report each month to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, stating the kind and quantity of distilled spirits used during the month, the purpose for which used, and furnish such other information as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may require and prescribe; and such storerooms shall be under such further regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe.

SEC. —. That under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, any proprietor of a bonded alcohol warehouse, who has filed with the collector a bond with at least two sureties, and in the form and sum specified in this act, may admix with the distilled spirits entered in his warehouse, in the presence of the storekeeper, methylic alcohol, wood alcohol, wood naphtha, or other substances approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Secretary of the Treasury, which shall cause such distilled spirits to be unfit for use as a beverage; and such distilled spirits, after being so methylated or admixed and drawn off in the presence of the storekeeper, or storekeeper and gauger, and under the supervision of a gauger to be designated by the collector, into packages of a form and material to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and different from those of casks in which distilled spirits are usually contained, such packages to be gauged, marked, stamped, and branded by the gauger as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, may be sold and removed from such warehouse without the payment of the internal-revenue tax.

But distilled spirits produced in different months shall not be drawn into the same package, and each package shall not be of less capacity than 5 wine gallons, nor of greater capacity than 25 wine gallons, nor contain more than 39 proof gallons of spirits. Methylated spirits may be used in the arts and manufactures, and for burning, and in the manufacture of articles and compounds, except wines, liquors, cordials, bitters, and other alcoholic compounds used and sold as beverages, or in the opinion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue calculated or intended to be so used or sold. And the methylation of such spirits shall be by the addition of methylic alcohol, wood alcohol, or wood naphtha, in such quantities and in such manner, in the presence of the storekeeper, or storekeeper and gauger, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe. And no such methylated spirits shall be permitted on any premises in which the business of a distiller, rectifier, wholesale liquor dealer, or retail liquor dealer is carried on, or in premises connected therewith by any private or internal communication.

Every person intending to withdraw methylated spirits from any bonded alcohol warehouse shall file with the collector of the district in which the spirits are to be used an application, under oath, setting forth the purpose for which the spirits are to be withdrawn, the estimated quantity to be so withdrawn and used during a period of one year, the place where the spirits are to be stored, and a full description of the premises on which the spirits are to be used; also, the name and residence of every person interested, or to be interested, in the business to be carried on at said premises; and the application shall be in such form, and shall contain such further information as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may, by regulation, require.

Upon the receipt of such application and after making such inquiries as will satisfy him that the statements therein contained are true, the collector shall, upon the applicant filing with him a bond with satisfactory sureties and in a penal sum of not less than double the amount of the tax on the spirits intended to be withdrawn during the period of one year, issue a permit, under seal, for the withdrawal of said spirits for the purpose or purposes to be therein specified; said bond and permit shall be in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, and may be renewed, and shall be canceled, or revoked, at his discretion.

And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized to have such permits printed from engraved plates and with serial numbers, as in the case of special-tax stamps.

No methylated or admixed spirits shall be withdrawn from any bonded alcohol warehouse except upon a permit issued as aforesaid, which permit shall, at the time each withdrawal of spirits is made thereunder, be presented by the person to whom it is issued, or by his duly authorized agent, to the storekeeper in charge of the warehouse, who shall indorse upon the permit the quantity of spirits withdrawn, giving the number of packages, the serial number of packages and stamps, the number of proof gallons, the date when tax is due by three years' limit, and the date of withdrawal in each case. But in no case shall the quantity of spirits withdrawn under any permit during the period for which the permit is issued exceed the quantity of spirits specified therein. And the sale, removal, and use of such methylated spirits shall be under such regulations and restrictions as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe. And said Commissioner may, in his discretion, exact bonds and returns of persons who purchase or receive, use, or transport methylated spirits. And any internal-revenue officer shall, at all times, have right of access to all premises on which such methylated spirits are received, stored, or used. And the provisions of sections 3276 and 3277 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, so far as applicable, are hereby made to apply to such premises and to the proprietors or occupants thereof. And any person who shall demethylate or separate methylic alcohol, wood alcohol, or wood naphtha or other substance from any such distilled spirits, or use, or by willful neglect cause to be used, any such methylated or admixed spirits for any of the uses not authorized by this act, or who shall separate or recover, or cause the separation or recovery of any alcohol permitted to be used in the manufacture of any of the articles by the provisions of this act free of tax, shall on conviction pay a penalty of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years.

SEC. —. That every proprietor of any such bonded alcohol warehouse who shall have filed the application and bond, and every manufacturer who shall have provided a suitable storeroom, which have been approved by the collector of the district and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall provide a book to be prepared and kept in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, and shall make daily entries therein of all spirits received, with the name of the person from whom the spirits were purchased, and the name of the distiller by whom and the district in which the spirits were produced, the serial number of each cask or package, and the actual contents of each when received by him. He shall also, in like manner, enter in said book the quantity of spirits removed each day, and the name, occupation, and address of the person to whom the spirits are sold; and if a manufacturer, he shall enter in said book the quantity removed from the storeroom, and if less than a cask or package, the actual quantity removed from any cask or package; and he shall also enter the name of all articles, in the manufacture of which such spirits have been used, as authorized in this act. And every person keeping the book herein required shall, on or before the 10th day of each month, make a full and accurate transcript of all entries made during the preceding month, and shall, after verifying the same by oath, forward the same, through the collector of the district, to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The book herein required shall be kept on the premises described in the application, and shall at all times be open for the inspection of any revenue officer; and such officers shall at all times have access to said premises for the purpose of inspecting the same, or any stock, utensil, apparatus, or appliances therein, where such spirits are used, and the owner or occupant of said premises shall, on demand of such officer, furnish needful assistance to enable the said officer to make such examination and report. And any person who shall willfully use, or by neglect cause to be used, any distilled spirits, entered in his bonded alcohol warehouse or storeroom established under this act, in any manner except as expressly provided and permitted in this act, shall, on conviction, pay a penalty of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years.

SEC. —. That any person who, under the provisions of this act, or under any regulation issued in pursuance hereof, shall neglect or refuse to make or render any entry, bond, or account, or shall make or render any false or fraudulent entry, bond, or account, or shall, in qualifying as a surety to any bond required by this act, make any false or fraudulent statement or representation as to the property owned by him, and any person who shall fail to use any stamp, label, tag, mark, caution notice, or any other device prescribed by this act, or by any regulation issued in pursuance of this act, or shall fraudulently use or reuse the same, shall for any such offense, on conviction had, be fined not less than $500, nor more than $5,000, and be imprisoned not less than six months, nor more than three years; and any vessel, package, or other inclosure not stamped, marked, or branded as required by law and this act, all spirits or other materials contained in such vessel, cask, or package, or inclosure, shall be forfeited to the United States.

Nothing in this act shall be construed as extending the time within which the tax on distilled spirits shall be paid beyond the limit fixed by law within which such spirits must be withdrawn from distillery warehouses upon payment of the tax. And, in case any spirits withdrawn from a distillery warehouse under the provisions of this act are not used as authorized by this act within the time fixed by the distiller's warehousing bond for the payment of the tax, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall assess the tax against the person liable, under bond as warehouse proprietor or manufacturer at the time, for the proper use and custody of the spirits, and such tax shall be collected as in the case of other assessed taxes.

It shall not be lawful for any person to receive, use, or store any methylated distilled spirits free of internal-revenue tax under the provisions of this act on any premises within 600 feet in a direct line from any premises used as a distillery or for rectifying distilled spirits.

Any person who shall receive or use distilled spirits, free of tax, under the provisions of this act, and shall knowingly or willfully omit, neglect, or refuse to do, or cause to be done, any of the things required to be done by this act, or any regulation made pursuant thereto, or shall do anything by this act prohibited, or declared thereby to be unlawful, if there be no specific penalty or punishment imposed by this act for the neglecting, omitting, or refusing to do the thing required, or for the doing, or causing to be done, the thing prohibited, or declared unlawful, he shall, on conviction, pay a penalty, at the discretion of the court, not exceeding $5,000. And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized to determine the quality and strength of the methylic alcohol, wood alcohol, wood naphtha, or other substance that may be used in methylating or admixing spirits. And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may also, at his discretion, require the maker of methylated or admixed spirit to provide a separate storeroom and vats, with suitable locks and fastenings, for keeping and storing methylic alcohol, wood alcohol, wood naphtha, or other substance used in methylating or admixing, and may require samples to be furnished from such vats, or other receptacles, for chemical analysis and for his approval.

Change numbers of subsequent sections to correspond.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I fear it is hopeless to attempt to secure the passage of any amendment to the bill, but there is no possible reason why this amendment should not be adopted. The bill is going to raise revenue enough even if the revenue should be diminished by making alcohol used in the manufactures and arts free from the tax. It is a very hard burden upon manufacturers. I do not speak now so much for the manufacturers who buy alcohol and transform it into proprietary medicines and other liquid forms as those manufacturers who have to use it in the direct processes of manufacture.

I think it is not understood to what extent alcohol has to be used in the manufacture of almost all kinds of goods—metals as well as textiles. It has been always admitted, I understand, that it is a hardship upon the manufacturers to compel them to pay this tax.

The only objection that I have ever heard to making alcohol used in the mechanical arts and in manufactures free was that fraud would be committed under it.

In 1888 the Treasury Department prepared the sections which I have introduced here as an amendment, and they were adopted by the Senate. I think that there can be no great danger of fraud if all the provisions against frauds contained in the sections are thrown around the use of alcohol for such purposes.

We sometimes talk about high tariff taxes, and when a duty amounts to 100 or 200 or 300 per cent it is thought to be an extortion. If we raise the tax on alcohol from 90 cents a gallon to $1.10 a gallon the per cent of tax, as estimated by a letter which I have received within a day or two, would be 732 per cent.

It has been said that there is a desire to give manufacturers raw materials. Alcohol is one of the raw materials used by manufacturers. Putting a tax upon it of over 700 per cent, it seems to me, can only be justified on the plea of necessity, and there is no necessity for it.

Alcohol, before the tax is imposed upon it, is about 30 cents a gallon. I suppose that is a high figure for it. The tax is imposed upon a certain degree of proof, so that on commercial alcohol the tax is very much larger than appears when I speak of a tax of $1.10 per gallon. On commercial alcohol the tax is about $1.69 and a fraction per gallon, and if the tax is raised to $1.10 it will then be $2.08 per gallon on commercial alcohol.

So, if a manufacturer buys a barrel of commercial alcohol, for which without a tax he would pay not to exceed $15 per barrel of 50 gallons, he will be compelled to pay $120 for that barrel of alcohol. Senators have no idea how many barrels of alcohol have to go into some of our manufactories during a year, or how severe the tax is upon manufacturers.

I think I have stated this matter fully, Mr. President. It is all I can do. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate.

We have provided that where anybody desires to remanufacture alcohol for the purpose of export he may have a bonded warehouse and use the alcohol without paying a tax, and there is no earthly reason why this tax should be imposed upon the alcohol which is necessarily used by manufacturers.

The letter which I hold in my hand is from a manufacturer of silver-plated ware. They have to use a large number of barrels. He does not state the exact amount, but I have no doubt that this tax costs that establishment $2,000 or $2,500 a year, which is entirely unnecessary.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think there is no doubt that every member of the Senate sympathizes with the purpose the Senator from Connecticut has in view in offering the amendment. It is an old question. It has been discussed frequently in both branches of Congress, and the physical impossibility of making a provision of this sort which will not lead to the greatest frauds has prevented the adoption of any measure of this kind. A good many devices have been resorted to. Efforts have been made to render alcohol unfit for any purpose except for use in the arts, but it has been ascertained, after careful examination on the part of the Internal Revenue Department, that it is impossible to get anything like protection against fraud whenever this system is entered upon in any way, and there has been nothing yet presented that has been satisfactory to protect the Government. Under these circumstances we are unwilling to adopt any amendment which will open this gateway to fraud.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, one single word in reply. I would not rely so much upon the admixture of some other substance with alcohol in order to prevent fraud as I would upon the supervision of the internal revenue officers. If frauds can be prevented when persons desire to use alcohol in manufactures to be exported, surely it can be done when they desire to use alcohol in the manufacture of articles which are not to be exported. The committee have provided a way in which they think it can be used in the manufacture of articles for export without fraud, and if they can do that these provisions will prevent fraud in case the articles are not to be exported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out sections 82, 83, and 84, in the following words:

SEC. 82. That on and after the 1st day of the second calendar month after the passage of this act there shall be levied and collected on all distilled spirits in bond at that time, or that may be produced in the United States, on which the tax is not paid before that day, a tax of $1 on each proof gallon, or wine gallon when below proof, to be paid by the distiller, owner, or person having possession thereof, on or before removal from the warehouse, and within three years from the date of the original entry for deposit in any distillery or special bonded warehouse, except in cases of withdrawals therefrom without payment of tax as now authorized by law; warehousing bonds, covering the taxes on all distilled spirits entered for deposit into distillery or special bonded warehouse on and after the date named in this section and remaining therein on the 5th day of the following month, shall be given by the distiller or owner of said spirits as required by existing laws, conditioned, however, for payment of taxes at the rate imposed by this act and before removal from warehouse and within three years, as to fruit brandy, from the date of the original gauge, and as to all other spirits from the date of the original entry for deposit.

SEC. 83. That warehousing bonds or transportation and warehousing bonds covering the taxes on distilled spirits entered for deposit into distillery or special bonded warehouses prior to the date named in the eighty-second section of this act, and on which taxes have not been paid prior to that date, shall continue in full force and effect for the time named in said bonds. Whenever the tax is paid on and after the aforesaid date, pursuant to the provisions of the warehousing, or transportation and warehousing bonds aforesaid, there shall be added to the 90 cents per taxable gallon an additional tax sufficient to make the tax paid equal to that imposed by section 82 of this act. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue may require the distillers or owners of the spirits to give bonds for the additional tax, and before the expiration of the original bonds shall prescribe rules and regulations for reentry for deposit and for new bonds, as provided in the eighty-second section of this act, and conditioned for payment of tax at the rate imposed by this act and before removal of spirits from warehouse, and within three years, as to fruit brandy, from the date of the original gauge, and as to all other spirits from the date of the original entry for deposit. The distiller or owner of the spirits may request regauge of same prior to the expiration of three years from the date of the original entry or original gauge. If the distiller or owner of the spirits fails or refuses to give the bonds for the additional tax or to reënter and rebond the same, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may proceed as now provided by law for failure or refusal to give warehousing bonds or original entry into distillery or special bonded warehouse.

SEC. 84. That whenever the owner of any distilled spirits shall desire to withdraw the same from the distillery warehouse, or from a special bonded warehouse, he may file with the collector a notice giving a description of the packages to be withdrawn and request that the distilled spirits be regauged; and thereupon the collector shall direct the gauger to regauge the same, and mark upon the package so regauged the number of gauge or wine gallons and proof gallons therein contained. If upon such regauging it shall appear that there has been a loss of distilled spirits from any cask or package, without the fault or negligence of the distiller or owner thereof, taxes shall be collected only on the quantity of distilled spirits contained in such cask or package at the time of the withdrawal thereof from the distillery warehouse or special bonded warehouse: Provided, however, That the allowance which shall be made for such loss of spirits as aforesaid shall not exceed 1 proof gallon for two months, or part thereof; 1½ gallons for three and four months; 2 gallons for five and six months; 2½ gallons for seven and eight months; 3 gallons for nine and ten months; 3½ gallons for eleven and twelve months; 4 gallons for thirteen, fourteen, and fifteen months; 4½ gallons for sixteen, seventeen, and eighteen months; 5 gallons for nineteen, twenty, and twenty-one months; 5½ gallons for twenty-two, twenty-three, and twenty-four months; 6 gallons for twenty-five, twenty-six, and twenty-seven months; 6½ gallons for twenty-eight, twenty-nine, and thirty months; 7 gallons for thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three months; 7½ gallons for thirty-four, thirty-five, and thirty-six months; and no further allowance shall be made: And provided further, That taxes may be collected on the quantity contained in each cask or package as shown by the original entry for deposit into the warehouse, or, as to fruit brandy, by the original gauge for which the owner or distiller does not request a regauge before the expiration of three years from the date of original entry or gauge: Provided also, That the foregoing allowance of loss shall apply only to casks or packages of a capacity of 40 or more wine gallons, and that the allowance for loss on casks or packages of less capacity than 40 gallons shall not exceed one-half the amount allowed on said 40-gallon cask or package; but no allowance shall be made on casks or packages of less capacity than 20 gallons: And provided further, That the proof of such distilled spirits shall not in any case be computed at the time of withdrawal at less than 100 per cent.

And to insert:

SEC. 82. That on and after the first day of the second calendar month after the passage of this act there shall be levied and collected on all distilled spirits in bond at that time, or that have been or may be then or thereafter produced in the United States, on which the tax is not paid before that day, a tax of $1.10 on each proof gallon, or wine gallon when below proof, and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such proof or wine gallon: Provided, That in computing the tax on any package of spirits all fractional parts of a gallon, less than one-tenth, shall be excluded.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe and furnish suitable stamps denoting the payment of the internal-revenue tax imposed by this section; and until such stamps are prepared and furnished, the stamps now used to denote the payment of the internal-revenue tax on distilled spirits shall be affixed to all packages containing distilled spirits on which the tax imposed by this section is paid; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, by assessment or otherwise, cause to be collected the tax on any fractional gallon contained in each of such packages as ascertained by the original gauge, or regauge when made, before or at the time of removal of such packages from warehouse for other place of storage; and all provisions of existing laws relating to stamps denoting the payment of internal-revenue tax on distilled spirits, so far as applicable, are hereby extended to the stamps provided for in this section.

That the tax herein imposed shall be paid by the distiller of the spirits, on or before their removal from the distillery or place of storage, except in case the removal therefrom without payment of tax is authorized by law; and (upon spirits lawfully deposited in any distillery warehouse, or other bonded warehouse, established under internal-revenue laws) within eight years from the date of the original entry for deposit in any distillery warehouse, or from the date of original gauge of fruit brandy deposited in special-bonded warehouse, except in case of withdrawal therefrom without payment of tax as authorized by law.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, there are but two questions in the series of sections proposed to be inserted that I wish to present to the Senate, representing, as I do, a very large interest in the State of Ohio that will be seriously affected by the sections. Those two questions are: First, whether we should increase the duty on ordinary spirits, whiskies as they are commonly called, from 90 cents a gallon to $1.10 a gallon; and, second, whether we will extend the period for the deposit of spirits in designated warehouses to eight years from three years.

I have a large number of papers here on the subject, mostly from men who are engaged in the business. As a matter of course, whisky or spirits in any form has always been held to be a proper and legitimate subject of taxation. Indeed, I know no article that ought to be taxed higher than whisky, and none that people could do better without. If it was a mere question of dollars and cents, a mere question of revenue, I would say place not only $1.10 a gallon on whisky, but I would be willing to impose what was imposed at one time during the war, the very high rate of $2.50 a gallon. However, experience has demonstrated that in regard to whisky, like everything else, there is a limit beyond which it is not safe to tax it.

It was shown by the experience during our civil war that the efforts to raise a very large sum on whisky utterly failed. The first duty which was levied was 50 cents a gallon. Then it was raised to $1.50 a gallon, and finally to $2 and $2.50; but it was found that the higher the rate of duty the less the income derived, as a general result.

I have very grave and serious doubts whether raising the rate of taxation from 90 cents to $1.10 will add to our income, at any rate not for probably two years. We have now in Government warehouse over 130,000,000 gallons. All of that whisky is only subject to the tax of 90 cents a gallon, and it will continue to be for two months hereafter. The phraseology here used is that on the 1st of the second calendar month after the passage of the bill the new rate of $1.10 shall be imposed. In the meantime all the distilleries of the country will have been full and active in increasing the quantity.

The amount nearly a year ago was 130,000,000 gallons. What it is now I do not know, nor is it possible to ascertain the amount now produced; but certainly it is in the neighborhood of 200,000,000 gallons, and probably much more, including the whisky in bond. It is very certain that no whisky will pay any tax at the rate of $1.10 a gallon until after the amount on hand or in the market is exhausted.

It is a matter rather of conjecture, and partly founded on experience, but I submit to Senators there are now 200,000,000 gallons on the market, in the hands of dealers or in Government warehouses. We know that there were 130,000,000 gallons in Government warehouses on June last. That was a year ago. We know that the quantity has been largely increasing, not only in the warehouses, but in stock in hand, and it is probably held now to the amount of at least 200,000,000 gallons. I am far, I think, within the limit of the stock of whisky on hand in the Government warehouses and among the people. That whisky is in the market paying a tax of 90 cents a gallon, and as a matter of course no tax of $1.10 a gallon will be paid until all this stock is exhausted.

Within the next sixty days after the passage of the bill every gallon of whisky will be withdrawn for consumption at the rate of 90 cents a gallon, and before the increased rate of $1.10 shall apply. We may therefore expect that at least two years' consumption of whisky on hand will pay 90 cents a gallon according to existing law. In view of the probable passage of the bill money is being gathered together to pay off the 90 cents a gallon and hold the whisky in bond in various forms throughout the United States.

I do not consider that my judgment is worth more than any other man's upon this matter, but I think the proposed increased tax on whisky will be evaded and avoided by the very terms of the law itself, and owing to the large amount on hand, on account of the notice that has been given to all distillers in the country, and the vast amount held by the Government in bond, no whisky paying $1.10 a gallon will appear upon the market for two years, and during that time, therefore, there will be no increase of the revenue. In all human probability before two years have rolled around the hardships and stringency that now prevail among our people will pass away. There will be no real necessity then for the increase of this tax on spirits, and therefore the whole object will be defeated.

I have every reason to believe, from the experience of our country and the experience of other countries, that after two or three years stringency and panic will pass away and good times come. There is no doubt good times will come in a little while, whatever may be the terms of the tariff law or whatever may be the tax imposed upon whisky. If this tax is imposed for the purpose of increasing the public revenue in the next two years, it will be a failure; but of that every man can judge.

In regard to the other provision of the bill the people of Ohio, and I think so far as I know the great body of those who deal in spirits all over the Northwest, excluding Kentucky, are opposed to the extension of the spirits in bond for the term of eight years. That is a question, too, about which there may be some doubt. Some classes of spirits may be now deposited in bonded warehouses and be held there for a period of three years. That applies mainly to what are called drinking whiskies, whiskies that are manufactured purely for drinking. They are a better quality of whiskies, Kentucky whiskies, as they are commonly known. Nearly all of them are produced in Kentucky. They are held in Government warehouses. They have a right to keep them there for three years without any increased interest, with a constant diminution by leakage and lowering of quantity, for even in the best of barrels it will become somewhat vaporized and lost.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to ask him a question? Does the Senator propose to impose this tax upon consumption, or upon production?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is neither. It is a tax that is imposed when the whisky is taken out of the Government warehouse. It may have been made three years ago, and therefore it is not a tax paid upon time.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I ask the Senator——

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me answer the question. It is not paid at the time when it is manufactured, nor is it paid at the time when it is consumed, because the Kentucky whisky and the other best whiskies, as perhaps the Senate knows, which sell high, are usually not consumed until a long time after they are withdrawn from the warehouse; but the tax is paid when the goods are withdrawn from the Government custody.

Mr. HARRIS. May I ask the Senator if the bonded period was not provided for in order that the tax might be levied upon consumption rather than upon production?

Mr. SHERMAN. Three years were allowed to give the whisky an opportunity to age, because all spirits of this kind are improved by age; the older they are the more valuable they are to those who consume them. That was a privilege given to the particular class of whiskies manufactured in Kentucky, and it was given for three years. It is an enormous advantage to them, because it gives the distillers a longer time in which to pay the tax, for until the three years expire they need not pay the tax.

Now, to extend that to eight years it seems to me is not just or fair. At the end of eight years this whisky is more than doubled or trebled in value. It is worth more in the market. Some of it has evaporated, some of it has gone by leakage, and it is only the amount that comes to the warehouse at the end of the period when it is taken out for consumption that is counted. The result is that a discrimination has been made in favor of these whiskies, and now it is proposed instead of three years to extend the period to eight.

I feel very friendly to Kentucky, especially from the early associations and intimate connections between its people and the people of Ohio, but it seems to me we are giving them an undue advantage in this matter. There is no reason why, after these articles have been held for a reasonable time in a Government warehouse, when they are taken out of that custody, they should not pay the tax, and the idea of extending the bonded period eight years it seems to me is wrong.

In order to show the Senate that I am not speaking without authority on this matter, I ask to have read a letter from the president of the American Warehousemen's Association, residing in Chicago, Ill., in which he very well discusses this point, and very briefly and tersely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

AMERICAN WAREHOUSEMEN'S ASSOCIATION,
OFFICE OF PRESIDENT, 2 TO 8 NORTH CLARK STREET,
Chicago, Ill., June 25, 1894.

DEAR SIR: The American Warehousemen's Association, composed of all the leading warehouses throughout the United States, hereby earnestly protest against the extension of the bonded period for the storage of whisky in distillery bonded warehouses.

The entire direct trade interests involved, excepting a few distillers, are opposed to this measure, likewise the banking and insurance interests of the country, and it is only favored by the distillers, who now have a complete monopoly for three years and ask to have this monopoly extended five years more—eight years in all—simply because it will be a great benefit to them and will also at the same time relieve a somewhat distressing situation to them, due entirely to an unwise overproduction of their product on the part of the distillers.

The storage of bonded whisky on distillery premises is a complete monopoly in the hands of the distillers and a purchaser or a bank compelled to take possession of forfeited collateral in the way of bonded whisky is compelled to continue the storage of this whisky on the distillery premises in the hands of the distiller without any relief of any kind excepting by the payment of the tax, which is about five times the original cost of the article.

This class of merchandise must remain on the distillery premises, exposed to the hazards of a close proximity to the distillery and consequent danger of fire, in the hands of parties who are not in every instance reliable and alive to their duty as warehousemen, and often and generally located at remote interior points inaccessible at certain times of the year for the purpose of prompt shipment and delivery.

This situation the distiller now has the temerity to ask to be extended five years more as against all the interests above set forth, and simply for their own pecuniary benefit.

To overcome this uncommercial and unfair state of affairs it has for years been advocated by everyone excepting the distillers directly benefited by preserving their most complete monopoly, that special bonded warehouses be provided for at large centers, similar to those enjoyed by like interests in other countries, and by the brandy distilleries of this country (who have since 1877 had the privilege of special bonded warehouses) and to which under certain emergencies whisky might be removed in bond under such regulations as the Government may choose to prescribe, and there stored under Government supervision.

This measure has had the approval of several Secretaries of the Treasury and Commissioners of Internal Revenue, and has been repeatedly approved by the Ways and Means Committee, but has been repeatedly and successfully defeated by the distilling interests. It is, however, now embraced in the report of the Senate Finance Committee, but in such way as to be practically inoperative and, it is believed, especially drawn up in this way through the influences of the powerful distilling interests. Special bonded warehouses are provided for in your Senate committee's report, but to which whisky can only be removed by the distiller and with his consent. Naturally this consent will not be secured where the storage will be taken away from him and where it will interfere with his complete monopoly.

We most respectfully petition that the Senate Finance Committee's report be corrected in this respect, and that if the bonded period be extended, that special bonded warehouses be provided for, to which whisky can be removed at the option of owner of the goods upon his filing and executing such bond as the Secretary of the Treasury and Commissioner of Internal Revenue may see fit to require.

Very respectfully, yours,

F. A. WARNER, President.

By order Advisory Committee.

I have a number of papers, but I shall not trouble the Senate by duplicating substantially the same statements. I shall, however, ask to have read a letter from a firm of wholesale liquor dealers doing a large business in Kentucky Bourbon and rye whiskies in Cincinnati, showing the view they take of the extension of the bonded period.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

CINCINNATI, June 18, 1894.

DEAR SIR: We write to respectfully urge you to vote against any increase of the whisky tax and against any extension of the bonded period. The demand for the latter comes only from a few overloaded distillers and speculators. It is a repetition of the days of '83 and '84. Men depart from wise and conservative business methods and then come to Congress to lift them out of their difficulties. Ninety-five per cent of the dealers of your State would be damaged by an increased tax and especially by an extension of the bonded period.

It may seem bold to make any comment on the revenue features of the case to one so highly regarded as an authority upon such subjects as yourself. But we are unable to see where any increase of revenue could be derived by the Government for a year at least. The whisky trust, which has been urging an increased tax, will free several millions of gallons of spirits at the old rate of 90 cents. Great quantities of '91 whiskies now due are being tax paid, and every dealer in the land will tax pay largely at the 90-cent rate before the advanced tax could go into effect. For months after the passage of the act little, if anything, will be tax paid. The vast stocks on hand must first pass into consumption. It is an increased premium on illicit distillation, and a burden and a grievous one on the dealers who are your constituents.

Respectfully,

J. DEBAR & CO.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. SHERMAN. The two letters which I have caused to be read demonstrate conclusively that the trade, as it is called, in whiskies, etc., is against this bill except in certain limited localities. It is clear also from the demonstration which has been made there, that the amount of whisky on hand which will be withdrawn before the taking effect of this act, that is before the increased rate is applied, will be enormous, and the manufacture of whisky will suddenly cease. Two months after the passage of this bill no distiller will be able to conduct any large business, and no whisky will be produced except to be stored in warehouses.

All the whisky that will be produced after the taking effect of the law will be for consumption in the far distant future, and the stock on hand will have paid the tax of 90 cents a gallon. Whether it will be consumed in three years or not, no one can tell. According to the opinion of the writer, whose letter has been read to you, it will be several years before there will be any substantial demand for the whisky which has paid the tax of $1.10 a gallon. Therefore, you will be defeated in the object you have of gaining an increased revenue from this source, and the distillery industries will be suspended in all parts of our country. They will be compelled to stop because they will not, of course, be able to manufacture whisky to be held one, two, or three years, to be stored in warehouse at their expense. It will suspend the business of manufacturing whisky in all the Northwestern States, except probably the manufacture of that kind of whisky which is produced in Kentucky, which may have the benefit of the eight years' storage in warehouse.

Under these circumstances, without delaying the Senate further, with a keen sensibility that this will be of no use to the public at large and of no use to the revenue for some time to come, and probably not until a time when we shall not need it, I feel that it is a bad thing to do what is here proposed.

It pretends to do what it does not do. If the new rate could be applied to whisky which has been manufactured since the time the discussion of the question commenced, it would be different; but that would be unjust and unfair; indeed it would be an ex post facto law, which it would not be fair or right to attempt to apply. If you make the increased tax apply to the future, as is done by the terms of this bill, you stop the industry and there will be no demand for corn next fall in Illinois and other States where corn is largely used for this purpose. It will interfere very much with business at a time when business is dull, and it will not give you the revenue you desire.

That is what I believe will be the result of this proposed legislation, and therefore I shall vote against both features of this bill, against an increase of the tax and an extension of the bonded period.

I have a table here which I shall not read, which shows the effect of different rates of taxation on distilled spirits at different periods. The first tax that was levied was 50 cents a gallon; the second tax was $1; then it was raised to $2, when the manufacture ceased, until it was finally reduced, first, to 60 cents and now to 90 cents a gallon.

I believe that a tax of a dollar a gallon, maintained for a period of years without change, would yield us from whisky alone more than $100,000,000 of revenue. I have not recently looked at the reports of the Department, but I think the amount is now more than a hundred million dollars.

Mr. ALLISON. About $100,000,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. About $100,000,000, the Senator from Iowa says. It will go on increasing regularly, provided the rate of taxation is kept uniform; but a change in the rate of taxation at once disturbs the trade, stops the industry, and affects the revenue.

Therefore, I think it would be a wise matter of public policy to leave the tax as it is, or, if it is raised at all, to place it at a round dollar, and let it stand at that, and let the warehouse privilege expire at the end of three years. That is long enough to hold even Kentucky whisky, and if whisky is ever good at all it will be good at the end of three years, and those who want to keep it ten or fifteen years ought to pay the interest that accrues.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio has stated the two questions that are involved in the schedule now under consideration, and, as he always does, has stated those issues very clearly and very fairly; but I ask the attention of the Senate for a few minutes to some matters connected with those two issues to which the Senator has not drawn attention.

The two questions presented are: First, the increase of the tax on whisky from 90 cents, as it stands to-day under the law, to $1.10 as proposed by this schedule. The House of Representatives in the bill sent over to us proposed to raise that tax from 90 cents to a dollar. The Committee on Finance of the Senate has reported the bill back to us with an additional increase of 10 cents per gallon, making the proposed tax $1.10, as against 90 cents, as it stands to-day. That is one proposition involved here.

The other proposition is an extension of the bonded period; that is, an extension of the time in which the maker of whisky may be permitted to pay to the Government this tax, whatever amount it may be. Those are the only two questions presented here.

The Senator from Ohio has stated that he objects to the raising of the tax to $1.10. So far as I am concerned I never wanted it. I was entirely content to leave that tax, as the Senator has suggested, undisturbed at 90 cents per gallon. I was entirely content, and am entirely content now, to accept the proposition of the House of Representatives, which is an even dollar, instead of a dollar and ten cents, as recommended by our committee. There is no disagreement between the Senator and me on that issue.

But when we come to the other, the extension of the bonded period, I beg to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that the public is in error. I doubt not that most of the Senators upon this floor believe this day and this hour, when dealing with this question, that all of the whisky made in this country is to be affected by this extension of the bonded period. If so, they are woefully mistaken. What are known as high wines are not at all affected by this extension of the bonded period. No value is added to that whisky by any length of time that you may give it storage in the warehouse. High wines are as valuable and command as high a price in the market when they run warm and fresh from the worm as they do when they are forty years old.

Less than one-third of the whisky made in this country is to be affected by the extension of the bonded period; none is to be affected that is used in the arts; none is to be affected except those high-grade whiskies which are aged for use as a beverage.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator state what proportion of the entire product that is?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have not the tables before me, but I am sure I am within the mark when I say less than 33⅓ per cent.

Mr. ALLISON. About 30 per cent.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thank the Senator from Iowa—about 30 per cent of the whiskies made in this country are to be affected by this provision, and no more.

The Senator from Ohio is mistaken, I am sure, when he says that three years is sufficient. I want every Senator to vote intelligently upon this question. The law as it stands to-day allows to the manufacturer or maker of whisky three years in which to pay the tax. If withdrawn before the expiration of three years, if withdrawn in one year or within one month from the making of the goods, the tax of 90 cents a gallon must be paid; but at the end of three years the goods must be withdrawn; it is a compulsory law, they must be withdrawn from the warehouse and the tax must be paid as the law stands to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. As the bill stands?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, sir; under the existing law.

Mr. SHERMAN. The period is three years now.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I say under the law the whisky maker has three years in which to withdraw the goods, but whether he has found a purchaser for his product or not, whenever the three years expire, under the law as it stands to-day, he must withdraw that product and pay the tax.

The Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives reported in favor of the extension of that bonded period. The House struck out that portion of the bill as reported by its Committee on Ways and Means, and left the law as it stood before.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to know from the Senator what time it takes for whiskies and brandies to mature and get to their best condition?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am obliged to the Senator for putting the question, and I shall answer it.

Mr. STEWART. I asked the question because the answer to it may have some influence on my vote. It seems to me spirits should remain in warehouse until they mature, for if the owners are compelled to withdraw them before maturity it might destroy the production.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is precisely the gist of the argument upon which we stand on this matter.

I appeal to Senators who sit around me, and who know. The Senator from Ohio says that three years are long enough to perfect even the Bourbon whiskies made in Kentucky. The Senator is mistaken. I am sure he does not claim to testify from the standpoint of an expert in this matter, and the Senate knows that that is not enough time.

Mr. President, it is the united testimony of every man who has made this a specialty, or dealt in it, that of these high-grade whiskies more than 50 per cent of the product is manufactured and made within the State of Kentucky. They will agree that three years does not age these high-grade Bourbon whiskies to a point where they are fit to be put upon the market. They vary in their estimates from five to eight years.

I know the prejudice that is cherished by many of the good people of this land against the manufacture of ardent spirits. I have no quarrel with those convictions.

Mr. PEFFER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question at that point?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky whether, as the aging process proceeds, the value of the liquor increases?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the Senator, and say yes; and in further answer I will say, that as these high-grade whiskies age from year to year, the value per gallon does increase, but they shrink in quantity in the packages, and the maker loses the shrinkage, whilst he makes upon the other hand the increase of value attaching to the goods.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask the Senator if the increased value is not greater proportionately than the diminution by leakage?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is impossible to answer that, because under the present law, which forces the manufacturer to take his goods out of bond before the end of three years, before they have matured, before they have ripened, before they are ready for market, it is impossible to tell what the comparative loss and gain of the manufacturer may be.

But what I wanted to say was, that no matter how well founded the prejudice or the opposition of any portion of our people may be to the manufacture of brandy or whisky or intoxicants of any sort, as fair-minded men we must deal with these subjects of taxation on equitable principles. You make them the subject of taxation; you pour into the coffers of your Treasury, according to the statement correctly made by the Senator from Ohio, $100,000,000 of money every year that you gather from the men who make these goods.

Now, if you wish to deal fairly with them, I beg that you will bear in mind that, of all the articles subjected to taxation in this country, this is the only one which is taxed upon the theory of production instead of upon the theory of consumption. You put a tax upon tobacco, but the grower and owner of that tobacco is not required to pay that tax until the product is put upon the market for sale. There is not upon your tax list a single article to be found, except whisky and brandy, that you tax upon the theory of production instead of upon the theory of consumption.

It is true of cigars; it is true of everything upon which the taxgatherer lays his hands. You are taxing whisky to-day 400 per cent upon the value of the raw product; you are taxing it, according to the proposition of the House of Representatives, $1 per gallon; you are taxing it, according to the proposition of the schedule in the bill as reported by the Committee on Finance in the Senate, $1.10 a gallon.

The makers of these high-grade whiskies make no complaint that on whisky worth from 20 to 25 cents a gallon, as it runs from the still, you are levying a tax of from 400 to 500 per cent upon the value of the product. They make no complaint of that; they are perfectly willing to stand at 90 cents, which the law puts upon it now; they are perfectly willing to accept the House rate of $1; they are perfectly willing to accept the Senate substitute of $1.10 a gallon. It is not that they are paying 400 and 500 per cent upon the value of their product that they complain; but they simply ask in common fairness that you will so extend this bonded period as to give them the same rate that you accord to every other producer of every other product; and that is, the right to pay their taxes when their property is ready for sale.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me call the attention of my friend to the fact that the leakage is to be deducted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. For only four years. It provides an extension of eight years, but gives no shrinkage for the last four years, when the owner of the whisky is to lose all of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. But the rule of deduction applied here is very liberal to the distillers. I will read it:

Provided, however, That the allowance which shall be made for such loss of spirits as aforesaid shall not exceed 1 proof gallon for two months or part thereof; 1½ gallons for three and four months; 2 gallons for five and six months, etc.

Mr. BLACKBURN. But it stops at the end of four years.

Mr. SHERMAN. The deductions are made at any time during the four years.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator will allow me. This loss is not arbitrary. The owner of the whisky is not to be allowed this deduction from the package or cask; he is to be allowed only such shrinkage as actually occurs; but in no event to exceed an amount stated in the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. But the scale of loss is very different. I shall read it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly; but if it has not leaked out of the barrel he does not get an allowance.

Mr. SHERMAN. That may be; that is an important element. The provision is:

Provided, however, That the allowance which shall be made for such loss of spirits as aforesaid shall not exceed one proof gallon for two months or part thereof.

A cask, I suppose, contains about 40 gallons.

Mr. BLACKBURN. About 40 gallons; just the same as the law is to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. The provision continues:

One and one-half gallons for three and four months; 2 gallons for five and six months; 2½ gallons for seven and eight months; 3 gallons for nine and ten months; 3½ gallons for eleven and twelve months; 4 gallons for thirteen, fourteen, and fifteen months; 4½ gallons for sixteen, seventeen, and eighteen months; 5 gallons for nineteen, twenty, and twenty-one months; 5½ gallons for twenty-two, twenty-three, and twenty-four months; 6 gallons for twenty-five, twenty-six, and twenty-seven months; 6½ gallons for twenty-eight, twenty-nine, and thirty months; 7 gallons for thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three months; 7½ gallons for thirty-four, thirty-five, and thirty-six months; 8 gallons for thirty-seven, thirty-eight, thirty-nine, and forty months; 8½ gallons for forty-one, forty-two, forty-three, and forty-four months.

Mr. BLACKBURN. But there it ends.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know; but that makes a very liberal allowance.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I grant it; but I beg the Senator's attention to the fact that the owner of the whisky is allowed here not exceeding eight and a half gallons for shrinkage or leakage or loss for the whole period of eight years, provided the barrel shows he has lost that much. He is not allowed under this bill one drop of shrinkage, evaporation, or leakage except what the actual gauge of the package shows he has lost.

If that barrel is empty, if the 44 gallons have all run out, he can not be allowed more than 8½ gallons, and he loses the balance. So this is not an arbitrary allowance of shrinkage. It is the maximum allowance which can be made for shrinkage, but in no case shall he be allowed one drop more of shrinkage than the gauge shows he has actually sustained.

One proposition more, and I shall be done. The Senator says that for two years, probably, if this bill is passed, it will not tend to increase the revenues of the Government. That is a matter of speculation; at best that is a matter of opinion, upon which well-informed Senators upon this subject, as is the Senator from Ohio, may very well differ.

I say that this bill is predicated upon the recommendation of the Treasury Department and of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, looking to the best interests of the Treasury and the revenues of the Government. Those officials, charged with this specific duty, are mistaken in their calculations and they have misled the Committee on Finance of the Senate and have misled us all, if this bill, when enacted into law, proves detrimental to the Treasury of the Government or reduces its resources. The Government's revenue from this article, in the opinion of the Treasury Department, will suffer no diminution; but, upon the contrary, will be increased, and you can see why.

The Senator from Ohio says that he is afraid to give these people eight years. Practically considered, under the law as it stands to-day, the makers and owners of these high-grade whiskies have eight years and eight times eight years in which to pay this tax, if they see fit and choose to avail themselves of their advantage. Under laws, wise laws, which the Senator from Ohio helped to frame, he knows that the holders of these whiskies, unaged at the end of three years, unfit for market, without the money with which to meet the demands of the Government to pay the tax of 90 cents per gallon, did last year, and did the year before last, ship out of this country, export from the United States, millions upon millions of gallons of these goods, paying freight both ways, storing them in foreign warehouses, paying warehouse charges to foreigners instead of to our own people. They can let these goods lie there abroad for eight years, or for forty years, or one hundred years; and, what is more, they are doing it; they are forced to do it.

By reason of your short limit of time, you have driven them to the policy of exportation. More than that, the Government is the loser by the shipping of this whisky abroad and storing it in foreign warehouses for one year or ten years. When it is brought back to the custom-house in New York, what is paid? Not 90 cents a gallon upon the original contents of that cask or package, but when it comes back to the custom-house in New York it pays 90 cents per gallon on what is in the barrel, and no more. The Government has lost its tax of four hundred times the value of the product upon every drop which has wasted, evaporated, or leaked during its foreign voyage and foreign stay.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. BLACKBURN. With pleasure.

Mr. VOORHEES. I was going to ask the Senator to allow me a moment, in connection with the statement which he is making so strong and so well. I want a sort of verification from him upon a statement of my own, with which I opened this discussion on the 2d of April. I made this statement then, and it has not been contradicted since or called in question, and I reproduce it now to challenge the attention of the Senator from Kentucky, and also the attention of the Senator from Ohio:

As to the extension of the period during which distilled spirits may remain in bond before being required to pay the Government tax, it is proper to say that there is no new privilege given by such a provision in the bill before us. The owner of distilled spirits has the right now, and at all times, to export his goods to foreign countries for an indefinite period, hold them there as long as he pleases and until they acquire the age he wants them to have, or until a profitable market revives here at home, then import them back to his own country for sale, paying a customs duty equal to the revenue tax, and securing a still further delay in making payment, if he so desires, by placing his spirits in a customs bonded warehouse on their return.

The customs duty on such reimported spirits is, of course, collected only on the quantity actually contained in the casks or packages when they start back, the owner being subjected to loss on account of the inevitable leakage and waste of an ocean voyage and storage in a foreign warehouse and the Government being at considerable expense in connection with the exportation of that portion of the spirits which is never returned to this country and consequently never tax-paid. Here is a loss to the Government which I am authorized by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to say will not occur under the extension provided for in the pending bill, and that such extension, with the safeguards provided for in this bill, will not increase the cost of collecting the revenue from distilled spirits.

That statement was made on the 2d day of April on this floor. I have never heard its accuracy challenged or questioned.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; and I apprehend it will not be challenged, because it is supported by the Treasury Department, and is true in every detail.

I have never heard of a whisky maker, I have never known of a whisky dealer, who will assert that at the expiration of three years these high-grade products of my State, and other States, Pennsylvania and Tennessee, is fit for consumption. It goes into the hands of the middleman. The manufacturer of whisky must have capital enough to build or buy his plant and conduct and carry on his business as in any other vocation. Then, if he is to pay taxes upon that product before it is ready for market, he must have money enough to pay 300 or 400 or 500 times the cost of the product of his labor before he has a right to go into the market and offer it for sale.

The consequence is that this high-grade whisky at the end of three years is driven into the hands of the middleman, the jobber, the dealer, the whisky trust of this country, and they are the men who stand here to-day protesting against an extension of the bonded period.

Mr. PLATT. Why?

Mr. BLACKBURN. For the best reason in the world. When you, as a distiller, find at the end of three years that your goods must come out of bond and you have not money to pay the tax, you are forced to sell to the middleman, the whisky dealer, and the whisky jobber. He has you in his power and holds you at his mercy, and dictates the price. He fixes the market, and you are powerless to avoid it.

The consequence is that the rectifier, the doctor, the juggler with these goods comes into possession, and a mixture is put upon the market and sold to the consumer, which would be avoided if we extended the bonded period and allowed the maker to hold his goods until they were ready for the market. If we allow him time to hold those goods until they are ready for consumption, then the manufacturer undertakes to sell to the consumer direct, and the middleman, the dealer, has lost his employment.

I hold in my hand and send to the Secretary's desk a telegram, which is but a sample of hundreds of telegrams and letters I have received in the last few days, warning the Senate that the whisky trust is the party which is opposing this extension, for it does away with their business, it strips them of their privileges. Did any man ever hear of a manufacturer of whisky being a member of the whisky trust? I apprehend not. It is the dealer, it is the jobber, it is the middleman who opposes the extension because, as long as the law is as it is to-day, it forces the maker to sell to him before it can go to the use of the consumer——

Mr. PLATT. This is the case, then: The whisky trust, as I understand, sells raw spirits to the rectifiers and compounders and jugglers, as the Senator says; and if the rectifiers and compounders can buy these whiskies before they are properly aged, then the whisky trust will have so much less trade, will they?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, sir; it is exactly the other way. I say, under the law as it stands to-day, if you do not give the extension of the bonded period, assuming, as I do, that the high-grade whiskies are not ready for the consumer, for consumption, when they are three years old, the manufacturer has not the money to pay 400 or 500 per cent in the way of tax, and he is forced into the hands of the dealer. The dealer buys whisky that is too young for use. He knows that. He compounds it, he rectifies it, he medicates it, and in quasi fashion by these processes he ages it and puts it on the market.

A diluted, a doctored, and an inferior article is what is thrust upon the market, bearing upon it the brand that is found upon the other, which is as good and as pure a high-grade whisky as was ever made upon the earth. He buys probably one of the best brands made in the land; he rectifies and doctors it, and then puts it on the market under that brand. If you had allowed additional time to the owner of the article, until age had done what this rectification can never do, the result would have been that at the end of five or six or eight years a pure, developed, ripened article would be put on the market, instead of a miserable, doctored, medicated stuff that has been aged thus prematurely.

Now, I ask the Secretary to read the telegram, signed as it is, I believe, by every one of the leading whisky men of the city of Louisville.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

LOUISVILLE, KY., June 11, 1894.

Hon. J. C. S. BLACKBURN:

We believe the whisky trust and their followers are doing all they can to defeat the extension of the bonding period. We, as wholesale liquor dealers, urge you to stand firm for the extension, especially if tax is increased.

Brown, Forman & Co.; J. T. S. Brown & Sons; E. H. Chase & Co.; C. P. Mooreman & Co.; Paul Jones & Co.; The Belle of Bourbon Company; Schwabacher & Co.; Greenbrier Distilling Company, by G. McGowan, secretary and treasurer; William M. Collins & Co.; Bartley, Johnson & Co.; Rosenbaum & Dreifus; The H. A. Thierman Company.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have had the telegram read in order that it may be printed, and that it may be seen in the RECORD by whom it is signed. The names attached to it represent several of the largest whisky manufacturers and the biggest distilleries in the State of Kentucky. They tell me, what I have seen with my own eyes, that the representatives of the jobbers, the dealers, those in the employ of the whisky trust, are around the corridors of this Capitol this day, and have been every day for the last two weeks, opposing the extension of the bonded period.

Look at it for yourselves, and you will see that it is utterly impossible that anybody should be opposed to this extension, except it be those very men who make up and constitute the whisky trust of this country.

The Treasury Department tells you that your revenues are not going to be diminished, but that they are going to be increased. The Treasury Department recommend the very schedule that is now under consideration.

Remembering that of all the taxed articles in this country, this is the only one, whether it be a vicious article, like tobacco, or spirits, or what not, that you tax in advance of its maturity, that you tax upon the theory of production instead of consumption, I appeal to the Senate, in a sense of common fairness, to deal justly by this interest bringing into the Treasury every year, as you are told by the Senator from Ohio, a hundred millions of money with which to defray your expenses and pay your debts. Deal with it fairly; do not force it to enter the market when it is not fit for the market; do not force it into the hands of the middleman and the Shylock who stand there collecting commissions and tolls at both ways of the gate; do not force the holder to do as he has been doing for the last three years, to evade the payment of taxes temporarily by shipping it, millions and millions of gallons a year, to foreign ports and paying storage to foreign warehouses, and paying ocean freights both ways, and bringing it back when it suits him to put it upon the market. Let him keep his goods at home; let him pay the warehouse charges to our own citizens; let him hold his product until the law of supply and demand shall call for its consumption, whether that be one year or seven years.

When there is a demand for this product it will come out of that warehouse and seek its market; but you fix your limit, and at the expiration of that time you force him to take it out. I only ask that you put that limit at such a period as will give to him what the owner of every other species of property in this country has, a right to hold his property until it is fit to be sold.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I regard this as a very important question, inasmuch as it involves a very large amount of revenue; and, although not an expert in the manufacture or in the use of this article, I venture to suggest a few observations respecting it.

Distilled spirits are recognized and have been recognized in our laws as a proper subject of taxation, and we tax them and have taxed them in the past at what might be called the revenue point, that is, levying such taxes as would yield the largest revenue. I remember very well when in 1866 we taxed distilled spirits $2 a gallon, that under that law in 1868 we received in revenue about $14,000,000 only.

In 1868 we changed the entire system of levying taxes upon distilled spirits, first, by providing the system of stamps which now prevails; and, secondly, by providing a certain amount of tax to be paid at the distillery, and also an additional amount of tax to be paid as the distilled spirits were distributed and finally reached the consumer. If I recollect aright, the tax at the distillery was 50 cents a gallon; then we taxed the wholesale and the retail dealer; and we taxed the rectifier of spirits so much a gallon. Thus, by this combination of taxes, we provided about 75 cents a gallon as the totality of tax to be paid by the consumers of the country. In the first year, when the tax was $2 a gallon, we only raised $14,000,000, and under the law, with the tax lowered and distributed in the way I have stated, we were able to secure, I think, about $42,000,000.

From 1868 up to the present moment distilled spirits have formed one of the principal sources of revenue in our country, and perhaps the largest single source of revenue since that time.

In 1875, under the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, there being supposed at that time to be a stress for additional revenue, at a short session of Congress, and without very much discussion, we increased the tax upon distilled spirits from 75 cents to 90 cents a gallon, and relieving the distributive taxes, which I have described, except only the special tax upon retail and wholesale dealers.

Mr. President, from that time to the present, under the system of laws which we passed in 1878, without any material change, we have collected a continuously increasing revenue from distilled spirits.

In 1879, I believe—I may be mistaken, and if so, Senators familiar with the bonded period will correct me—we authorized distillers to hold distilled spirits in bonded warehouse for the period of three years, under the control of the Government of the United States, having an officer in charge of the warehouse, and that officer and the distiller each having a key to it, the Government paying the cost of the storekeeper having the care of that warehouse.

It is true, as was stated by the Senator from Kentucky, that under a law which was not originally intended to be applied to distilled spirits, but under a general law which authorized the exportation of American products and their reimportation upon the payment of the internal tax, if an internal tax had been collected, they were entitled to reëntry in the United States. That is the situation at this moment.

Now, it is proposed to increase this tax from 90 cents to $1.10 a gallon. As I think I said in the beginning of this debate, if it were necessary for the purpose of raising revenue to carry on the Government, I should be willing to enter upon the experiment of increasing the tax upon distilled spirits in order to raise additional revenue, because I think distilled spirits a proper subject of tax up to the point of the highest revenue.

I should myself prefer that this tax should not now be raised beyond $1 a gallon, and I object to its being so raised, for two reasons: First, if we raise the tax to $1.10, thus raising it 20 cents a gallon, we hold out an inducement to those who have distilled spirits now in bond to abnormally withdraw those spirits from bond before the tax takes effect, thereby throwing upon the market an amount of distilled spirits which it may not be able to take, and thus depress the price of an article in which the Government has a great interest through its taxes.

But I have still another reason why I should not increase the tax beyond $1. For the last ten or twenty years, at least at every recurring period when we were providing for taxation, we have endeavored to follow the example of England and one or two European countries by providing for the methylation of spirits, in order that that great body of American industries which are compelled to use alcohol might not be subjected to the tax. I believe the Senator from Connecticut, whom I do not see in his seat, has offered to this bill a long amendment looking to the methylation of spirits, whereby our own consumers of alcohol in the arts may secure those spirits without the payment of any duty.

It must be remembered that in this great country of ours we now consume in the arts 24,000,000 proof gallons of distilled spirits. Therefore, of the total consumption in the United States of distilled spirits, it may be safe to say that 24,000,000 gallons of proof spirits on which the tax is paid do not enter into consumption as a luxury, or as a beverage, but enter into consumption in our thousand and one varied arts and industries. I would not, if I could avoid it, impose upon these industries an additional burden in the form of taxes, because I do not believe we are likely to secure any legislation which will relieve them from the taxes by allowing them the use of spirits in bond.

Therefore, unless it is considered by those managing the pending bill that the condition of the Treasury requires a tax of $1.10 a gallon, I should prefer that the tax should be $1. If this bill passes as it now stands, I venture the prediction that there will be an enormous amount of revenue received under the bill when it shall fairly come into play, if it ever does, beyond the necessities of the Government, and any reasonable administration of its affairs.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Iowa has had great experience in all fiscal matters and matters of revenue, and I should like to ask him whether, in his judgment, from such study as he has given this subject, there is not a point at which the tax may be placed so high as to defeat the object of increasing revenue; that is, whether it is not pretty well ascertained that the revenue point has been about reached at the present tax, and whether there is not danger by increasing the tax of decreasing the revenue by magnifying the temptations to illicit distilling and illicit marketing of whisky?

Mr. ALLISON. The 90 cents a gallon tax which has prevailed since 1875, I think it may be said, has been fairly and pretty fully collected, although in certain regions of our country, on the mountain slopes and in the narrow valleys of some States of this Union, there are to be found large numbers of what are called illicit distilleries, where men still believe that it is an outrage to impose a tax upon one of the necessaries of life [laughter], and where, in various ways, they do evade, and have evaded all these laws. I have not referred to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, but I think he states in his report that last year there were illicit stills destroyed to the number of about 800 in certain States of this Union, principally in the mountain regions of our country. It is important to the Government that its revenue should be preserved at least to the point where it is now.

Mr. GRAY. The revenue point.

Mr. ALLISON. The revenue point.

Therefore, I do not like for myself an increase of the tax upon this article beyond $1.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. VOORHEES. In response to the inquiry of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] I will say that the present Commissioner of Internal Revenue, a man of very large experience and a very practical officer, with whom I conferred very fully at every step of this subject, expresses no doubt whatever of the successful collection of the amount fixed in the pending bill. He thinks it will be quite as successful as the 90 cents a gallon tax, and states that there are none of the dangers connected with it which are suggested by the Senator from Delaware.

I will state further that the Secretary of the Treasury himself, a great authority upon questions of this kind, entertains similar views. Had they entertained different views this bill would not have been here as it is.

I am not tenacious about this amount, but so far as I am responsible for it I acted in harmony with those wiser in these things than I am.

Mr. ALLISON. I ought to say that I have had a conversation with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and he expressed the opinion that $1.10 per gallon could be collected under the machinery as now in existence with reference to distilled spirits. Of course, with my lack of knowledge and experience, I should not run counter to a well-matured opinion of an officer experienced in the collection of such taxes.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question for information. There is one matter which has given me a good deal of trouble. The Senator spoke about the inducement that would be given to these parties who have whisky in bond, if the tax were increased, to take it out of the bonded warehouse in order to get the increased price in the retail or wholesale market. Is it not a fact that the consumption of whisky in the United States, both in the arts and for drinking purposes, is pretty well fixed in proportion to population? In other words, can not the Commissioner of Internal Revenue make a fair estimate as to the amount that is or will be consumed in the United States each year?

If that be true, and I am so informed by the Revenue Bureau, any man having whisky in a bonded warehouse, who would take it out, unless there was a demand for it, would take it out at a loss to himself, because the inevitable result of overstocking the market would be to put down the price. It seems to me it would not operate as the Senator from Iowa suggests.

Mr. ALLISON. I think I did suggest that an abnormal withdrawal of a large amount of distilled spirits would have the effect to put down the price.

Mr. VEST. It would unquestionably put the price down if the market were overstocked.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course, each man who withdraws his spirits will hope that the prices will not go down until he sells it to the next man. But I spoke of the inducement of an increase of 20 cents a gallon on distilled spirits as likely to produce an abnormal withdrawal of spirits, if I may use that term.

Mr. VEST. What I meant to suggest, if the Senator from Iowa will permit me, is that I think this matter regulates itself.

Mr. ALLISON. It does very largely, I agree.

Mr. VEST. I have never had any particular interest in the matter, and I only get my information from the Treasury Department and the statements in the newspapers. For instance, it was stated that the trust, as it is called, with headquarters at Peoria, Ill., had about 8,000,000 gallons of whisky in bond when Congress met, and that when the bill was reported which put the increased tax upon it, they had taken out all, or the larger portion of it, and put it upon the market, and thatt he effect of their doing so was to put down the price of whisky, and that stopped other persons from taking out their whisky from bonded warehouses.

I was told by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that the prospect of an increased tax upon whisky had increased the duties collected by the Government one-third, by parties undertaking to get it out in order to obtain the increased price. But when they struck that point where the demand in the market was satisfied, whisky commenced falling, and they were forced to stop.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt that matter would regulate itself in a great measure. It is also true that if you will take the internal revenue reports for a series of years they will disclose a small decrease per capita of the consumption of distilled spirits in the United States, although a constantly increasing consumption of course by the increase in population. The reports will also show an increase in the consumption of fermented liquors per capita.

Now we come to the point as to what we ought to do here as respects this question, leaving aside for the moment the question of a tax. In the first place, I intend at the proper time to offer an amendment which will look to the doubling of the special taxes upon distilled spirits, and by that process we can reduce at least to the extent of 10 cents a gallon the cost of alcohol to the consumers of alcohol in the arts. As to the extension of the bonded period, whilst it is true that under the general laws now the producers of distilled spirits may export them at the end of three years and return them when they will, yet it is inconvenient and it is done only to a small extent.

I made inquiry at the office of the Commissioner of Internal revenue some weeks ago as to the amount of distilled spirits now abroad under this process, and although I received no written communication from him, my recollection now is that he stated that the total amount of spirits abroad at this time is about 4,000,000 gallons. So there is a very small portion of whisky abroad compared with the amount existing in our own country.

Mr. LINDSAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether he is not mistaken? Were not 4,000,000 gallons withdrawn for export during the past year?

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator has the statement there, I should be glad to have him read it.

Mr. LINDSAY. In 1893 there were withdrawn for export 3,762,231 gallons, and in 1892 there were withdrawn for export 3,218,787 gallons. I can not remember where I got the information, but it is a fact that there are over 10,000,000 gallons now abroad.

Mr. ALLISON. I am subject to correction as to that matter. Of course we find that information in the reports. I asked the Commissioner what was the amount of distilled spirits now abroad and likely to be returned under the provisions of the proposed act, because I called his attention to the fact that under the provisions of the proposed law sixty days were to be given after the passage of the act to withdraw the spirits before the tax of $1.10 went into effect. Although I have no authority to quote the Commissioner, I asked him the question whether the proposed act should not go into effect on its passage, and whether it could not be enforced if it went into effect on its passage.

Mr. LINDSAY. If it will not disturb the Senator from Iowa——

Mr. ALLISON. No, it will not.

Mr. LINDSAY. I think I can state a reason why, if the bill becomes a law, whisky will not be withdrawn for the purpose of getting the benefit of the 20 cents tax. The bill gives an extension of one more year for the loss of spirits of 2 gallons. By keeping it at home the owner of the whisky would save those 2 gallons and the tax that he pays upon it, and he would also save the interest which he pays on the money expended in the payment of the tax on the 2 gallons, and that is more than he would gain by exportation.

Mr. ALLISON. I am obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to that because it did occur to me at the moment that the proposed law gave this great additional advantage to those who have spirits now in bond. But my own impression is that the proposed law can take effect immediately and be enforced, although it shall take effect immediately.

Mr. LINDSAY. I do not object to that.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Now, that is the situation.

We have been told, and I have no doubt it is practically true, that, to use an outside estimate, not more than one-third of all the distilled spirits that pay taxes are embraced within this bonded provision, and two-thirds of them are not embraced within the provision. It was said by the Senator from Kentucky that these lobbies and corridors are surrounded by people who are interested against the extension of the bonded period. I have not been so fortunate as to encounter any of them, and therefore I may be in ignorance of a great many things I ought to know with respect to these details.

But it strikes me that if two-thirds of the distilled spirits produced in the United States are compelled to pay the tax immediately, it must be a boon to the other one-third, which are given eight years' credit to pay the same thing. It seems to me so, but I may be mistaken.

Mr. LINDSAY. The Senator does not mean to say that the other two-thirds could not have the advantage of the bonded period if they choose to avail themselves of it?

Mr. ALLISON. I mean to say that there are two ways, as I understand it, of manufacturing distilled spirits. One is the Kentucky way, and if neither Senator will be offended I will say the other is the Illinois way. One is through the process of high wines and continuous distillation to the point of alcohol. Our Kentucky distillers make no alcohol. Therefore it is that all the alcohol which pays tax pays it, as it were, at the mouth of the still. Who would think of putting alcohol in bond? Alcohol is not put in bond. It is manufactured and used as it is manufactured, and therefore every particle of distilled spirits which is resolved into alcohol pays the tax immediately.

I have stated that it is a burden upon the consumers of alcohol in the arts. Therefore, we require the people of the United States, who consume alcohol to the extent of 24,000,000 gallons of proof spirits annually, to pay immediately, and yet we give what are called table whiskies, if you please, luxurious whiskies, eight years; for what purpose? For the purpose of maturing, as the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] says; that is, that a table whisky is not fit for consumption until it has arrived at the mature age of eight years.

Mr. VEST. I do not ask the Senator from Iowa as an expert, but as a matter of information, is that true? Is it not four years? Is there any improvement in the Bourbon whiskys as they are called after four or five years?

Mr. ALLISON. I have been told by experts——

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Kentucky can tell us. I am a Kentuckian by birth, but I have been so long away from the State that I have lost my interest in whisky.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Kentucky talked about doctoring awhile ago. I know about one process of doctoring, which is a familiar one; that is, to take ten barrels of the Illinois brand (if I may use that distinction merely to show the difference) and mingle it with one barrel of the Kentucky brand, and you get a Bourbon whisky very good to the taste, I have been told.

Mr. LINDSAY. No, you do not get the Kentucky flavor.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Kentucky says no. I only know that I have been told that such a process is going on.

Now, if the bonded period is to be extended to eight years, or if it is extended certainly beyond four years—it is three years now, and I do not myself wish to disturb existing relations as respects our tax upon distilled spirits—whisky should be taxed certainly 5 cents a gallon for each year beyond four years. If the distillers do not want to pay it, then they can withdraw the whisky for consumption.

The senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] dwelt largely upon the fact that this is the only article which is taxed at the point of production, and that therefore it is an exception. With the exception of the bonded period of three years, which we now allow to articles imported into the United States, which includes brandies and all distilled spirits, wines (articles which have been reduced in tax in the bill), so that they have three years to mature in the New York custom-house, there is no such exemption given anywhere as is given to Kentucky bourbon whiskies. The Senator says the tax upon tobacco is paid when the tobacco is sold. So it is; but who would ever think of retaining tobacco in order to improve it by age?

I never knew of but one instance of that kind, where a gentleman, who said he never smoked a cigar, offered me one after dinner and said he knew it was good, because it had been in his house twenty years. [Laughter.] All tobaccos must be consumed when they are new and fresh, and so of all the other articles which come within the range of our taxation. So, if we are to give this class of whiskies exemption from tax for eight years, then they should pay at least 5 cents a gallon for each additional year they are in bond. But I am afraid of the extension of the bonded period.

Mr. VEST. After what period?

Mr. ALLISON. After four years. I am afraid of the extension of the bonded period, and I will say so frankly to the Senator from Kentucky. I will ask the Senator from Kentucky what number of gallons are now in bond in the United States? I have not the Commissioner's report before me, but I venture the statement that there are 140,000,000 gallons, or at least 130,000,000 gallons.

Mr. ALDRICH. There were 134,000,000 gallons at the time the Commissioner's report was made.

Mr. LINDSAY. That is about the quantity—134,000,000 gallons.

Mr. ALLISON. There are about 134,000,000 gallons of whiskies in bond, and if they comprise one-third of the consumption, there is now four years' supply of this class of whiskies in bond, because, although it was said a moment ago——

Mr. LINDSAY. The largest amount of that, however, is neutral spirits, not straight whisky.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Kentucky is mistaken about that.

Mr. ALLISON. Neutral spirits do not go in bond.

Mr. ALDRICH. At the time there were 134,000,000 gallons in bond in all, there were only 4,755,000 gallons of neutral spirits.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not know there was so much. I know that neutral spirits do not go into bond. So what I am afraid of is, that if we extend the bonded period to eight years without providing some inducement, by additional tax, which will take the spirits out of bond, we shall have, at the end of five or six years, such an overproduction of this class of goods that it will break down the tax and destroy the revenue. Therefore there is a double element of danger, in my mind, as respects the extension of the bonded period.

These are all the observations I desire to make as to the general policy of the bill. I should be glad if the provision for an extension of the bonded period could be eliminated, and I think it could be very safely left out of the bill entirely. If it is to remain, however, I shall at the proper time offer an amendment which will be a relief, at least, to the users of alcohol in the arts.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa one question. If we increase the revenue duty upon whisky at all ought we not to extend the bonded period?

Mr. ALLISON. I think I see the force of the Senator's question. It is that if we do not extend the period we will break down the system because of such a large amount of spirits being held in bond which must immediately be taken out of bond. It may be that a small extension may be necessary on that account. I know of no other reason.

Mr. VEST. I wish to state what I had principally in mind. We have permitted owners of whisky to put it into bonded warehouses at 90 cents a gallon. If it was not a contract in the fullest signification of the term, it was certainly a quasi contract, as it has been termed, between the Government and the persons who put the whisky in the warehouse. Take the case of a small owner who has 500 or 1,000 barrels, and who has put it into a bonded warehouse under the contract, or quasi contract, that he can take it out in three years by paying 90 cents tax upon the gallon.

If we, then, in the exercise of our power of sovereignty, for it is nothing else, disregard this contract or quasi contract and undertake to make him pay 10 cents more on the gallon, ought we not, especially in times of great financial and business depression, to give him an additional period of time in which to raise the money to pay the additional tax? I grant that as to the large dealers, who are presumed to be capitalists, with a great interest like the whisky trust, which has put its shares upon the market and sold them openly, and which is said to have had 8,000,000 gallons of Bourbon whiskies in bonded warehouses, which they do not manufacture——

Mr. ALLISON. They purchase them.

Mr. VEST. They purchase and put them in bonded warehouses because they do not manufacture the Bourbon whiskies, as they are called, the Kentucky whiskies—with a trust like that, an addition of 10 cents a gallon amounts to nothing, in view of their power to manipulate the market and to affect prices. But take the small dealers. Take a man with a hundred barrels or two hundred or five hundred barrels, and you see the injustice and hardship which are wrought upon him when you impose an additional tax without increasing the bonded period.

Mr. ALDRICH. If this small dealer is to borrow money of the United States instead of borrowing it from some bank for this extended period, why should he not pay interest, in the shape of the additional tax, as he would be obliged to do if he borrowed the money from someone else?

Mr. VEST. I will say to the Senator that it seems to me the direct and inevitable result of the increased tax upon whisky is that you force him to raise the money at 90 cents to take the whisky out of the bonded warehouse, or else he must leave it there and pay the additional tax after the proposed legislation shall have gone into effect.

Mr. ALDRICH. He would have to do it some time.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course he is bound to do one of two things, to put it plainly. He has 100 barrels in bond, and we put 10 cents more a gallon upon it in the shape of tax. He has two roads before him and no other. He must either immediately raise his 90 cents tax upon the whisky then in the bonded warehouse and take it out, or else he must leave it there, to become subject to the new law, when he raises the 10 cents more per gallon upon it. That is the alternative.

Mr. ALDRICH. Would it not be more direct and better understood if the Government were to allow him to take it out at the end of three years and pay the original tax, rather than to give him concessions in some indirect method which the people of the country might not understand?

Mr. VEST. That is another question. The question I put to the Senator from Rhode Island was whether justice did not demand, if we did conclude to put on the additional tax, that the bonded period should be extended? Do not the two things go together?

Mr. ALDRICH. There are three points in this scheme in regard to distilled spirits which require the attention of the Senate. The first to which I wish to call attention is the provision in regard to giving two months in which the whiskies may be withdrawn upon payment of the original tax. Now, leaving out of the question entirely the bourbon whiskies and rye whiskies which are now in bond, let us see what the effect of that provision will be upon the producers of neutral and cologne spirits, as they are called, and upon alcohol.

The average monthly production of these articles, of alcohol and neutral and cologne spirits, amounts to about 4,000,000 gallons. I do not know what the capacity of the distilleries owned by the trust and by other distillers is, but I assume that it is considerably in excess of the average monthly production. But assuming it to be just the average monthly production, we should have then for two months 8,000,000 gallons to be produced.

If we add to that the average amount in bond, we shall have at least sixteen to twenty million gallons of this class of spirits which can be taken out of bond under this sixty-days extension provision upon the payment of the original tax, with a saving to the distillers of from three to four million dollars. I should be glad if some member of the committee would show why it is important to donate to these gentlemen three or four million dollars in this way. Why should not the provision of the bill increasing the tax upon distilled spirits go into effect at once, or when the other provisions of the bill shall become operative? I hope that at some time in the course of this discussion we shall have some enlightenment upon this subject, because I myself see no reason whatever why the time should be extended.

The next provision of the bill which has been under consideration is that which applies to the increase of the tax.

Mr. VOORHEES. Before the Senator from Rhode Island passes from the point about the extension of the bonded period, I should like to be enlightened upon this subject. I care nothing about the extension. It has been vastly misunderstood. It has not the most agreeable sound in the world. But is it not true, as I stated before and as I myself stated this afternoon, that there is no limit on the power of the producers of this peculiar kind of whisky to extend the time for the payment of the tax under existing law as long as they please?

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not now talking, if the Senator from Indiana will pardon me, about the extension of the bonded period, but as to the provision of the section under consideration, which gives the distillers two months' time within which they can remove their spirits from bond upon the payment of the old tax.

Mr. VOORHEES. I beg pardon. I thought the gentleman was on the bonded period.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was trying to find out what governed the committee in making this extension.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator from Rhode Island allow me? In two months' time they can double or triple the production.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no doubt they can with the capacity of the distilleries.

Mr. LINDSAY. Will the Senator from Rhode Island permit me?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. LINDSAY. I wish to say that the manufacturers of straight whisky have no interest in that length of time.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand that.

Mr. LINDSAY. They care nothing about it and prefer that it should go into effect immediately, I understand. The reason why the time has been fixed as it has been is to enable the internal-revenue officers to get up a new stamp which will be necessary, and to make the preparations for carrying the new law into effect.

Mr. ALDRICH. It seems to me that the internal-revenue officers have had a sufficient length of time, and are likely to have a sufficient length of time, from the time the bill passes until the other provisions go into effect, to accomplish that purpose. There is no question about that. Nobody expects the bill to go into effect on the day of its passage. Some appreciable length of time will elapse between the passage of the bill and its going into effect. It seems to me that the internal-revenue officers certainly ought to be able to have the stamp engraved within that time, and the Government surely ought not to lose three or four million dollars of revenue on account of any such excuse.

Now, as to the next point with reference to the amount of revenue to be derived from the internal-revenue taxes upon distilled spirits; if I believed it were necessary to secure a larger revenue, I certainly should vote for a moderate increase of the tax upon distilled spirits. But I do not believe it. By the bill, if the tax on sugar is to be retained, and that seems to be the disposition of the Senate, and if the income tax is to be retained, there certainly is no reason why there should be an increase of the tax upon distilled spirits.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator from Rhode Island allow me for a moment?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. VOORHEES. Suppose a surplus were raised under the bill, and I will be perfectly frank with the Senate and the country. I never intended there should be any deficiency. I state here that what I said in committee was that so far as I was concerned I was not at all alarmed at the idea of there being a surplus in the Treasury of the United States.

Forty millions of surplus would not alarm me nearly so much as forty millions of deficiency, especially if the surplus is to arise in large part from taxes on distilled spirits. If we found ourselves troubled with too much money arising from such a source, I could be reconciled into seeing it used in erecting public buildings and useful enterprises of that kind, giving employment to people; I could be reconciled into seeing it used to pay off some of the interest-bearing bonds.

In other words, Mr. President, the revenue raised upon distilled spirits is more acceptable, in my judgment, to the popular mind than anything else, and if it should result in leaving some over in the Treasury at the end of the year I would be glad of it. The old farmer in the country is glad to know at the end of the year that he has a little surplus laid away in his bureau drawer, and I would be glad to see this Government out of all danger of a deficiency. I have had it in mind to say for some time that these items in the bill do not trouble me on account of their raising more money than we may need from day to day.

My position in regard to the sugar tax is well known. Had I had my way (as none of you ever had your way exactly, any more than I have had), it would not have been there at all. I have heard a great deal of taunt from the other side of the Chamber because we have had to compromise among ourselves over here. Why, the framers of the Constitution had to compromise among themselves or there never would have been a Constitution. You have had to compromise among yourselves or you never would have got the McKinley bill and a thousand other measures through. The Sherman act, that we spent three or four long months last fall in getting rid of, was the result, as was stated over and over again, of a compromise; that is to say, it was passed to get clear of something worse.

Yet the other side of the Chamber has been taunting us as though, because we compare views and get together and do the very best we can for the public, therefore we are in a state of horrible inconsistency. We are in absolute harmony with human nature, in absolute harmony with the events of the world.

So I repeat, Mr. President, on the subject of sugar, on the subject of whisky, and some other questions we intend to make sure of a sufficient revenue, and to do it in an honorable and satisfactory manner.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am glad to find myself in accord with my distinguished friend from Indiana in preferring a tax on whisky to a tax on sugar.

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think there can be no question about where the public interests lie on that question. What I object to is that we are putting a tax upon both whisky and sugar. I think the public revenue does not require it.

I understand the Senator from Indiana fixes the surplus in round numbers or approximately at $40,000,000. I myself believe that the bill, if it becomes a law, will produce a very much larger surplus. I believe it will be in the neighborhood of a hundred million dollars.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have not thought so. Of course an estimate of this kind can not be exact.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is more or less a guess.

Mr. VOORHEES. It is a mere guess.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator will recall unquestionably that in the beginning of Mr. Cleveland's first Administration, when we had a surplus in the Treasury of nearly a hundred million dollars, the distinguished Democratic President called the attention of Congress to the great evils of that surplus, and the campaigns in behalf of tariff reform were fought under the leadership of that distinguished Democrat on the ground that a surplus revenue produced by excessive taxation, and which was unnecessary, was a great evil.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator will allow me, that was a Republican surplus they were speaking about then.

Mr. ALDRICH. I can understand the distinction. They said, as I remember it, that unnecessary taxation was unjust taxation. The Senator from Indiana will agree with me that a surplus extorted from the people in the way of taxation and held in the Treasury, through the evils which may result from a contraction of the currency, is really very serious, and that we should not deliberately provide for a surplus unless we know exactly what is to be done with that surplus.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator will do me the justice to recall the fact that I did not speak of its being an idle surplus there. It would be very useful to the credit of the country and useful for great public purposes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I can understand that a surplus of a reasonable sum might be used to pay the bonds which have just been issued and the bonds which are likely to be issued in the near future for the payment of current expenses.

I have no doubt to that extent it would be useful to have a surplus, but we do not know what the surplus is to be. If we increase the tax upon spirits—an increase which in itself is not, perhaps, undesirable except as it imposes a tax upon alcohol used in the arts—we do not need, from my standpoint, the revenue to be derived from a tax upon sugar, and I shall try as hard as I can to eliminate that feature from the bill.

But now to come to the other point, in regard to the extension of the bonded period, I have no sympathy with the line of argument which was adopted by the Senator from Kentucky in behalf of its extension. The acts which have been passed levying taxes upon distilled spirits in the past, up to 1880 at least, have been upon the theory that distilled spirits should be taxed from the moment of their production.

The act of 1868, which was the principal act providing for the taxation and warehousing of spirits, provided in terms that the tax shall attach to this substance as soon as it is in existence as such. It was the intention and purpose and spirit of all the original acts upon this subject that the taxation of distilled spirits should be upon the amount originally produced. The act of 1868 allowed spirits to be deposited in warehouse and their removal within one year upon payment of the tax upon the originally produced. That remained the law until 1878, when a joint resolution was passed by both Houses providing that distilled spirits then in bond might be withdrawn within three years.

Mr. LINDSAY. If the Senator will pardon me, the act of 1868 imposed a tax of 50 cents a gallon on all that was produced, and gave an indefinite bonded period.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no; it did not; the Senator is mistaken about that. It gave one year within which the tax might be paid, but it must be paid on the amount originally produced. There was no allowance at all for leakage or for anything else. That remained the law until 1878, as I have said, when a joint resolution was passed providing that distilled spirits then in bond might be withdrawn within three years upon the payment of the original tax and 5 per cent interest on the excess of time between one year and three years.

In 1880 what is known as the Carlisle act was passed, which extended the bonded period to three years and made certain allowances for leakage.

The act of 1880 was the first departure from the policy of the Government of taxing distilled spirits upon production. The reason for the adoption of this policy must be obvious to the Senate. It is very much easier to collect taxes at the time of production and upon the amount of production than to keep the spirits in bonded warehouse subject to loss from all other causes, subject to being stolen, subject to all sorts of frauds upon the Government. So the Government adopted the policy deliberately of taxing the production of distilled spirits.

Now, it is proposed by the Senator from Kentucky and other Senators to change that policy entirely and tax the consumption, and they say it is the rule which has been applied in other cases.

As the Senator from Iowa has very well said, it does not apply in any other case under the internal-revenue law from the fact that the character of the other articles upon which taxes are imposed is such that they must be sold immediately or very near the time of production. So the same rule does not apply to any of these articles. It does not apply either to any articles taxed by our customs laws. Suppose an importer of silks would insist that he should be allowed to import his silks and not pay the duties upon them until they should go into consumption, would any Senator seriously suggest that that was or could be a safe rule to apply to the collection of customs dues? I think not.

Mr. LINDSAY. If the Senator will pardon me, when the silks come to New York they are ready for immediate consumption. Yet you give three years in which they may be kept in the bonded warehouse, notwithstanding the fact that they are ready for immediate use.

Mr. ALDRICH. But suppose it were true that silks improve by age.

Mr. LINDSAY. But they do not.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am supposing a case. Take any article in the whole list of customs importation that does improve by age. Take brandies, for instance. Take French brandies that might be just made, and where fifteen years might be necessary——

Mr. LINDSAY. But the French brandies have been matured across the water before coming here.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not necessarily.

Mr. LINDSAY. That is the rule, however.

Mr. ALDRICH. It may be the rule, but it is not necessary, I suppose. Suppose an importer of French brandy should say to the customs authorities or the Congress of the United States we desire fifteen years after these goods are imported to mature them and make them ready for use; what would you say to those gentlemen? "You can take fifteen or fifty years if you want, but it must be done at your own expense and in your own way." The Government of the United States says that goods which are admitted to a custom-house of the United States may remain in bond a certain time under certain conditions; but at the end of that period you must pay your duties and take them out. What becomes of them after that is not a matter of concern to the people of the United States.

The question of the extension of the bonded period is largely an arithmetical question for the Government and for the owners of bourbon and rye whiskies. The proposition contained in the bill is to allow leakage to the extent of 9 gallons in 40, covering a period of eight years, and to allow the payment of $1.10 at the end of eight years instead of at the time of production. I present a plain arithmetical proposition to my friend from Kentucky.

If the distiller of bourbon and rye whisky in his State should pay 48 cents a gallon to the Government of the United States at the time of production the Government would be better off in every way as it is if he pays $1.10 with the allowance for leakage at the end of eight years. This is a proposition not to increase the taxes but rather to decrease the taxes and to decrease the revenue by the extension of eight years.

Mr. LINDSAY. If it will not interrupt the Senator, I will show him, I think, that exactly the converse is the truth.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should be very glad to be convinced of it.

Mr. LINDSAY. The Government can, under no circumstances, in the end collect a greater revenue than the consumption of the country will warrant.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not admit that, to begin with.

Mr. LINDSAY. We will neither manufacture nor import into this country more of any article than this country can consume.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not admit that, but I am willing to grant it for the sake of the Senator's argument.

Mr. LINDSAY. If the Government collects at the time of production 48 cents a gallon, the Government will collect only so much as at the end of ten years would go into consumption, and so it will be $1.10 at last on the quantity of whisky that is manufactured in this country and consumed in this country. Otherwise you would have the state of case of a banking up of whiskies in this country that are not to be consumed at all.

Mr. ALDRICH. As I understand the argument of the Senator from Kentucky it is that there is necessarily a fixed amount of whisky consumed in the United States, and that it does not make any difference when the Government collects the tax upon that whisky. That, of course, is equivalent to saying that the payment of $1.10 to-day is, so far as the Government is concerned, equivalent to paying $1.10 eight years from now.

Mr. LINDSAY. Oh, no.

Mr. ALDRICH. It certainly is. If we are to collect $1.10 a gallon on all the whisky consumed in the United States, and that amount of whisky is a fixed quantity, the Senator's argument is that it is just as well for the Government to collect that tax eight years from now as it is to collect it now. This is a proposition that the Government of the United States shall go into partnership with the distillers of Bourbon and rye whiskies in this country; that the Government shall furnish four-fifths of the capital and bear all the losses and risks of carrying the immense stock of whisky, furnish storage, and take all the risks of insurance, because we have another provision of law that a tax shall not be collected upon whisky that is destroyed from any natural causes. In this partnership the Government is not to have any share of the profits but is to furnish the money from the Treasury of the United States without receiving a single cent of remuneration.

If I were to engage in a business of this kind and owed the Government $1.10 a gallon on whisky at the time of its production, I should be very glad to have the period extended for eight years without interest. If I were obliged to pay $1.10 on 40 gallons of whisky produced to-day, I should be very glad to have the Government agree to collect the tax on 31 gallons eight years from now. As a business proposition it is simply giving to the distillers of Bourbon and rye whiskies the use of $1.10 per gallon for eight years without any interest, and collecting the tax on 31 gallons at the end of that time instead of on 40 gallons.

I am not surprised that my friend from Kentucky should be earnestly in favor of this provision. His friends and constituents have 134,000,000 gallons in distillery warehouses throughout the United States to-day, and that amount will be extended indefinitely. I should be very glad from a selfish standpoint if I were representing Kentucky to have this great allowance made; but how can we, representing the Government of the United States, consent to a provision of this kind? I am quite willing to allow the distillers of Bourbon and rye whiskies the privilege of retaining their whiskies in bonded warehouse, but I say that the Government of the United States ought to collect interest or be paid a higher tax. Why should we furnish this large amount of capital to these gentlemen without the payment of any interest whatever? That is the suggestion I should like to have somebody answer.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Suppose this extension is not given, what benefit will the rectifier gain by the operation?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not see that it makes very much difference to the rectifier.

Mr. LINDSAY. Then, why has the Senate been flooded with circulars that were printed at Cincinnati and forwarded all over the country to be sent here by every retail whisky dealer in the United States?

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not specially interested in that question. I do not know any of the rectifiers.

Mr. LINDSAY. You read their circulars?

Mr. ALDRICH. I have received a number of circulars in regard to this matter, but I can not see for my life what particular interest they have in the matter.

Mr. LINDSAY. I shall try to show the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose my friend from Kentucky will agree that we are to discuss this question and consider it with reference to revenue and with reference to the interests of the Government of the United States. My argument has been entirely from that standpoint. Whatever the interest of the rectifiers may be or may appear to be, I have no interest in it whatever. I desire to have the Senator from Kentucky or somebody else to give me a reason, while we are pretending to increase the tax upon whisky from 90 cents to $1.10 per gallon, why we should reduce it to 48 cents by various provisions of the act.

I would very much prefer to vote here and now in the interest of the Government for a tax of 50 cents a gallon levied on production, which was the act of 1868, than to vote for a provision to collect $1.10 at the end of eight years without interest and with an allowance of a fourth for leakage. The Government would be better off.

If there is any question of public policy which requires that this help shall be given to the distillers of Kentucky I should be glad to have it stated, but I submit to my friend from Kentucky that it is no answer to the argument to say that some fellow in Kentucky or in Ohio or in Illinois is to be benefited if this change does not take place.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, I confess it is rather a novel presentation of the case to say that when the Government comes to decide when it will impose a tax, and how much tax it will impose, and when it will collect that tax upon a particular article of American manufacture, the Government is going into partnership with, and making a loan to, the manufacturer. I take it, the Government does not impose specific taxes with any other view than the purpose of securing revenue.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that it seems the Government does in this case. It seems that it has an ulterior purpose which the Senator himself says is a controlling one.

Mr. LINDSAY. In levying a tax to secure revenue it is never the policy of the Government to oppress the taxpayer or to unnecessarily injure the particular industry towards which the tax is directed.

It costs 20 cents per gallon to manufacture whisky, and upon that whisky 450 per cent in the way of taxation is now levied. Is there any other article taxed by the Federal Government or by a State government to such an extent? That tax is imposed because distilled spirits are to be treated as luxuries, and therefore the questions are how much taxation will they bear, what is the proper method of levying that tax, and when and how ought the tax to be collected?

When you come to withdraw protection from an American industry we are told that if you reduce the protection you kill the industry. For three months I have heard each day the prediction made that this industry and that industry and the other industry was being killed, not because it was being taxed beyond its capacity to pay, but because the American people have concluded they would no longer give it the amount of protection it has heretofore had. But when you come to an industry that gets no protection, and asks none, that is paying a tax under existing law of 450 per cent upon the cost of its product, and the Government is asked not to enforce the collection of that tax until the process of manufacture has been completed, until the product is ready to go upon the market, we are told that the Government can not do this without going into partnership with the manufacturer; in other words, that the tax the Government does not collect immediately is money loaned to the manufacturer.

It seems to me you have but to state such a proposition to show the utter fallacy of the claim that the Government is loaning anything to a manufacturer who pays the entire expense of the manufacture and then furnishes the warehouse in which the Government compels him to keep the product until the tax is paid.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. LINDSAY. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let us suppose a case which, I think, is analogous to this one. A person living in Louisville owns unimproved real estate worth $100,000 which is taxed, say, $2,000. The owner of that property goes to the city council of Louisville and says: "I intend to improve this property. I am not getting anything for it now; it is not in a fit condition to use; it is no benefit to me at all. At the end of eight years I expect the property will be in a condition to bring me in revenue. I ask you to defer the taxes of $2,000 a year upon that property until I can improve it, as I shall have done at the end of eight years." Now, if the city council of Louisville grant the request and give him an extension of eight years without interest, would the Senator consider that was not going into partnership to a certain extent with the gentleman in his real-estate speculation?

Mr. LINDSAY. If it were not for the fact that real estate is taxed in proportion to its present value, and not four or five times that value, and is always ready for market, and that time does not improve its inherent qualities——

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator mean to say that there is ever a time when Bourbon whisky from the day it is produced can not be sold at some price or other?

Mr. LINDSAY. I say that Bourbon whisky is never ready to sell as a perfected article until sufficient time has elapsed for the work of purification to be completed.

Mr. GALLINGER. How long is that?

Mr. LINDSAY. From six to ten years. The Senator from Ohio says that a bonded period of three years is long enough. I venture to say that the Senator from Ohio has never had used under his supervision whisky as young as three years. The best test of the proper age at which it can be properly used is the invariable statement made by the host, "I wish you to understand this whisky is thirteen years old."

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question in that connection?

Mr. LINDSAY. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator has stated that whisky, as it comes from the still, is worth 40 cents a gallon. What is the thirteen-year-old whisky worth in the market?

Mr. LINDSAY. I say the cost of manufacture is 20 cents per gallon.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is thirteen-year-old whisky worth in the market?

Mr. LINDSAY. Before the panic the McKinley act brought on us it was worth, tax paid, $6 a gallon. It can be had now for $4.

Mr. CULLOM. Before the Democrats came in.

Mr. LINDSAY. In this connection, since the remark of the Senator from Illinois, I will state that in reading a speech made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] the other day, I find he has abandoned the claim that the panic came upon us in 1893 because of Mr. Cleveland's election.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will permit me a moment, I want to suggest to him another mathematical proposition. He says that whisky fresh from the still is worth 40 cents a gallon. At the end of thirteen years, with interest on it at 6 per cent, which I think is granted as a fair rate of interest in Kentucky, we have 78 per cent. Seventy-eight per cent of 40 is 31 cents a gallon; 40 and 31 make 71 cents a gallon; which is the cost of carrying the whisky without any tax. Now, if the Government of the United States is to carry the taxes and to lose the leakage, why should not the Government share the increase of value from 78 cents to $6?

Mr. LINDSAY. There are numerous reasons independent of merely 6 per cent interest to account for the increase in the course of ten years of the value of a gallon of whisky. In the first place, one-fourth of the whisky will have evaporated before ten years have gone.

Mr. ALDRICH. You allow 9 gallons in 40 for that, which is about one-fourth.

Mr. LINDSAY. You are not taxed on 9 gallons in 40, but you have, nevertheless, lost the 9 gallons out of the 40, or 10 gallons out of the 46. It has, nevertheless, evaporated, and the remaining 31 or 35 gallons represent the 40 or 46, as the case may be. So that is one reason why it increases in value. Then the Government kindly steps in and requires the distiller, in addition to his distillery, to erect a bonded warehouse in which all the product of his distillery shall be stored during the time it is thus ripening for the market. The expense of keeping up the warehouse, the insurance, State and local taxes, and all other incidental expenses, are to be added to the expense of the distillation.

Let us see whether the Government loses anything by allowing the distiller the benefit of the evaporation. Statistics show that about 100,000,000 gallons per year of distilled spirits are consumed in the United States. If you this year take out of bond and pay the tax on the 200,000,000 gallons the Government will get twice the tax this year it would get if it had waited for the tax to be paid upon consumption. But next year the Government gets nothing because no business is conducted by men who have so little business judgment as that they will continue to manufacture and pay taxes in the face of the fact that there is a year's supply of tax-paid spirits on hand.

So that at the end of five years the Government will have collected $1.10 upon every gallon of whisky that has been consumed and will have realized the last dollar of taxation which could be wrung from the taxpayers under any process of collection. If the distillers undertake to make whisky and pay the tax in advance of consumption, bankruptcy inevitably follows; and when the Government levies 450 or 550 per cent tax upon a particular article, it ought not to be the policy of the Government to force the owner to sell the property before people are ready to buy it.

What is the consequence of compelling the withdrawal of whisky at the end of three years? It is not ready for the markets unless it be neutral spirits. It can not be sold to consumers. It must be sold to speculators or wholesale dealers who can hold it, and they hold the product of the manufacturer and make the profit out of it, because they are able to advance the money to pay the tax. It is a case in which, because of the operation of the taxing laws of the Government, the manufacturer is compelled to sell his product in advance of the natural demand created by consumption.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me?

Mr. LINDSAY. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Government of the United States steps in and prevents a man from selling his whisky and allows him to carry it, ought not the Government to have the usual commercial rates of interest which he would have to pay to banks or other commercial institutions for the loan?

Mr. LINDSAY. The Government has loaned the man nothing. The Government does not propose to loan the man anything. The product is unfinished. It is not ready for the market. It can not be put upon the market and sold at its fair value. It is a case of the Government stepping in and levying the tax and enforcing the collection, and thereby compelling the producer to sell to a speculator instead of holding it for his own benefit. That is the logic of the situation.

The proposed extension will benefit other States than Kentucky. The great amount of whiskey now in bond was not all manufactured in Kentucky. All the rye whiskies made in Pennsylvania and West Virginia demand the same relief at the hands of the Government in order that they may be perfected. Straight whisky is also made in Maryland and in Tennessee. Five or six States are interested. It is the whisky trust, which has its headquarters at Peoria, Ill., that is interfering with the demand for relief by people who ask not for protection, not for the reduction of taxes, but that they shall not be compelled to pay until their product is ready for the market.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Kentucky pardon me? He refers to the whisky trust. If it is a corporation what is the name of the president?

Mr. LINDSAY. Greenhut, I think, is his name.

Mr. HOAR. Has the Senator a list of the officers?

Mr. LINDSAY. I have not a list of them here.

Mr. HOAR. I think that list ought to be put in the RECORD.

Mr. LINDSAY. Greenhut is the president. It was originally a combination of distillers and rectifiers. I understand that Mr. Greenhut is the president of the trust.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator put in the RECORD in connection with his remarks the list of officers?

Mr. LINDSAY. I will put it in if I can obtain it.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Kentucky inform me who is the first vice-president?

Mr. LINDSAY. I can not.

Mr. HILL. I think it is J. Beggs, who resides at Terre Haute, Ind.

Mr. LINDSAY. Possibly that is true. The whisky trust is not engaged in the manufacture of straight whisky at all, although it seems to be the owner of ten or twelve million gallons of straight whisky, as is shown by the returns from the Internal Revenue Bureau. The whisky trust makes what are called neutral spirits; in other words one-half water and one-half pure alcohol. Instead of allowing those spirits to ripen with age, to mature by lapse of time, they are put through a process of rectification. It is not the case now as it was fifteen or twenty years ago, of the distiller of high wines being at one place and the rectifier at another.

Under the rulings of the Internal Revenue Bureau the rectifying is now done in the distillery and is regarded as a necessary part of the process of distillation. The high wines are filtered through charcoal and other substances supposed to take out all the poisons which are in the raw whisky when it leaves the distillery; and it comes out purified, so far as the fusel oil and these other poisons are concerned, but without the desired flavor and aroma. It is as ready for sale that day as it ever will be. Age does not improve it. It will not be held because the evaporation is a dead loss to the holder. The whisky thus made does not increase in price by lapse of time. Therefore it is always ready to be sold. It can only be sold for drinking purposes by having its flavor and aroma improved by subsidiary and artificial means.

Mr. GALLINGER. Are drugs added to it?

Mr. LINDSAY. I do not suppose they add drugs of harmful character. I do not think it is necessary to add such drugs; but they can blend with three or four barrels of neutral spirits a barrel of straight whisky, and thereby give it somewhat the flavor of good whisky, give it somewhat the taste of straight whisky, and impose it upon the public as straight whisky. Three-fourths of the whiskies sold at the bars to-day are compounded or blended whiskies.

Mr. SQUIRE. Are those what are called blended goods?

Mr. LINDSAY. Those are blended goods.

Mr. CULLOM. Now, tell us about Kentucky whisky. How is it made?

Mr. LINDSAY. Kentucky whisky is put in barrels——

Mr. ALDRICH. How much water is used?

Mr. LINDSAY. Kentucky whisky has just one-half alcohol and one-half water when it leaves the distillery; and we do not add water to it, as the whisky-trust men may do. We suffer the diminution in quantity, and make it up in the increase in price. The whisky-trust people can not increase the price of their whisky, because age adds nothing to its quality. Now, why is it that the whisky trust desires to force the straight whisky out of bond and into use before it has matured?

Mr. PALMER. I hope the Senator from Kentucky will allow me to interrupt him for a moment.

Mr. LINDSAY. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. I have waited with the greatest patience for the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] to defend Illinois whisky. He has not done so. I think that duty devolves upon me. I protest against this assault upon Illinois whisky.

Mr. CULLOM. I was waiting for the senior Senator in age to make the suggestion, he being better informed on that subject than I.

Mr. LINDSAY. I will read a letter written by a constituent of the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the Senator does that I should like to have a little information in relation to Kentucky whisky. What is the cost of Kentucky whisky when it is made?

Mr. LINDSAY. Twenty to twenty-five cents per gallon is the actual cost of production. That, of course, does not include interest upon the plant, etc.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to put an interrogatory to my honorable friend. I believe it costs about 20 cents. That is what I understand. Then, when the whisky goes into the Government warehouse, into a Government building, under charge of Government officers, without cost to any person, the Kentucky distiller has 20 cents in a gallon of whisky. The Government of the United States has now 90 cents. We keep that whisky under heavy expense, because we have to have very bright officers in charge of the warehouses. The Kentucky distiller never pays any more than the 20 cents. It is cared for for him, while the Government loses every day. It loses 8 gallons in three years. When the whisky comes out, the Government only puts a tax on four-fifths of the whisky at the most. So the Government is losing all the time while it has the custody of the whisky and the care of it, and all that.

The distiller, on the other hand, makes a great deal of money, and instead of 20 cents he wants a dollar and a half for his whisky, with the tax added. It is the most profitable industry that I know of, unless it is the sugar trust, the refining industry, which gets the advantage of having the sugar refined at the expense of the Government practically under the operations of the pending bill. Of course they do not lose anything. But the Kentucky distiller in the manufacture of whisky has a larger margin of profit than any other business in the country yields.

Mr. LINDSAY. The difference between the sugar refiner and the whisky manufacturer is that there is a tax levied upon the product of the whisky manufacturer, while the Senator and his party gave a bonus of 60 cents a hundred pounds to the refiner of sugar and taxed him not one cent.

The second objection to the Senator's theory is, that the Government has no interest in whisky when it goes into the warehouse, which is not the Government's warehouse at all.

Mr. SHERMAN. The warehouses, I understand, are built by the Government.

Mr. LINDSAY. The Government does not build the warehouses, but requires the distillers to build them.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill expressly provides that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall see that the storehouses are built, and then they are at once put in possession of the Government officers, who get four or five dollars a day.

Mr. LINDSAY. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Government is at constant expense covering attendance and on account of the large supervision necessary. The Government's investment is constantly decreasing, and the investment of the whisky distiller is constantly increasing in a geometrical ratio.

Mr. LINDSAY. I undertook, in answer to a suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island, to reply to that point. There is a constant diminution of the quantity of whisky put in by the distiller.

Mr. SHERMAN. The residuum that is left is worth four or or five times as much.

Mr. LINDSAY. The loss in quantity is one reason why the residuum is worth more.

Mr. SHERMAN. The distiller gets that. The Government ought to have a portion of the benefit arising from that.

Mr. LINDSAY. Why?

Mr. SHERMAN. Because the Government is interested in four-fifths of the whisky when it goes into the warehouse.

Mr. LINDSAY. Is the Government interested in it?

Mr. SHERMAN. It has a tax upon it; it has a lien upon it. The quantity of whisky is constantly diminishing, and consequently the tax to be collected is consequently growing less from the day the whisky is put in the warehouse.

Mr. LINDSAY. Is it not a fact that none of the whisky which evaporates ever goes into consumption at all?

Mr. SHERMAN. What is left is so much more valuable that it makes up for the loss by evaporation.

Mr. LINDSAY. Why is it more valuable? When it goes into the warehouse the work of manufacture has been but one-third completed.

Mr. SHERMAN. All the balance of the work is done by nature. It is done by age. It does not cost the distiller a cent, while it costs the Government a good deal of money to care for the property.

Mr. LINDSAY. Is there any reason why the distiller, the owner of the whisky, should not have the benefit of the work of improvement done by nature? Is there any reason why the Government should not only tax the thing itself, but should also tax the beneficent processes of nature? Is it the argument of the Senator from Ohio, that the Government has some sort of proprietary interest in the very forces of nature, and that therefore the Government shall share in the profits of the product upon which those forces operate?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Government owns four-fifths of the whisky when it goes into the warehouse. It has a lien upon it. It can not be taken out of the possession of the Government without paying whatever tax is due and reimbursing the Government. Our interest is constantly diminishing by leakage, wastage, and evaporation, while the distiller is compounding his interest over and over again.

Mr. LINDSAY. The Government puts up the rates to cover all that. The Government put 50 cents a gallon upon distilled spirits, and required it to be paid at the time of production. Afterwards the Government extended the time and increased the tax.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not at the same time, and there was no connection between the two.

Mr. LINDSAY. Afterwards; but no matter about that. The Government suddenly discovered that it had some sort of interest in the forces of nature and that the distiller could not conscientiously claim all the benefit. Then the Government put up the rate. But the Government never had any proprietary interest in the thing itself. The Government holds possession, as the pledgee holds possession of the pledge, to insure the ultimate payment of the tax. When? When the whisky is withdrawn from the warehouse for the purpose of being put upon the market. Experience has proved that three years do not ripen straight whiskies, and that they can not, at the end of that period, properly go upon the market, and the Government is only asked to hold its hand from the collection of this great tax of 550 per cent until consumption, or the demands of those who consume will justify the owner in paying the taxes and offering his goods for sale.

But if you force the whisky out of bond before it is ready for the market, before it is matured for use, you compel the payment of the tax upon an immature article, and nine times out of ten you compel the owner to sell it for such price as he can get, or else send it out of the country where a more liberal system is in force.

Mr. ALDRICH. Before the Senator from Kentucky sits down I desire to ask him a practical question in this connection which presents my view of this question. There are now in bonded warehouses about 134,000,000 gallons of bourbon and rye whisky, a large portion of which is in the State of Kentucky, 90,000,000 gallons, as I remember, of the 134,000,000 gallons.

Mr. BRICE. Bourbon and rye?

Mr. ALDRICH. Bourbon and rye.

Mr. LINDSAY. Bourbon and rye.

Mr. ALDRICH. That whisky is in bonded warehouses, subject to the bond of the distillers to pay a tax of a certain rate on it within three years. Now, it is proposed to extend that period to eight years. The Senator from Kentucky says that the whisky is not ready for use at the end of three years.

Without stopping to consider what are the beneficent effects of nature upon whisky, which is aside from the practical question we are considering, I think the Senator from Kentucky will agree with me that the distiller who has the time extended from three years to eight years, after having made a contract with the Government, gets the benefit of the interest on that tax for the additional five years. I think there can be no question about that. I think the Senator will be willing to admit that. And the Government loses the benefit of the interest on that sum for the additional five years from the extension of the time when the bond is to be taken. That is my contention.

Mr. LINDSAY. The Senator says the Government has a contract with the distiller that he shall take the whisky out of bond and pay 90 cents a gallon tax upon it when he does take it out of bond at the end of three years.

Mr. ALDRICH. The contract is to pay whatever tax the Government of the United States levies upon it.

Mr. LINDSAY. But is that the contract?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is the contract.

Mr. LINDSAY. If the Senator ever reads the bond given by the distiller——

Mr. ALDRICH. I have a copy of the bond here.

Mr. LINDSAY. He will see that 90 cents is the contract.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no; I have the bond here. I will find it in a minute.

Mr. LINDSAY. But whatever that may be, the distiller had no reason to suppose that an increased tax would be applied to whisky in bond. The tax on whisky has been raised two or three times by Republican legislation, and always so as to operate upon whisky thereafter made, and not upon whisky in bond. Did the distillers have any reason to suppose that when the Government should conclude to raise the tax the precedents your party had set would be disregarded and the increased tax applied to whisky in bond as well as that to be made thereafter?

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator that he is not answering my question. The question was susceptible of a categorical answer or an answer yes or no, with modifications. My question was simply whether if the time is extended five years the distiller does not get the benefit of the extension?

Mr. LINDSAY. The owner of the whisky in bond, whether he be a distiller or not, gets the benefit of the extension, of course.

Mr. ALDRICH. To the extent of the interest for five years of the extension upon the sum paid.

Mr. LINDSAY. Let us see what benefit he gets. Suppose you compel him to sell for what he can get. You have thus enforced the letter of your contract and he has no legal right to complain, because no legal right has been disregarded; but is it the policy of the Government to exact the letter of the law to the sacrifice of the interest of the citizen? Is it not a fair thing for the Government when it discovers that the bonded period should be longer in order to mature the whisky held in bond—is it anything more than proper to extend the bonded period until the taxed property is ready to go upon the market? Can the Government say that any extraordinary liberality has been exercised when it adds to the tax of the whisky already in bond 20 cents a gallon?

Mr. ALDRICH. Suppose a party is under obligations to pay the Government of the United States a certain sum for taxes, either customs taxes or other taxes, at a certain time, and that he comes in and says his financial affairs are not in such a condition that he can afford to pay then, and the Government, by an act of Congress, gives an extension for five years; is it unfair that he should pay interest upon those taxes which he had agreed to pay at a certain time?

Mr. LINDSAY. Does not the pending bill propose to add an additional tax of 20 cents a gallon?

Mr. ALDRICH. There is absolutely no connection at all between the two.

Mr. LINDSAY. They are in the same connection.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no.

Mr. LINDSAY. Yes; they are both provided for in the same section, connected together all the way through. They stand together, and an additional tax is to be imposed by the very section of the bill which gives the extension.

Mr. ALDRICH. Suppose Congress should go back to the old law; would the Senator then be willing to leave out these provisions?

Mr. LINDSAY. If you were to go back to the old law I would still insist that as a question of public policy extension ought to be given, not for the mere benefit of the distiller, but because it is inherently just and proper.

I will now read a letter from a constituent of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] as to the reason why the manufacturers of neutral spirits, the people who rectify and blend bad whiskies with good, are opposed to the extension of the bonded period. This letter is written from Cincinnati, dated June 20. It is not on a form prepared by the whisky trust and sent out for distribution:

DEAR SIR: The "whisky trust" of odorous memory, bitterly opposes any extension of the bonded period.

Because it would tend to disrupt the trust, by greatly increasing the sale of properly aged and ripened "straight" whisky.

The longer the bonded period the greater the decrease in the sale and use of the whisky trust's product, to wit: rectified, compounded, and vilely adulterated spirits.

Under the one-year bonded period the production of straight, fine whisky was 5,000,000 gallons per annum. Under the present three-year bonded period the consumption is now over 30,000,000 gallons per annum.

The per capita consumption of whisky the past thirty years has decreased proportionately to the increase of population during the same period; consequently the three years bonded period has increased the consumption of 25,000,000 gallons of ripened straight whisky, and decreased the consumption of 25,000,000 gallons of rectified stuff.

Respectfully,

JAMES LEVY & BRO.

If time shall be given by the Government for the complete ripening of the whisky, the straight or Bourbon whisky, free from adulteration, will take the place of the rectified whisky, and ten years hence one-half of the whiskies that go into the market will be straight whiskies, and the rectified whiskies or neutral spirits will go where they ought to go, into the arts and sciences, and not into consumption as a beverage.

I wish to read and comment upon a letter put in evidence by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to show another motive for the opposition to this extended bonded period. This letter is from the American Warehousemen's Association. It commences:

The American Warehousemen's Association, composed of all the leading warehouses throughout the United States, hereby earnestly protest against the extension of the bonded period for the storage of whisky in distillery bonded warehouses.

What interest can these warehousemen have in this matter? It is a question between the Government and the taxpayer. It is a question between the owner of the whisky in bond and the Government. Yet the warehousemen, who do not deal in whisky, and have no interest in whisky, are here protesting against the extension of the bonded period.

They say:

The entire direct trade interests involved, excepting a few distillers, are opposed to this measure, likewise the banking and insurance interests of the country, and it is only favored by the distillers, who now have a complete monopoly for three years and ask to have this monopoly extended five years more, eight years in all, simply because it will be a great benefit to them and will also at the same time relieve a somewhat distressing situation to them, due entirely to an unwise overproduction of their product on the part of the distillers.

A monopoly of the warehouse business. As I said, the Government compels the distiller to build warehouses; it compels the distiller to put the product of his distillery in the warehouse, and then places the warehouse in the custody of an internal-revenue officer and the distiller never has possession of the whisky until he pays the taxes and withdraws it. These warehousemen merely wish to promote their own business. In other words, these warehousemen are seeking custom for their warehouses, and they have intervened here, in a matter in which they have no interest, in order that the Government may assist in forcing whisky out of the bonded warehouses, because taxed whisky can not remain in a bonded warehouse, and that custom may in this way be brought to them. They undertake to represent the bankers and the insurance people. Not a letter has come here from a banker or an insurance man. The banks at home take care of the holders of the whisky. The insurance men at home take care of the insurance upon whisky. These people in Chicago and St. Louis and other great cities, who own warehouses and who desire patronage therefor, are intervening here to prevent the Government from allowing the distiller or the manufacturer additional time in which to use his own warehouse.

There is another view of this case. Whenever the production of whisky is so great that consumption will not justify the owner in paying the tax and taking it out of bond, and the Government insists on having the tax, what follows? There is a door open under the construction put upon the existing law, as it will be put upon this bill, by the Internal Revenue Bureau and by the Treasury Department. The whisky forced out of bond, instead of paying the tax, will be taken out under bond for exportation and sent across the water in German ships, to German warehouses, to be insured by German insurance companies, and kept there at the will of the owner. He can keep it in the German warehouse one year, five years, or ten years at will, and when he brings it back, under our laws, it comes in through our custom-house by paying the internal-revenue tax and not the import duty.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me? I did not make any allusion to that point in the course of my remarks, but I intended to do so before I was through discussing this question. I have been in Congress ever since this question was first agitated, and I believe that the exportation and reimportation of whiskies in the manner suggested by the Senator from Kentucky is a clear evasion of the law; that it has no legality and should not be permitted. I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that every gallon of whisky exported under the provisions of this act must be in cases where a certificate has been made and sworn to by the distiller in the form which I will read to the Senate:

The undersigned, owner of —— packages of —— the serial numbers of which are —— deposit in distillery bonded warehouse No. —— of —— desire to withdraw the same under —— for export to —— without any purpose, after landing said spirits, of shipping them back to this country, requests that such spirits be regauged.

—— ——.

If any spirits have been exported they have been exported under this condition. The Treasury Department requires the certificate to be made and sworn to, because it was clearly the purpose of such exportation, or became clearly the purpose of such exportation, to evade and nullify the provision of the law.

Mr. LINDSAY. I might not undertake to say the Senator is wrong if this were an original proposition; but I can say that under every Republican Secretary of the Treasury and under the Democratic Secretaries of the Treasury whiskies have been exported upon just such affidavits, and reimported by the payment of the internal-revenue tax, and nobody has questioned the validity of the act.

Mr. SHERMAN. Would it not be very proper now to guard against the exportation and reimportation of whisky? It seems to me that has grown out of the construction of the existing law, and undoubtedly it is correct. Every person has a right to export American products abroad, and he can bring such products back. It applies to all kinds of goods, to whisky as well as everything else. When they are returned and shown to be of American production they are only subject to the internal-revenue tax imposed upon them. All kinds of goods may be exported and imported in the same way. There may be some error to be corrected. When the American products are exported, and when they are imported, there ought to be some kind of duty placed upon them, but there is none. It seems to me, however, that that would be a good thing for the Senators on the other side of the Chamber who have charge of the tariff bill to provide against.

Mr. LINDSAY. I am a little surprised that that view did not occur to my honorable friend when he was Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. This question did not arise until after I had ceased to hold that office.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator from Kentucky is as well aware as I am of the fact that the Kentucky distillers came to Congress in 1881, 1882, and 1883, and asked for the passage of an act which would give them an extended bonded period. In fact the various acts introduced were substantially the same as that now under consideration. The Senate of the United States refused by an overwhelming vote to pass any measure of this kind.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky if he will allow me to ask a question of the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. LINDSAY. I will.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from Rhode Island propose to change the amendment pending by an amendment?

Mr. ALDRICH. I propose to offer an amendment to strike out the section.

Mr. HARRIS. I should be glad to have the Senator do so as soon as possible and let us deal with it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor, and I can not move an amendment until he has concluded.

Mr. LINDSAY. I read from a letter written by a distiller at Memphis, Tenn., which I think will answer the question of the Senator from Rhode Island. He says:

Our product is a fine rye whisky, which is not ready for market until it is six to eight years old. We never sell it until it is four years old. Our product, on this account, is limited because of the long time we have to hold out whisky, tax paid, to ripen, so we never produce each year over 2,500 barrels or less than 600 barrels; this year none.

* * * * * * *

Owing to depression in business and the recent financial panic we shut down both for 1893 and 1894, and have not made a barrel. We had to export 500 barrels of 1890 Yannissee to Germany to keep from being swamped by the Government during the panic, for the tax of $20,000 had to be paid in currency at $7.50 (minimum) per $1,000 premium, and on goods not marketable for three or more years.

All this could have been obviated if this Government would do like Europe—give American manufacturers an unlimited bonded period. We ship our product abroad at great expense on foreign ships, store and insure with foreign companies, and after arduous labor to sell to foreign customers are confronted with the Chinese wall argument that we have no show. Why?

"That we Europeans can beat your price because we have unlimited bonded period and no ocean freight to pay upon our product;" hence, now we have to bring back the lot upon foreign ships and try to sell to the American people. We have about 1,300 barrels abroad, most of which cost us $100 per barrel.

The American manufacturer compelled to go abroad can not compete in the foreign market because of our peculiar and unnecessarily oppressive laws, and if he carries his goods abroad with the intention of selling, he finds himself so undersold in the market abroad that he must bring them back.

The writer continues:

But the Government has to be supported, particularly on account of the pensions, and hence a tax on imported wines and liquors per gallon—not ad valorem—is necessary to make up the deficit.

There is no increase or decrease either in the cost of importing, nor does any one but a "sole agent" at New York obtain commissions, which are not more than 2½ to 7½ per cent. The freight rates from Europe to America on foreign vessels are very low, in fact, cheaper than from New York to Memphis.

In our line of business, if we had an unlimited bonded period like Europe, we think we could distribute the product of American distilleries all over the globe, just as our merchants are distributing the product of our wheat and corn fields now, in the shape of meal and flour, besides cotton and the cattle product, also through the new cold-storage facilities of the foreign steamers plying between this and other countries.

The Eastern manufacturer asks for protection that he may be enabled to manufacture his goods and compete with the foreign manufacturer, and gentlemen on the other side say he is entitled to it, that it is good policy, that he should be given it; but when the manufacturers of whisky say, "We want no protection, we care not how you tax us; give us only the same bonded period given to like manufacturers across the water and we will not only supply the American public, but we will compete in Europe with European manufacturers," we are told that that amounts to the Government going into partnership with the American manufacturer, and that the tax is not to be deferred unless it shall bear interest.

Let us see the reason why goods will go abroad. The cost of transportation on a barrel of whisky across to Europe is $1.90, storage and insurance for one year 72 cents, return freight to Kentucky $2.37, or $4.99 as the entire expense to export and keep whisky away the first year.

Now, if the distiller pays the tax and keeps it at home a year the loss on tax outs is $1.80, storage and insurance $1.92, interest on tax $2.80, or $5.52, or nearly $1.50 more upon the barrel than if he had exported it. If he keeps it abroad four years the foreign cost is $7.15 a barrel, and the home cost is $26.08 a barrel. It is to be relieved against these hardships that distillers ship their goods abroad instead of keeping them at home. They ship the goods abroad, pay the freight to the owners of German vessels both ways, pay the German insurance companies and German warehousemen, and then bring the goods back, saving nearly $20 a barrel by the exportation. I say a system of taxation like that is an outrage.

My friend from Rhode Island said the other day in a most dramatic way that if a certain provision of the income-tax law was not modified there would be insurrection at home; that no free people would endure the indignity and the outrage of having the books of a corporation exhibited to a tax assessor. That outrage, if it be one, bears no comparison to the system of taxation which brings about such unwholesome results as these. Therefore, as a mere matter of justice and sound public policy, it being impossible for the Government to lose anything, and without regard to the claims of the distiller, and whether the tax be increased or lowered, the bonded period ought to be extended.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, there is one aspect of this feature of the bill upon which no one has yet touched, and I shall add a very few words to the already protracted discussion.

In the State of California according to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for 1893, there were operated during the last fiscal year in the first district fruit distilleries numbering 149, in the fourth district 138.

We manufacture in that State grape brandy of good quality and in considerable quantity. The statistics show that quite an export trade has developed. In one instance—that of the estate of the late Senator Stanford—some $190,000 worth was recently exported to Germany and sold. The owners were enabled to do this because they had sufficient means to keep the liquor on hand until it was reasonably matured, and hence salable.

Mr. President, there has been something said about the whisky trust; there has been some talk about the Kentucky distillers; but the establishments shown by the record to which I have adverted to exist in my State must demonstrate to Senators that in attempting to aid in extending the bonded period I am acting in direct line with the interest of those of my constituents who are producing grapes and making brandy therefrom. Unless the period is extended these law-abiding and industrious citizens will practically go out of business. They represent small concerns all the more valuable for that reason. A very large number are vitally concerned. Upon these distilleries our vineyardists largely rely and must rely. Without an opportunity to bond the products thus made it is doubtful, as I have said, whether we can continue in business at all.

My colleague [Mr. PERKINS] and myself have received telegrams representing almost every interest in California connected with viticulture urging the extension of the bonded period. Among others I present a telegram which is a duplicate of one which came to me personally, which I request the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The telegram will be read if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 23, 1894.

GEORGE C. PERKINS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The State viticultural commission, speaking for many thousand grape-growers, wine makers, and distillers, urgently requests you to use your best efforts to have the bonding period extended to eight years, as provided in the Senate Finance Committee bill.

JOHN T. DOYLE,
President State Viticultural Commission.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Doyle is one of the most prominent men in our State. In fact, he is a gentleman who has devoted his energies of late years to agricultural and viticultural and horticultural pursuits as well as to the advancement of the public generally, rather than to mere personal affairs. Fortunately he is so circumstanced that he can afford to do this. Let me attract your notice to the proposition that it takes about five gallons of wine to make a gallon of brandy.

There is on hand to-day in California, owing to the exceedingly depreciated value of wine in the market, a large quantity of that commodity, and it will relieve our grape-growers not a little if they are able to turn some of this product, say one-fifth, into brandy and hold it until it is marketable.

I shall not discuss the features of this issue which have been already presented, but it is idle for Senators to assert that these goods can not be shipped abroad. The fact is otherwise. Can it be possible that the distinguished Senators upon the other side of the Chamber who have been in control of this Government for so long have been unaware of that system of exportation and reimportation which they now style illegal?

I heard it stated the other day that the reason why many Senators voted for extravagant advantages to a certain trust when the McKinley bill was passed, was because they were innocent of knowledge on the subject. Mr. President, had I been searching for uncommon and superlative innocence I would not have gone in quest of some of the parties who claim to have been thus deceived. But conceding the absence of wrong, I can hardly imagine that Senators upon the other side who have discussed this subject can claim sincerely that it is impossible to ship spirits out of this country and bring them back, and thus postpone the revenue payments.

My colleague, who is at the head of a very large steamship company on the Pacific coast, can certify that his company has taken these articles from the State of California to British Columbia, unloaded the cargo there, and subsequently transported the same back again to the United States.

Why should we deprive our people of the right to store their own product here? Why should we chase them out of this country and compel them to go to the Bermuda Islands or somewhere else, to house and keep their goods, all manufactured at home?

Mr. President, we have all received, I think, circulars asking us to oppose the extension of the bonded period. From whom have these come? Not from the men in my State who manufacture brandies; not from those persons engaged in viticultural callings; not from the men in Kentucky and elsewhere who make straight goods. Who forwarded these circulars? Manifestly those whose employment in the manufacture of another class of alleged whiskies makes it to their advantage to impose under the name of law an unjust burden upon manufacturers of straight goods—the design being to make that pursuit if not impossible at least extremely risky and unprofitable.

There is not an individual in my State engaged in grape-growing and wine-making who does not feel that the defeat of this provision extending the bonded period will be utterly destructive of his industry, and whoever may be represented by the distinguished Senator from Ohio, who made an address here to-day upon this topic, it is plain he represents neither those who are the producers of straight whisky or those who in my part of the country are legitimately engaged in the manufacture of brandy.

His proposition means the utter annihilation of wine property in California. His proposition means practically that it is a crime to keep within this country these manufactured products, and yet that it is all right to send them abroad, pay warehouse charges to the foreigner, and bring them back and place them upon our market.

Why can not those of my constituents who are thus occupied hold these goods in bond even for an indefinite period? Generally they are persons of moderate means. The brandy that they manufacture is really not marketable until after this three-year period has passed. They come to you and say that if you will give them this opportunity, which every nation that pretends to be conversant with economic conditions confers upon its people, they will be able to get along.

The brandy producers of my State have submitted to a tariff reduction in the pending bill from two and a half to one dollar and eighty cents per gallon, and now we are threatened by Senators upon the other side with destruction. It is not true that this brandy must be considered manufactured when it reaches the warehouse. It is the truth, as my friend from Kentucky has stated, that the processes of nature working even after three years are essential to the completion of a commercial article.

Yet we are told that we must take this brandy and throw it upon the market before it is ripened and when it will bring but a trifling price, and that we must make this sacrifice to an interest ably represented here, powerful in this country—an interest able to reach every little cross-roads groggery in the land, strong enough to make all engaged in illicit liquor business in the palming off of spurious articles, enthusiastic against the proposed extension of the bonded period. Are we legislating for such a combination?

There is no emissary, no one connected with the whisky trust, who is in favor of the extension of the bonded period, or if he is he has kept his views severely to himself. And yet there is no influence allied to that whisky trust that is not engaged in attempting to defeat this measure. I do not pretend to assert that Senators whose views are at variance with mine are not in absolute integrity in their utterances, but I do say that many of those who indorse their views are not entitled to any protracted hearing before any representative body of the American people.

Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the committee is in the interest of a legitimate industry sanctioned by statute, an industry that pays much money into the Treasury, and this avocation can not in one breath be said to be proper and the next instant condemned as criminal. We have recognized this production as something upon which people have a right to depend. The manufacture of whisky as represented and explained by the Senators from Kentucky in their arguments, is undeniably lawful and entitled to consideration.

No one has claimed that it is against public policy for the man who raises grapes to continue in that business. Hence I have a right to appeal to every Senator, whatever may be his political faith, to join with us in this effort to do simple justice to men who are paying heavy taxes to the Government, and honestly toiling for their own and their country's interest.

Mr. President, there should be no party lines upon this question. There are certainly none in California among wine producers. There is no Republican wine-grower, no Republican politician, no Republican business man who will not tell you that the ground upon which I stand is the true ground and that the interests of the people of my State are obviously in this direction. Therefore, not only upon principle, but because it is the wish of those whom I deem entitled to the laws of legitimate protection, that I favor this extension.

I concede that parties engaged in the production of whisky ought, perhaps, to pay something in consideration of the additional bonded period, and hence I will vote for the higher tax. Mr. President, I have heard Senators who have been loud in their condemnation of this side of the Chamber because upon some of the luxuries, or so-called luxuries, of life the rates have been reduced.

Now that it is proposed to put an additional tax upon whisky

we hear exclamations that such action is wrong and against public policy. One Senator learned upon these subjects solemnly declared that he does not believe such an onerous tariff law will produce as much revenue as a smaller charge, and another Senator, equally wise and sincere, solemnly assures us that the plan will produce too much money.

Mr. President, between this clashing, uncertain, conflicting, and hence, unreliable testimony, I am forced to adopt the familiar rule that the whole must go out of court. We will justify ourselves when we stand before the American people by saying we have increased the price of whisky, if you will; that we have placed an additional revenue tax upon liquor, but that we have allowed our fellow-citizens to retain in the warehouses of this country their products instead of compelling them to send the same abroad.

If you argue that it is better to abolish the whisky business and that no man shall drink of it, I may admit the assertion. Let it be granted for the sake of argument. Nevertheless it is clearly less injurious to health and less injurious to the public and more profitable to honest citizens who depend upon the industry that this liquor should be retained long enough to permit it to go into consumption in the least harmful state and to justify a physician in placing it in the hands of patients.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I trust that the amendment proposed by the committee will be adopted, and that at least in one case our friends on the other side will join us in levying an increased impost upon a luxury and in giving to the American producer those facilities which heretofore he has not had at home, but which he has had to seek under a foreign flag and in an alien land.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, it seems to me that this debate has drifted away from the main question. As I understand the subject, the purpose of our Government in adopting the warehouse system was to aid and facilitate commerce. That was the purpose the English Government had in view when they adopted the warehousing system. If I am not misinformed, there is no limit of time in which the importers or producers in Great Britain are required to take their products from the warehouse. It is by the warehousing system adopted by her in connection with her other commercial policies that have enabled her almost to monopolize the foreign trade of the world.

We began the warehousing system in 1846. Its purpose was to enable our people to import goods and hold them until there was a market for them, to stimulate trade and stimulate production. The purpose of the Government in establishing the warehouses for alcoholic spirits was to enable the manufacturer to keep it until he could find a market for it. It would be impossible for the Government to derive the enormous revenue which it gets from alcoholic spirits if it was impossible to produce the spirits, and it is impossible to produce whiskies when it is impossible to sell them. Therefore the Government was put in a position where, in order to carry out the policy of bringing to her coffers this enormous revenue, she must make the production of whisky profitable to the producer, and take care of that.

As it has been argued here, the Government has discovered that in order to carry this policy into effect it has to extend the policy, and has been forced to change the taxation from production to consumption, because you could not maintain the tax on the production of the goods and compel them to go directly into consumption when they were unfit for consumption. Therefore the great policy of our Government has been to tax articles going into consumption and to put the tax on them as they do go into consumption.

Mr. President, it has been argued very adroitly that the Government has some interest in the whisky when it is in bond; that the Government is keeping the whisky for six or eight years; that the whisky is increasing in value; that the Government is in partnership with the distiller, and yet the Government is getting no benefit. The Government has not a particle of interest in the whisky, any more than it has in the amount that the farmer pays taxes on to his State. Has the State government an interest in the amount that it taxes? Has the State government an interest in the bank account of the man when it taxes him, as it does in my State and perhaps in every State in the Union, on the amount of the money he has?

Is it right that the Government should demand from this man that he should pay interest to the Government in accordance with the amount of money on which he pays the taxes? The whole thing is a fallacy. The Government has no interest at all in any of this property. The only interest the Government has attaches the moment the whisky is in bond for consumption, and that interest of the Government is perfected and closed the very instant when the tax of 90 cents is to be paid on the gallon of whisky. It never has a particle of interest, any moment whatever, any more than it has in the yard of goods imported from Great Britain or Germany and left in the warehouse in New York or Boston.

The warehouses are created for the purpose of securing the property to the producer and holding it to stimulate production, to stimulate trade, and enable the taxpayer to pay the taxes to support the Government.

I can not see, and I was going to say I never could see, why there should be any limit; but I remember when this question was first presented and brought up in the other House. My friend from Rhode Island called attention to the subject awhile ago. It was about 1880, or 1881, or 1882. I was upon the Committee on Ways and Means, and I believe my friend from Maine [Mr. FRYE] was on the committee at the same time. I then opposed the extension.

I felt then it was wrong. But a more general and more extended investigation of the subject led me to conclude that I was wrong in the conclusions that I reached then, and that the policy of this Government should be to have its warehouses without limit, as Great Britain has them. The Government has no right to compel a citizen to sell his property at any time. The only interest that the Government has in it at all is that when consumption demands that it shall come out of the warehouse the tax shall be paid on it.

The Government has no earthly interest in the four hundred and fifty or five hundred million dollars' worth of goods imported into this country, but the Government sees there is a certain amount of exchange going on between our people and other people; and by virtue of that exchange we are taking from them $450,000,000 or $500,000,000 of things that they do not want and we do want, and the Government established its policy of raising revenue by that means. It sees that the wants of our people furnish the safe basis on which to predicate a policy of raising revenue.

The Government does it, but it has no interest in these goods when they are moved. Its interest attaches the moment they touch our shores and start into consumption, and not even the moment they come to our shores unless they are withdrawn for immediate consumption. If they go to a warehouse, the Government has no interest in them in a pecuniary sense, for they are the property of the importer. The interest, the right, and the title of the Government to have any connection with them at all arises at the very moment when they are withdrawn for consumption; and they can not be withdrawn, for the Government officers are in charge, until the tax is paid. That is all there is about this.

I am ready to-day, and shall be so long as I remain in public life, to vote an unlimited period in the warehouses of this country both for importations and for the production of such things as the Government finds it necessary to impose taxes upon. The only way the Government can carry on this business successfully, the only way it can have its taxes collected upon these articles, is to have such accommodations as will enable business to be carried on successfully and profitably by the producer.

Mr. HILL. Let me ask the Senator for how many years the present bonded period has existed?

Mr. ALDRICH. Since 1880.

Mr. LINDSAY. A joint resolution was passed in 1878, and then again an act was passed in 1880, but the system commenced in 1878.

Mr. ALDRICH. The joint resolution provided for a different period.

Mr. LINDSAY. Yes; it gave three years.

Mr. HILL. Has anything unusual occurred in the whisky business from that day to this that now, at this particular time, requires a change?

Mr. MILLS. I do not know whether there has or not. I am not familiar with the whisky business. I am discussing the general policy of the Government.

Mr. HILL. I have only heard part of this discussion, and I do not know what particular thing has occurred, why, the bonded period having for so long a time been continued at three years, and I suppose with some satisfaction to those interested, it should now be changed.

Mr. LINDSAY. If the Senator from New York will pardon me, the House of Representatives raised the tax on distilled spirits in this bill to $1 a gallon, and the Senate has raised it 10 cents additional. That applies to whisky heretofore manufactured and now in bond.

Mr. HILL. That changes the question, does it not?

Mr. LINDSAY. It changes the condition of affairs.

Mr. HILL. Has there not been any increase since 1878?

Mr. LINDSAY. In the manufacture?

Mr. HILL. No; in the tax.

Mr. LINDSAY. The tax has been reduced.

Mr. MILLS. At one time the tax was $2.50 a gallon.

Mr. HILL. The change in the tax, then, if I understand it, is the sole consideration for the claim for the extension of the bonded period.

Mr. MILLS. I do not know what the Senator from New York understands. I certainly said no such thing. I say that when an unwise law is made, when it has been tried by experience and found to be inadequate, it is proper to change it. The Government started out, I believe, with one year in bonded warehouse for whisky, and I believe we did the same thing with our imports. It was found after awhile that that was not a wise condition of things, and the period was lengthened; and I venture to say that the American Congress will, before many years, make the bonded-warehouse period without limit, and permit importers to import their goods and hold them until they can export them or put them on the market for sale.

If the Government intends to collect a large revenue of $100,000,000 or $150,000,000, as it is now doing from whisky, it will find that it will be a wise policy to make that business as profitable as possible to the producer, so that the Government can rely safely at every moment upon getting every dollar of that revenue from the whisky business. When that business is relieved from unnecessary embarrassments, unloaded of its burdens, and permitted to live and continue in such a condition as that the distillers will find it profitable to continue their business, the Government can rely safely upon that revenue.

Mr. STEWART. I have often heard it said that there was no such thing as bad whisky. [Laughter.] I do not indorse that remark. I think there is a great deal of difference in the effect upon the health of the country of alcoholic drinks.

This is a contest between pure and adulterated alcoholic drinks. If the producers are allowed to hold the liquor in bond until nature has matured it, it will be very much less deleterious when used; and, besides, the business will be very much more profitable to the honest producer, for in that case much of it would be exported. If, on the contrary, a heavy tax is put upon it and it is forced into the market before maturity, the producers, if they produce at all, must produce at a loss; but their loss, I admit, will be the gain of those who make money in a way which I have always regarded as very questionable, that is, manipulating spirituous liquors.

In such manipulation almost invariably drugs which are poisonous are used. I have seen in my experience whole communities impoverished and many destroyed by drinking drugged whisky. In the country where I live drugged liquors have been the cause of great calamity, and have been the great bane of the people. Such liquors make drunkards with a rapidity that is marvelous.

Spirituous liquors are so manipulated in many sections of the country that one drink will make a man crazy, and he will go on and spend all his money and ruin himself and his family. If whisky and brandy were allowed to remain in bond until they matured, and then be sold by the producer, the liquors consumed in the country would be vastly less injurious. If they are forced out of bond in an immature state, they go into the hands of manipulators, who can make gallons out of quarts, and fill the land with drunkards.

The manipulation and doctoring of liquors is one of the most potent agencies in producing drunkards. That has been my observation for many years; but I do not speak from my own personal experience, because I have been rather particular about the kind of liquor I have bought. I have bought from producers when I have used, but it has not been a very large quantity, and has not enriched them. But I dare not drink and I would not drink the liquor that is produced by the trusts who are engaged in that kind of manufacture. If they pursue that line of business they will illustrate all the horrors which are described by temperance lecturers.

If we can not abolish strong drink—and that seems impossible—we ought to do what we can to mitigate the evils, and we ought not to encourage an industry which is engaged in mixing liquors that will poison the community. If the business of producing alcohol is to be tolerated do not offer a bounty to those who drug it.

The contest is between the producers and the manipulators, as has been well known for years. The manipulators desire to secure the liquor in its raw state. They will take it and doctor it in their own way, so as to make it palatable; and in doing so they will use drugs and materials which will make it taste well, but it will be deadly in its effects. That is what they are constantly doing. They will take raw whisky and manipulate it, and then tell you that it is ten or fifteen years old; and it is so drugged that by the taste you can not determine the difference; but the next morning you will find it out [laughter], and you will continue to find it out, but then it comes too late, for the harm has been done.

Mr. LINDSAY. Has the Senator found that out by observation?

Mr. STEWART. I am not speaking from any personal experience of my own, and I will not say that I have observed any of my friends in that condition, because that would be personal. [Laughter.]

But this is a plain proposition. The contest to get whisky out of bond quickly is for the purpose of manipulating and selling it for old whisky, and it is by this means that vast sums of money are made. It ought to be allowed to remain in bond until it is fit to be put upon the market, and then you would take away the motive for drugging it; there would be more pure whisky and brandy in the market, and the business of manipulating would be done away with. I think it important to accomplish that if it can be done.

Take California. I am somewhat familiar with the conditions there. They have a large amount of grapes there which can not be converted into salable wine. Something else must be done with them. The raising of grapes in that section of the country is an industry that ought not to be destroyed, because the Pacific coast is capable of furnishing enough wine and grapes to supply this country, and perhaps half or all of Europe, but a large portion of these must be utilized in making brandy. That industry can only be made successful by having a sufficiently long bonded period. At the end of three years the brandy will not sell for more than the amount of the tax; but if it is kept eight years it will sell in any part of the world, as is well known, the Government will get a great deal more revenue, and this great industry will be able to flourish on that coast.

It is a very essential thing for maintaining the grape industry in California that they shall utilize the grapes which they can not convert into wine that is salable. Unless they can utilize that product, that industry will be practically destroyed. If they are allowed to keep the spirits in bond until they mature and are salable, they can get on with that industry, that section of the country will flourish, and the Government will get much more revenue, because there will be much more brandy produced, and it will be of a better kind.

It will not be produced to such an extent by these manipulators. Probably there will not be any more brandy or whisky produced in the country than there is now; but there will be a great deal more pure whisky and pure brandy upon which the Government will get its tax. The amount of revenue will double in a few years, and the production of doctored whisky and doctored brandy, upon which the Government gets no tax, will be correspondingly diminished, which will be a blessing to the people and will prevent the sapping of their constitutions and the destruction of their health.

We should do what we can to mitigate the evil of intoxicating drinks, and this can be done by an extended bonded period. While the aggregate amount of intoxicating liquors produced will not be diminished, the production of the adulterated article will be diminished and the pure article substituted for it.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. PEFFER. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I trust that Senators will excuse me for suggesting that in my opinion the pending amendment would have been agreed to two hours ago but for the arguments which have been made in its favor. [Laughter.] I trust again that Senators will excuse me when I suggest my surprise that when the Senate strikes whisky it lingers for two hours. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRYE. And the Democratic side breaks loose. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRIS. And the Republican side lingers with equal avidity. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. Do I understand that the Senator from Tennessee sets his face against it?

Mr. HARRIS. I did not hear the Senator from Massachusetts, and I deem it always very important to hear what the Senator says.

Mr. HOAR. I asked the Senator if he set his face against it?

Mr. HARRIS. Again I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I shall not repeat it.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator's voice is weak. Has he been lingering? [Laughter.] Mr. President, I only desire to add that I think I shall vote for this amendment, notwithstanding the voluminous arguments which have been made in its favor. [Laughter.] I hope, and earnestly hope that we may come to a vote.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Tennessee, who has been engaged in this business of murdering the industries of the country for the last three months by this tariff bill, seems to have got into a very excited and nervous condition of mind. It seems that nobody can make a motion or argument without exciting his angry indignation and expostulation. He seems to be very much in the condition of Macbeth when he fancied he saw Banquo's ghost at the feast.

I suppose he sees the specter of some murdered New England industry which had been getting an honest living for its owner, and the guilt of his own action rests upon him. All I have to say to him is what Lady Macbeth said to the guests:

> Sit, worthy friends, my lord is often thus,
> And hath been from his youth; pray you, keep seated,
> The fit is momentary; upon a thought
> He will again be well. If much you note him,
> You shall offend him, and extend his passion.

[Laughter.]

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Massachusetts could forget, or omit to inflict upon the Senate, his classics he would render this country a more important service than he has ever rendered it in any other way. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEFFER. I desire to propose an amendment as a new section to be inserted immediately before section 82.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert before section 82 the following:

SEC. 81½. That section 3339 of the Revised Statutes and all sections amendatory thereof be amended so as to provide that the tax on beer, lager beer, ale, porter, and other similar fermented liquors shall be $1.50 per barrel, and the said section shall be and remain in force as part of this act, together with any and all laws and parts of laws made to carry into effect the provisions of this section,

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to say only at this time that this afternoon, when the Senate was not as full as it is now, most of the Senators being at lunch, I presume, I proposed an amendment similar to this, proposing a tax of $2 a barrel on beer. This amendment is for the imposition of a tax of $1.50. My only reason at that time for not asking a yea-and-nay vote upon the amendment was that so few Senators were present that I did not feel it was appropriate or courteous that I should call them away from their luncheon at that time.

With that statement of my reason for not asking a vote at that time, I wish to repeat summarily the argument I then made. No increased cost of collection will be entailed by this amendment. The machinery of the Revenue Bureau now is amply sufficient to collect all the revenues under existing laws, and this is merely an additional tax which can be collected without incurring any additional labor or expense of any kind.

Second. There will be no appreciable loss to the consumer by reason of adding 50 cents a barrel on beer. I am told that there are 31 gallons in a barrel of beer, making 124 quarts, which, allowing three glasses to the quart, would make nearly four hundred glasses. This would be a tariff so small that it would be an infinitesmal fraction of a cent upon a glass of beer.

Third. There will be an additional revenue amounting to at least $16,000,000 immediately the first year, something which we need; and if we have this $16,000,000 from beer and $50,000,000 from the income tax—although its friends estimate $30,000,000—we shall have enough to allow us to do away with all taxes upon sugar.

I ask for a yea-and-nay vote upon the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I only wish to say a word as to some of the arguments which have been made, and notably those of the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART].

There would be no difficulty, if our necessities required it, in dealing with brandies. We have always dealt with grape brandy in a separate provision of law. The law provided for a bonded period of three years for grape brandy before allowing any bonded period at all for distilled spirits, because grape brandy was supposed to be placed upon a different plane. Therefore I think as early as 1877 we made special provision for grape brandy, allowing a bonded period of three years. So grape brandy does not rest upon any provisions in this bill.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator will excuse me, it does to this extent. The grape brandy business is affected by the bonded extension. The benefit of the bonded extension accrues to grape brandy under this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. We should not deal with this question because locally the Senator from California makes a good case for grape brandy.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Iowa will excuse me, I trust, if I have made out a good case, it was not merely locally. I have heard about making out good cases locally, but I trust in this instance it will appeal to the Senator as a citizen of the United States, and not as a citizen of a State that can not legally use much liquor.

Mr. ALLISON. I have been unfortunate if I used language in any sense such as the Senator describes.

I believe grape brandy is manufactured chiefly in California, though it is also manufactured somewhat in New York. There is a special provision in our grape-brandy legislation authorizing an extension of the bonded period of three years. It will be necessary to amend that without dealing with this general question. That is what I endeavored to say, and I hope I have made myself understood on that question.

Mr. LINDSAY. I will ask the Senator if it is a question about dividing and conquering?

Mr. ALLISON. Not at all. The difficulty about this question is not a new one. As the Senator from Kentucky very well said, when we first imposed this tax upon grape brandy and other spirits, we required the tax to be paid at the distillery, and then we distributed other taxes in various ways. Afterwards we extended the bonded period one year for the withdrawal of those spirits. It turned out that in Kentucky and elsewhere they manufactured so much of what is known as Bourbon whisky, or distilled spirits peculiar to Kentucky distillers, that they came here and asked for an extension of the bonded period for their distilled spirits.

We went from one year to three years, and I remember very well the debate in this body and in the other upon that subject. We were laboring under a considerable depression at that time, and it was said to be impossible for those people who had manufactured distilled spirits to withdraw them from bond. We passed a joint resolution extending the period for two years as to distilled spirits then in bond, and we made a provision that any distiller who availed himself of that privilege should pay an annual tax of 5 per cent until the spirits were withdrawn. That provision stood, I think, until 1880, when a general bonded period of three years was provided for without any interest.

We can not disguise the fact that here are contesting manufacturers as to these different classes of distilled spirits. There are those who distill spirits by a continuous process, and who distill highwines. Those highwines are rectified, and in that way spirits for consumption are made.

Mr. LINDSAY. Very little of that is done now.

Mr. ALLISON. Very little, as the Senator from Kentucky says, is done now.

Then there are those who distill alcohol exclusively, and the alcohol distillers and distillers of high wines are compelled to pay the tax immediately upon distillation.

Mr. LINDSAY. Unless they sell.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator says "unless they sell." Their product is not improved by age, and therefore they sell at the first possible moment. So alcohol producers sell at the first moment.

There is another class of distillers who produce, by a different process, a certain class of distilled spirits which are used only as a beverage, or practically so, and for medicine, if you please. Those distilled spirits are said not to be matured for three or four years. Now, it is said they do not mature under eight years. The Senator from Missouri stated in debate today that they matured in five or six years.

That may be true, but we place in these provisions the same tax upon the distiller who is compelled to sell his product immediately—it may be alcohol or it may be high wines—and then we place the same tax upon the distiller who is allowed to hold his product for eight years, allowing him 9 gallons to the barrel of 40 gallons for leakage. Then, at the end of eight years, after his production or manufacture, after he has bought his material, whether it be corn or rye, and after he has gone through with the process of manufacture, he is allowed to put that material into a warehouse.

It is true he must build that warehouse, but he has a Government officer who takes care of it, who has to be there every hour of the day, and who is paid by the Government for these eight years—paid out of the Treasury. It is no great loss to the Kentucky distillers that they put their property in a bonded warehouse of the Government for the purpose of improving its condition, because the Government itself becomes the custodian of their property, and the Government pays for that custody. If the distilled spirits are burned within the eight years, no tax is paid, although the Government officer may have been there six years.

What I say and believe is, that this is an unjust distinction as against the people who pay taxes on alcohol immediately after they buy their corn or their rye and produce high wines, and send them on the market. Therefore it is that if this bonded period is to be extended for the benefit of one-third of the production of the United States to sell, and for that property which at the end of that period is improved each day and each year, so that at the end of the period it brings a high price, these people should pay a higher tax than is paid upon the other classes of distilled spirits.

That is my contention, and I do not think there is any answer to it. I have heard no answer to it. It is no answer to say, as the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] said a few moments ago, that he was in favor of the largest and most liberal conditions. If the bonded period is necessary, those who have the benefit of it and who have had the aid of the Government during all these years ought to be willing to pay an additional tax for the additional advantage which is thus given to their property.

That seems to me to be a fair statement of the case.

Mr. HARRIS rose.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator from Tennessee desire to make a motion?

Mr. HARRIS. I was going to ask the Senator if he offered an amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I am answered.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not offer an amendment. It would be useless for me to offer an amendment unless I had the sanction of some Senator on the other side.

Mr. HARRIS. I think it would be.

Mr. ALLISON. And the Senator from Tennessee, I am glad to know, concurs with me in the futility of my undertakings to perfect this bill. I do not know but that at some stage I may offer an amendment, if this bonded period, by a vote of the Senate, shall be finally extended to distilled spirits in bond.

Mr. HOAR. What is the pending question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to amend section 82.

Mr. HARRIS. Do I understand the pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Kansas on the table.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask unanimous consent that the vote may be taken on the amendment by yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRIS. If it can be taken without further debate, I am quite content.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that the amendment of the Senator from Kansas is an amendment to the bill and not to the committee amendment. The question will first be taken on the amendment proposed by the committee. The Chair will then recognize the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PEFFER. It is not an amendment to anything which appears in the bill; it is a new section, and should be placed immediately before section 82.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not offered, then, as an amendment to the pending amendment?

Mr. PEFFER. No, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question, then, will first be taken on the amendment proposed by the committee, after which the Chair will recognize the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Chair does not quite understand the proposition of the Senator from Kansas. He offers his amendment as a new section to come in ahead of the section offered by the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. And that is first in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; as an independent section.

Mr. HARRIS. That being so, it is first in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit the question. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, to lay on the table the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Tennessee has withdrawn that motion.

Mr. HARRIS. If we can have a vote without further debate I shall not insist on my motion. I did move to lay the amendment on the table, but I withdraw it if we can come to a vote.

Mr. FRYE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], and withhold my vote.

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON], who has been called away by reason of illness in his family. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS]. If he were here I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who is not in the Chamber. I take the liberty of transferring my pair with him to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JARVIS], and vote "nay."

Mr. DIXON. I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN], who is absent, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. FAULKNER. I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that as I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], we transfer our pairs, whereby the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] will be paired with the Senator from Ohio, and the Senator from Rhode Island and I can both vote.

Mr. DIXON. That is agreeable to me. I vote "yea."

Mr. FAULKNER. I vote "nay."

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. CAFFERY] is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER].

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Aldrich,	Dixon,	Hoar,	Perkins,
Allen,	Frye,	Kyle,	Pettigrew,
Allison,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Quay,
Chandler,	Hale,	Patton,	Squire,
Davis,	Higgins,	Peffer,	Teller.

NAYS—34.

Bate,	Faulkner,	Martin,	Stewart,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Mills,	Turpie,
Blanchard,	Gordon,	Mitchell, Oregon	Vest,
Brice,	Gray,	Morgan,	Vilas,
Camden,	Harris,	Murphy,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Hill,	Pasco,	Walsh,
Coke,	Irby,	Pugh,	White.
Cullom,	Jones, Ark.	Ransom,
Daniel,	Lindsay,	Roach,

NOT VOTING—31.

Berry,	George,	McLaurin,	Proctor,
Butler,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Caffery,	Hansbrough,	Manderson,	Shoup,
Call,	Hawley,	Mitchell, Wis.	Smith,
Cameron,	Hunton,	Morrill,	Washburn,
Carey,	Jarvis,	Palmer,	Wilson,
Dolph,	Jones, Nev.	Platt,	Wolcott.
Dubois,	Lodge,	Power,

So the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is upon the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. ALDRICH. In lines 5 and 6, section 82, page 211, I move to strike out the words "the first day of the second calendar month after."

The reason given by the committee for extending the time within which this provision is to take effect is that stamps could not be prepared.

My attention had not then been called to the fact that this provision is contained in this bill:

And until such stamps are prepared and furnished, the stamps now used to denote the payment of the internal-revenue tax on distilled spirits shall be affixed to all packages containing distilled spirits on which the tax imposed by this section is paid.

So that excuse is gone, and if there is no other reason, I presume the committee will agree to my amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 211, section 82, line 5, it is proposed to strike out "the first day of the second calendar month after;" so as to read:

SEC. 82. That on and after the passage of this act there shall be levied and collected on all distilled spirits in bond at that time, or that have been or that may be then or thereafter produced in the United States, on which the tax is not paid before that day, a tax of $1.10 on each proof gallon, or wine gallon when below proof.

Mr. VEST. Do I understand the Senator from Rhode Island to say that the same stamps can be used?

Mr. ALDRICH. The provision in the section itself in lines 19, 20, 21, and 22 says they shall be used.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEFFER. I move to amend the committee amendment on page 212, line 14, by striking out the word "eight," and inserting the word "three."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 212, section 82, line 14, it is proposed to strike out the word "eight," and insert "three;" so as to read:

Within three years from the date of the original entry for deposit in any distillery warehouse, or from the date of original gauge of fruit brandy deposited in special bonded warehouse, except in case of withdrawal therefrom without payment of tax as authorized by law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOAR. I move, after section 91, to amend the committee amendment by inserting what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that the section to which he refers has not yet been reached.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the committee amendment included all these sections. Is each section of the matter in italics treated as a separate amendment?

Mr. LINDSAY. Every one.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Section 82 is the amendment pending.

Mr. HOAR. It makes no difference. I want to move the amendment at the proper time and to make a few remarks of two or three minutes in regard to it. My remarks will consist chiefly of some statements made by citizens interested, which have been communicated to me. I therefore give notice of the amendment now, in order to have it printed. I should like also to have it read. It is very brief.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read.

The SECRETARY. After section 94, it is proposed to insert:

Any manufacturer finding it necessary to use alcohol in the arts, or in any medicinal or other like compound, may use the same under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; and on satisfying the collector of internal revenue for the district wherein he resides or carries on business, that he has complied with such regulations and has used such alcohol therein, and exhibiting and delivering up the stamps which show that the tax has been paid thereon, he shall be entitled to receive from the Treasurer of the United States a rebate or repayment of the taxes paid.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, there seems to have been a conflict of testimony presented to the committee as to whether there should be an extension of the bonded time upon whisky, and in the argument to-day there is a conflict of opinion; but after listening to the argument of my colleague from California I think the Senate will be satisfied that there can be no difference of opinion as to the advisability of extending the bonded period upon grape or fruit brandy.

I find that every State of the Union, with two exceptions, produces more or less fruit brandy. During the past year there were made 601,869 gallons of apple brandy, 57,589 gallons of peach brandy, and 1,699,000 gallons of grape brandy, making a total of 2,358,478 gallons of fruit brandy.

The German Government has purchased our brandy, giving it the preference to that of France, it being a purer article.

California is especially interested in the cultivation of the grape and the manufacture of grape brandy; and as there is a unanimity of expression on the floor of the Senate to-day that brandy improves by age and that the bonded period should be extended to at least eight years, I have deemed it my duty to my constituents in the State of California, which I have the honor in part to represent upon this floor, to ask a division of the question by amending various paragraphs. I ask that the amendment be read.

I shall not trespass longer upon the Senate; and as a test on this amendment my friend, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], can move to lay it on the table; which will give us an opportunity at least of giving an expression of our opinion as to whether we are willing to extend the bonded period upon fruit brandy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from California will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amend on page 212, line 13, by adding after the word "warehouse," "excepting special bonded warehouses for fruit brandy;" and in line 14 strike out the word "eight" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three;" and in line 15, after the word "or," insert "within eight years."

Also, on page 213, line 1, strike out the words "eight years" and insert in lieu thereof "the periods named in section 82 of this act, respectively;" on line 22, strike out the words "eight years" and insert in lieu thereof "the bonding period named in section 82 of this act."

Also, on page 214, section 84, line 15, strike out the words "distilled spirits," and insert in lieu thereof "grape spirits or fruit brandy;" on line 16, strike out the words "distillery warehouse;" also strike out all of line 17, and in line 18 strike out the words "provisions of this act."

Also, on page 215, in line 6 and 7, strike out the words "distillery warehouse or other bonded warehouse," and insert in lieu thereof "special bonded warehouse."

Page 214, in line 19 and 20, strike out the words "as to fruit brandy or original entry as to all other spirits."

Page 219, line 2, strike out the word "eight" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question will first be taken upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from California to section 82; the other sections to which the amendment applies not yet having been reached.

Mr. HARRIS. Would it be in order, Mr. President, to move to lay the amendments on the table en masse?

Mr. PERKINS. I will state that I only ask for a viva voce vote.

Mr. HARRIS. I will state that I am ready to give the Senator a vote upon it in either form.

Mr. FAULKNER. Let the question be taken on all the Senator's amendments at one time, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Tennessee moves to lay the amendment on the table?

Mr. HARRIS. If we can come to a vote upon the amendments I am ready to vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendments proposed by the Senator from California.

The amendments were rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the committee to insert as a new section section 82.

Mr. ALLISON. I move an amendment to come in after line 15 on page 211.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 82, on page 211, after the word "excluded," at the end of line 15, it is proposed to insert:

And provided further, That on distilled spirits remaining in bond after four years of the bonded period hereinafter provided for an additional tax of 5 cents per gallon per annum shall be assessed and paid, and at the rate of 5 cents per gallon for each fractional part of a year.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the amendment will be accepted by the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. POWER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JARVIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN], who is absent, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PLATT. At the suggestion of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], which will permit the Senator from West Virginia and me to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FAULKNER. I vote "nay."

Mr. POWER. I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Aldrich,	Gallinger,	Hoar,	Platt,
Allison,	Hale,	McMillan,	Power,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Patton,	Quay,
Davis,	Higgins,	Perkins,	Squire,

Faulkner,	Mills,	Stewart,

NOT VOTING—33.

Berry,	Dolph,	McLaurin,	Shoup,
Brice,	Dubois,	McPherson,	Smith,
Butler,	George,	Manderson,	Teller,
Caffery,	Gorman,	Martin,	Washburn,
Call,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Wis.	Wilson,
Cameron,	Hunton,	Morrill,	Wolcott.
Carey,	Jarvis,	Palmer,
Chandler,	Jones, Nev.	Proctor,
Dixon,	Lodge,	Sherman,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORDON. I wish to announce that for the remainder of to-day's session the pair existing between the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOR-

MAN] will be resumed, and my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] will be resumed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee, inserting section 82.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 83. That warehousing bonds and transportation and warehousing bonds, conditioned for the payment of the taxes on all distilled spirits entered for deposit into distillery or special bonded warehouses on and after the date named in the last preceding section, shall be given by the distiller of said spirits as required by existing laws, conditioned, however, for payment of taxes at the rate imposed by this act and before removal from warehouse and within eight years, as to fruit brandy from the date of the original gauge, and as to all other spirits from the date of the original entry for deposit, and all warehousing bonds or transportation and warehousing bonds conditioned for the payment of the taxes on distilled spirits entered for deposit into distillery or special bonded warehouses prior to that date shall continue in full force and effect for the time named in said bonds, except where new or additional bonds are required under existing law.

Whenever the tax is paid on or after the aforesaid date, pursuant to the provisions of the warehousing or transportation and warehousing bonds aforesaid, there shall be added to the 90 cents per taxable gallon an additional tax sufficient to make the tax paid on said spirits equal to that imposed by this act. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue may require the distillers of the spirits to give bonds for the additional tax, and before the expiration of the original bonds shall prescribe rules and regulations for reentry for deposit and for new bonds as provided for spirits originally entered for deposit under this act, and conditioned for payment of tax at the rate imposed by this act and before removal of the spirits from warehouse, and within eight years; as to fruit brandy, from the date of the original gauge, and as to all other spirits, from the date of original entry for deposit. If the distiller of the spirits fails or refuses to give the bond for additional tax, or to reënter and rebond the spirits, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may proceed to collect the tax as now provided by law for failure or refusal to give warehousing bonds on original entry into distillery warehouse or special-bonded warehouse, and the provisions of section 4 of the act of May 28, 1880 (21 Statutes, 145), so far as applicable, are hereby extended to bonds given under the provisions of this section: Provided, That the distiller may, at his option and under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, execute an annual bond for the spirits so deposited in lieu of the bonds herein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 84. That the distiller of any distilled spirits deposited in any distillery warehouse, or special-bonded warehouse, or in any general-bonded warehouse established under the provisions of this act may, prior to the expiration of four years from the date of original gauge as to fruit brandy, or original entry as to all other spirits, file with the collector a notice giving a description of the packages containing the spirits, and request a regauge of the same; and thereupon the collector shall direct a gauger to regauge the spirits, and to mark upon each such package the number of gauge or wine gallons and proof gallons therein contained.

If upon such regauging it shall appear that there has been a loss of distilled spirits from any cask or package, without the fault or negligence of the distiller thereof, taxes shall be collected only on the quantity of distilled spirits contained in such cask or package at the time of the withdrawal thereof from the distillery warehouse or other bonded warehouse; Provided, however, That the allowance which shall be made for such loss of spirits as aforesaid shall not exceed 1 proof gallon for two months or part thereof; 1½ gallons for three and four months; 2 gallons for five and six months; 2½ gallons for seven and eight months; 3 gallons for nine and ten months; 3½ gallons for eleven and twelve months; 4 gallons for thirteen, fourteen, and fifteen months; 4½ gallons for sixteen, seventeen, and eighteen months; 5 gallons for nineteen, twenty, and twenty-one months; 5½ gallons for twenty-two, twenty-three, and twenty-four months; 6 gallons for twenty-five, twenty-six, and twenty-seven months; 6½ gallons for twenty-eight, twenty-nine, and thirty months; 7 gallons for thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three months; 7½ gallons for thirty-four, thirty-five, and thirty-six months; 8 gallons for thirty-seven, thirty-eight, thirty-nine, and forty months; 8½ gallons for forty-one, forty-two, forty-three, and forty-four months; 9 gallons for forty-five, forty-six, forty-seven, and forty-eight months; and no further allowance shall be made: And provided further, That in case such spirits shall remain in warehouse after the same have been regauged, the packages containing the spirits shall, at the time of withdrawal from warehouse and at such other times as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may direct, be again regauged or inspected; and if found to contain a larger quantity than shown by the first regauge, the tax shall be collected and paid on the quantity contained in each such package as shown by the original gauge: And provided further, That taxes shall be collected on the quantity contained in each cask or package as shown by the original gauge, where the distiller does not request a regauge before the expiration of four years from the date of original entry or gauge: Provided, also, That the foregoing allowance of loss shall apply only to casks or packages of a capacity of 40 or more wine gallons, and that the allowance for loss on casks or packages of less capacity than 40 gallons shall not exceed one-half the amount allowed on said 40-gallon cask or package; but no allowance shall be made on casks or packages of less capacity than 20 gallons: And provided further, That the proof of such distilled spirits shall not in any case be computed at the time of withdrawal at less than 100 per cent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 85. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be, and is hereby, authorized, in his discretion and upon the execution of such bond as he may prescribe, to establish one or more warehouses, not exceeding ten in number in any one collection district, to be known and designated as general bonded warehouses, and to be used exclusively for the storage of spirits distilled from materials other than fruit, each of which warehouses shall be in the charge of a storekeeper or storekeeper and gauger to be appointed, assigned, transferred, and paid in the same manner as such officers for distillery warehouses are now appointed, assigned, transferred, and paid. Every such warehouse shall be under the control of the collector of internal revenue of the district in which such warehouse is located, and shall be in the joint custody of the storekeeper and proprietor thereof, and kept securely locked, and shall at no time be unlocked or opened or remain open except in the presence of such storekeeper or other person who may be designated to act for him, as provided in the case of distillery warehouses; and such warehouses shall be under such further regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 86. That any distilled spirits made from materials other than fruit, and lawfully deposited in a distillery warehouse, may, upon application of the distiller thereof, be removed from such distillery warehouse to any general bonded warehouse established under the provisions of the preceding section; and the removal of said spirits to said general bonded warehouse shall be under such regulations, and after making such entries and executing and filing with the collector of the district in which the spirits were manufactured, such bonds and bills of lading, and the giving of such other additional security, as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 87. That all spirits intended for deposit in a general bonded warehouse, before being removed from the distillery warehouse, shall have affixed to each package an engraved stamp indicative of such intention, to be provided and furnished to the several collectors as in the case of other stamps, and to be charged to them and accounted for in the same manner.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 88. That any spirits removed in bond as aforesaid may, upon its arrival at a general bonded warehouse, be deposited therein upon making such entries, filing such bonds and other securities, and under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. It shall be one of the conditions of the warehousing bond covering such spirits that the principal named in said bond shall pay the tax on the spirits as specified in the entry or cause the same to be paid within eight years from the date of the original entry of the same into the distillery warehouse, and before withdrawal, except as hereinafter provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 89. That any spirits may be withdrawn once and no more from one general bonded warehouse for transportation to another general bonded warehouse, and when intended to be so withdrawn, shall have affixed thereto another general bonded warehouse stamp indicative of such intention; and the withdrawal of such spirits, and their transfer to and entry into such general bonded warehouse shall be under such regulations and upon the filing of such notices, entries, bonds, and bills of lading as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may, from time to time, prescribe; and the bonds covering spirits in general bonded warehouses shall be given by distillers of the spirits, and shall be renewed at such times as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may, by regulations, require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 90. That the provisions of existing law in regard to the withdrawal of distilled spirits from warehouses upon payment of tax, or for exportation or for transfer to a manufacturing warehouse, and as to the gauging, marking, branding, and stamping of the spirits upon such withdrawals, and in regard to withdrawals for the use of the United States or scientific institutions or colleges of learning, including the provisions for allowance for loss by accidental fire or other unavoidable accident, are hereby extended and made applicable to spirits deposited in general bonded warehouses under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 91. Whenever distilling shall have been suspended at any distillery for a period or periods aggregating six months during any calendar year, and the quantity of spirits remaining in the distillery warehouse does not exceed 5,000 proof gallons, or whenever, in the opinion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, any distillery warehouse or general bonded warehouse is unsafe or unfit for use, or the merchandise therein is liable to loss or great wastage, he may in either such case discontinue such warehouse and require the merchandise therein to be transferred to such other warehouse as he may designate, and within such time as he may prescribe; and all the provisions of section 3272 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to transfers of spirits from warehouses, including those imposing penalties, are hereby made applicable to transfers to or from general bonded warehouses established under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 92. The tax upon any distilled spirits removed from a distillery warehouse for deposit in a general bonded warehouse, and in respect of which any requirement of this act is not complied with, shall, at any time when knowledge of such fact is obtained by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, be assessed by him upon the distiller of the same, and returned to the collector, who shall immediately demand payment of such tax, and upon the neglect of payment by the distiller shall proceed to collect the same by distraint. But this provision shall not exclude any other remedy or proceeding provided by law to enforce the payment of the tax. If it shall appear at any time that there has been a loss of distilled spirits from any cask or package deposited in a general bonded warehouse or special bonded warehouse, other than the loss provided for in section 3221 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which, in the opinion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, is excessive, he may instruct the collector of the district in which the loss has occurred to require the withdrawal from warehouse of such cask or package of distilled spirits and to collect the tax accrued upon the original quantity of distilled spirits entered into the warehouse in such cask or package, less only the allowance for loss provided by law. If the said tax is not paid on demand the collector shall report the amount due, as shown by the original gauge, upon his next monthly list, and it shall be assessed and collected as other taxes are assessed and collected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as a new section, the following:

SEC. 93. That in case any distilled spirits removed from a distillery warehouse for deposit in a general bonded warehouse shall fail to be deposited in such general bonded warehouse within ten days after such removal, or within the time specified in any bond given on such removal, or if any distilled spirits deposited in any general bonded warehouse shall be taken therefrom, for export or otherwise, without full compliance with the provisions of this act, and with the requirements of any regulations made thereunder, and with the terms of any bond given on such removal, or if any distilled spirits which have been deposited in a general bonded warehouse shall be found elsewhere, not having been removed therefrom according to law, any person who shall be guilty of such failure, or any person who shall in any manner violate any provision of the next preceding eleven sections of this act, shall be subject, on conviction to a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $5,000 and to imprisonment for not less than three months nor more than three years for every such failure or violation; and the spirits as to which such failure or violation, or unlawful removal shall take place shall be forfeited to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as a new section, the following:

SEC. 94. That all assessments made under the provisions of section 3309 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and acts amendatory thereof, shall be at the rate of tax imposed by this act on each proof gallon.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] gave notice of an amendment which he intended to propose to section 94, and thinking, I suppose, that it would not come up before to-morrow he has gone from the Chamber. I ask that that section may be passed over.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It was understood that the Senator from Massachusetts should offer the amendment and make his remarks to-morrow morning.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to the penalty clause, beginning in line 11 of section 93:

Any person who shall in any manner violate any provision of the next preceding eleven sections of this act, shall be subject, on conviction, to a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, and to imprisonment for not less than three months nor more than three years for every such failure or violation.

Apparently in case of an offense, however slight, there must be both fine and imprisonment. I suppose the Senator does not mean that both fine and imprisonment shall be imposed for a violation of the act.

I do not ask the Senator to amend the clause now, but I call his attention to it, because it is very rare in a general provision of this sort covering any violation of an act that such violation shall be punished necessarily by both fine and imprisonment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am entirely willing to strike out the word "and," in line 14, and insert the word "or."

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator may desire to change the section otherwise, instead of providing for both fine and imprisonment. I suggest to the Senator that he prepare an amendment before to-morrow.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let the word "and" in line 14 be stricken out and the word "or" inserted, so as to make the punishment fine or imprisonment. Let that be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 95. That no distiller who has given the required bond and who sells only distilled spirits of his own production at the place of manufacture, or at the place of storage in bond, in the original packages to which the tax-paid stamps are affixed, shall be required to pay the special tax of a wholesome liquor dealer on account of such sales.

Mr. VEST. In line 3, on page 223, I move to strike out the word "wholesome;" which is a misprint, and insert the word "wholesale."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment will be agreed to in the absence of objection.

Mr. VEST. Now, I move to amend the amendment by adding to the section what appears in small type, beginning after the word "sales," in line 4, on page 223.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 95, on page 223, after the word "sales," at the end of line 4, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That he shall be required to keep the book prescribed by section 3318 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or so much as shall show the date when he sent out any spirits, the serial numbers of the packages containing same, the kind and quality of the spirits in wine gallons and taxable gallons, the serial numbers of the stamps on the packages, and the name and residence of the person to whom sent; and the provisions of section 5 of an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to internal revenue," approved March 5, 1879, as to transcripts, shall apply to such books. Any failure, by reason of refusal or willful neglect, to furnish the transcript by him shall subject the spirits owned or distilled by him to forfeiture.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to this section. It seems to contemplate that a distiller may remove liquor for sale from his own warehouse without the payment of a wholesale dealer's tax. My recollection of the present law is that such a thing can not be done now except in full packages, and the warehouse can only be opened, as the Senator will remember, by the joint action of the storekeeper and the distiller.

If the Senator has taken care by the use of suitable language to prevent the danger that might be involved in making the distillery warehouse practically a wholesale liquor house for dealing day by day in liquors, I do not know that I shall object; but it seems to me that it is rather a dangerous provision to allow a bonded warehouse to be opened every day when a person may desire a single package, or a half package, etc., to be sent out. If the Senator thinks there is no danger about the provision, I shall not interpose.

Mr. VEST. I only know that this amendment was prepared by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who sent it to the committee with the request that we should insert it in the bill. I suppose the provisions of existing law will apply, and that the amendment does not change it. I am not expert enough in the details of this excise law to say how it will operate, but I confess frankly that I took the opinion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue without much question in regard to it. It was prepared by the Commissioner and the committee have made no addition to it.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. It can be looked into in conference.

Mr. VEST. We shall look into it.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I make no objection, though I think the provision appears rather dangerous on its face.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to add, as a new section, the following:

SEC. 96. That storekeepers, and storekeepers and gaugers, when transferred from one distillery to another, either in the same district or in different districts, shall receive compensation not exceeding $4 per day during the time necessarily occupied in traveling from one distillery to the other, together with actual and necessary traveling expenses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 97. That the officer holding the combined office of storekeeper and gauger, under the provisions of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved August 15, 1876 (19 Statutes, page 152), may be assigned by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to perform the separate duties of a storekeeper at any distillery, or at any general or special bonded warehouse, or to perform any of the duties of a gauger under the internal-revenue laws. And the said officer, before entering upon the discharge of such separate duties, shall give a bond to be approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the faithful discharge of his duties in such form and for such amount as the Commissioner may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 98. That internal-revenue gaugers may be assigned to duty at distilleries, rectifying houses, or wherever gauging is required to be done, and transferred from one place of duty to another, by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in like manner as storekeepers and storekeepers and gaugers are now assigned and transferred.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 99. That section 3320 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended, be further amended by striking out all after said number and substituting the following:

"Whenever any cask or package, containing 5 wine gallons or more, is filled for shipment, sale, or delivery on the premises of any rectifier who has paid the special tax required by law, it shall be inspected and gauged by a United States gauger, whose duty it shall be to mark and brand the same and place thereon an engraved stamp, which shall state the date when affixed and the number of proof gallons, and shall be in such form as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That when such cask or package is filled on the premises of a rectifier rectifying less than 500 barrels a year, counting 40 gallons of proof spirits to the barrel, it may be gauged, marked, branded, and stamped by a United States gauger, or it may be gauged, marked, branded, and stamped by the rectifier, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulations prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 100. That whenever any person intending to commence or to continue the business of a distiller shall execute a bond under the provisions of section 3280 of the Revised Statutes of United States, and file the same with the collector of internal revenue for the district in which he proposes to distill, the collector may refuse to approve said bond if the person offering the same shall have been previously convicted, in a court of competent jurisdiction, of any fraudulent noncompliance with any of the provisions of law relating to the duties and business of distillers, or if the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall have compromised such an offense with the person upon the payment of penalties or otherwise, and, in case of such refusal, the person so proposing to distill may appeal to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, whose decision in the matter shall be final.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer at this point an amendment of which I heretofore gave notice, and which I send to the Secretary's desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The amendment proposed by Mr. ALLISON is to amend by adding as a new section on page 226 the following:

SEC. 100½. That section 18 of "An act to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes," approved February 8, 1875, as amended by section 4 of "An act to amend the laws relating to internal revenue," approved March 1, 1879, be further amended by striking out of the first line of said amended section, as printed in volume 20, United States Statutes at Large, the word "twenty-five," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty;" and by striking out of the fifth and sixth lines of said amended section, as printed as aforesaid, the words "one hundred," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "two hundred."

Mr. ALLISON. The object of this amendment is to avoid a double tax and to so distribute the tax as to save producers of alcohol for use in the arts from certain provisions which seem to be imposed upon them by the additional tax of 20 cents a gallon imposed by the House and Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. (Putting the question.) The noes seem to have it. The noes have it, and the amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for a division.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator asks for a division to show the want of a quorum. We shall show it more clearly by the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think a call of the roll will show the want of a quorum. I disagree with the Senator from Tennessee. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will withdraw his call for a division.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall not ask for the yeas and nays unless the Senator from New Hampshire insists upon a division.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Are the yeas and nays demanded?

Mr. HARRIS. Is a division demanded?

Mr. CHANDLER. I withdraw the call for a division, with the kind permission of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The demand being withdrawn the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is not agreed to. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 101. That section 43 of the act approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," be amended so as to read as follows:

"That the wine spirits mentioned in section 42 of this act is the product resulting from the distillation of fermented grape juice and shall be held to include the product commonly known as grape brandy; and the pure sweet wine which may be fortified free of tax, as provided in said section, is fermented grape juice only, and shall contain no other substance of any kind whatever introduced before, at the time of, or after fermentation, and such sweet wine shall contain not less than 4 per cent of saccharine matter, which saccharine strength may be determined by testing with Billings saccharometer or must scale, such sweet wine, after the evaporation of the spirit contained therein, and restoring the sample tested to original volume by addition of water: Provided, That the addition of pure boiled or condensed grape must, or pure crystallized cane or beet sugar to the pure grape juice aforesaid, or the fermented product of such grape juice prior to the fortification provided for by this act for the sole purpose of perfecting sweet wines according to commercial standard, shall not be excluded by the definition of pure, sweet wine aforesaid: Provided further, That the cane or beet sugar so used shall not be in excess of 10 per cent of the weight of wines to be fortified under this act."

Mr. VEST. On page 226, in section 101, line 20, I move to strike out "Billings" and insert "Balling's."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri whether this section meets the approval of the Treasury Department?

Mr. VEST. It does. It was prepared by the Treasury Department.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out section 102 in the following words:

That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

And to insert:

SEC. 102. Every person whose business it is to manufacture tobacco or snuff for himself, or who employs others to manufacture tobacco or snuff, whether such manufacture be by cutting, pressing, grinding, crushing, or rubbing of any raw or leaf tobacco, or otherwise preparing raw or leaf tobacco, or manufactured or partially manufactured tobacco or snuff, or the putting up for use or consumption of scraps, waste, clippings, stems, or deposits of tobacco resulting from any process of handling tobacco, or by the working or preparation of leaf tobacco, tobacco stems, scraps, clippings, or waste, by sifting, twisting, screening, or any other process, shall be regarded as a manufacturer of tobacco.

Every person shall also be regarded as a manufacturer of tobacco whose business it is to sell leaf tobacco in quantities less than the original hogshead, case, or bale; or who sells directly to consumers, or to persons other than duly registered dealers in leaf tobacco, or to duly registered dealers in manufactured tobacco, snuff, or cigars, or to persons who purchase in original packages for export; and all tobacco so sold by such persons shall be regarded as manufactured tobacco, and such manufactured tobacco shall be put up and prepared by such manufacturer in such packages only as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That farmers and growers of tobacco who sell leaf tobacco of their own growth and raising shall not be regarded as manufacturers of tobacco; and so much of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and acts amendatory thereof, as are in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. VEST. On page 228, line 2, after the word "registered" I move to strike out "dealers in manufactured" and insert "manufacturers of."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. I offer an amendment to the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 102, page 228, line 13, after the word "tobacco," insert:

Nor shall merchants who buy tobacco in the leaf, or in ordinary manufactured twist form, directly from the grower and sell the same in ordinary unmanufactured twist-form directly to consumers, be regarded as manufacturers of tobacco within the provisions of this act.

Mr. KYLE. This amendment enables the grower of tobacco to sell the ordinary twist, unmanufactured tobacco directly to the consumer, or to the retail merchant who will retail it to the consumer, and the dealer shall be considered as a manufacturer of tobacco. It enables the poor people of the country who use this kind of tobacco to get it cheap, and therefore it is nothing more than just. It gives a market also for this kind of tobacco.

I have here a number of statistics, which I will insert in the RECORD, showing what the saving will be to the consumer in various States by the adoption of this amendment:

Amount of leaf tobacco used by several States during the year 1893.

South Dakota used 500,000 pounds; cost consumer, at 15 cents	$75,000
Same amount manufactured would cost, at 50 cents	250,000
Saved on amount used	175,000
North Dakota used 350,000 pounds; cost consumer, at 15 cents	52,500
Same amount manufactured would cost, at 50 cents	175,000
Saved on amount used	122,500
Minnesota used 550,000 pounds; cost consumer, at 15 cents	82,500
Same amount manufactured would cost, at 50 cents	275,000
Saved on amount used	172,500
Arkansas used 450,000 pounds; cost consumer, at 15 cents	67,500
Same amount manufactured would cost, at 50 cents	225,000
Amount saved on what was used	157,500
Texas used 600,000 pounds; cost consumer, at 15 cents	90,000
Same amount manufactured cost, at 50 cents	300,000
Saved on amount used	210,000
Total saved in five States mentioned	837,500
Government lost in revenue only	147,000

The reason for the amendment is that it makes the provision just what it was as the bill came to us from the other House. I hope there will be no objection to my amendment.

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the amendment to the amendment be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment to the amendment

Mr. DANIEL. As I understand, the farmer has a right now to sell his tobacco to anyone, and this does not take it away.

Mr. VEST. At the place of production.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DANIEL. I desire to offer an amendment. I move to insert after line 16, page 228, section 102, of the bill, as it now stands, the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That section 27, chapter 1244, volume 1, of Supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States, be amended by striking out all after the word "repeal," in line 5 of said section, as follows: "Provided, however, That it shall be the duty of every farmer or planter producing and selling leaf tobacco, on demand of any internal revenue officer or other authorized agent of the Treasury Department, to furnish said officer or agent a true and complete statement, verified by oath, of all of his sales of leaf tobacco, the number of hogsheads, cases, or pounds, with the name and residence, in each instance, of the person to whom sold and the place to which it is shipped; and every farmer or planter who willfully refuses to furnish such information, or who knowingly makes false statements as to any of the facts aforesaid, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding $500." That section 3361 of the Revised Statutes and all laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. VEST. There is no objection to that amendment.

Mr. DANIEL. It simply strikes out those provisions of law on the same subject.

I have a letter here, which I deem it necessary to read, from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue recommending the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Unless the letter is a long one I hope it will be read.

Mr. DANIEL. It is not long.

Several SENATORS. Let it be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well: let it be put in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, D. C., May 16, 1894.

SIR: With reference to bill H. R. 6993, to repeal that provision of section 27, chapter 1244, volume 1 of Supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States, which requires that every farmer or planter producing and selling leaf tobacco shall, on demand of any internal-revenue officer or authorized agent, "furnish said officer or agent a true and complete statement, verified by oath, of all of his sales of leaf tobacco, the number of hogsheads, cases, or pounds, with the name and residence in each instance of the person to whom sold, and the place to which it is shipped," etc., which bill you referred to me on the 12th instant for "an opinion on the necessity of its enactment into a law," I would say that while no necessity therefor exists, so far as the interests of the revenue are concerned, yet as the provision which it is intended to repeal has not thus far been found materially useful in the execution of the internal-revenue laws, I find no special objection to interpose against the passage of this bill.

Respectfully, yours,

JOS. S. MILLER, Commissioner.

Mr. PLATT. I observe in the amendment one mistake in spelling. It says "after the word 'repeal.'" There is no such word in the section of the Revised Statutes which it proposes to amend. It should be "repealed." It is a mere mistake in the print.

Mr. VEST. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That correction will be made.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to know in what section of the Revised Statutes it is to which the amendment of the Senator from Virginia applies.

The SECRETARY:

That section 27, chapter 1244, page 863, volume 1, of Supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States——

Mr. ALLISON. Do the repealing words follow?

Mr. VEST. It repeats the words:

be amended by striking out all after the word "repealed," in line 5 of said section, as follows:

Then follows the language of the section that is to be repealed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to have the Senator from Virginia explain the object of his amendment. As I understand, the closing proviso on page 228, "farmers and growers of tobacco who sell leaf tobacco of their own growth and raising shall not be regarded as manufacturers of tobacco." They are to be relieved from paying any manufacturers' tax. Is the section which the Senator proposes to repeal merely the carrying out of the necessary result of the exemption which is contained in the bill, or does it go further?

Mr. DANIEL. I do not know that you can say it carries out the necessary result, but the law as it now stands seems to impose a very unnecessary burden upon the farmer, that of keeping books. As he is relieved of the tax and there is no duty or obligation with reference to the Government, there is no reason why he should keep books of his purely private transactions.

Mr. CHANDLER. Evidently if the farmer is to pay no tax he should not be required to make a return verified by oath of all his savings, and he ought not to be put under a penalty for not doing so.

Mr. DANIEL. The object of the amendment is to relieve the farmer of the burden of having to keep and submit to the Government a statement of his own private business. It repeals the provision that makes him do it.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the repeal of this section of the Revised Statutes, which was carried into the supplemental volume, but I think the last portion of the provision should be stricken out. I ask the Secretary to read what occurs after the words repealing section 3361 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia that he amend his amendment, the latter part of which now reads:

That section 3361 of the Revised Statutes and all laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Let him strike out "and all laws in conflict with this act are" and insert "is."

Mr. ALLISON. That is the suggestion I was about to make.

Mr. DANIEL. Very well; I accept the suggestion, and will so modify my amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia as modified proposed to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LINDSAY. I desire to offer an amendment to section 102. I move to strike out in line 25, page 227, before the word "hogshead," the words, "the original" and insert "a;" so as to read, "less than a hogshead, case, or bale."

Mr. ALLISON. That is all right.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LINDSAY. I move to strike out in line 2, page 228, the word "to." It reads now, or "to duly registered manufacturers of." It should read, "or duly registered manufacturers of."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LINDSAY. I move to strike out in line 5, page 228, the word "original" before "packages;" so as to read, "or to persons who purchase in packages for export."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 228, beginning in line 17, to strike out section 87, in the following words:

SEC. 87. That section 2984 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read, as follows:

"SEC. 2984. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, except as otherwise specially provided in this act, upon production of satisfactory proof to him of the actual injury or destruction, in whole or in part, of any merchandise from any cause whatsoever, while the same remained in the custody of the officers of the customs in any public or private warehouse under bond, or in the appraisers' stores undergoing appraisal, in pursuance of law or regulations of the Treasury Department, or while in transportation under bond from the port of entry to any other port in the United States, or while in the custody of officers of the customs and not in bond, or while within the limits of any port of entry, and before the same have been landed under the supervision of the officers of the customs, to abate or refund, as the case may be, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount of import duties paid or accruing thereupon, and likewise to cancel any warehouse bond or bonds, or enter satisfaction thereon, in whole or in part, as the case may be."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. (88) 103. That the act of June 20, 1876 (Nineteenth United States Statutes, page 60), be amended by insertion after the words "imported into the United States by such firm or partnership" the following: "Or for any other purpose connected with the general transaction of business at any custom-house."

Mr. VEST. In line 3, of section 103, I move to strike out "insertion" and insert "inserting."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That correction will be made. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

Mr. HALE. As we have now reached section 104, where I have an amendment to offer which will give rise to some debate, though I think not extended, as it is very late, nearly 7 o'clock, I ask the Senator from Tennessee if he is not willing to move an adjournment. We can not finish section 104 to-night.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire——

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to move a formal amendment? I think it will lead to no debate.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. VEST. In section 83, on page 212, line 22, I move to strike out all after the word "the" down to the word "shall," in line 23, and insert "passage of this act." This is made necessary by the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island and adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 212, section 83, line 22, after the word "the," strike out the words "date named in the last preceding section" and insert "passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. In the same section, on page 213, I move to strike out, beginning with line 10, the following words:

Whenever the tax is paid on or after the aforesaid date, pursuant to the provisions of the warehousing or transportation and warehousing bonds aforesaid, there shall be added to the 90 cents per taxable gallon an additional tax sufficient to make the tax paid on said spirits equal to that imposed by this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. If section 104 has been reached, I move to strike it out.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Maine has asked that section 104 may go over until to-morrow. I regret that I can not help the necessity of consenting to his request. I therefore move that the Senate adjourn

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 29, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 28, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of the disbursements for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, made in the States and Territories under the act applying a portion of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands to the support of colleges for the encouragement of agricultural and mechanical arts; which was referred to the Committee on Education.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were severally laid before the House and referred as indicated, namely:

A bill (S. 1438) for the relief of Lewis A. Yorke—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 1252) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the times and places to hold terms of the United States courts in the State of Washington"—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. SAYERS, on account of sickness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS IN THE RECORD.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER], as published in the RECORD of this morning, beginning on page 6911 and extending through pages 6912, 6913, and 6914. These remarks were made in the space of five minutes, and occupy two pages of the RECORD.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman from Alabama is not in his seat at this time.

Mr. REED. I only wished to call attention to the matter.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I ask the gentleman from Maine to withhold his criticism for the present, as I have sent for my colleague.

Mr. REED. It is all right. I expect another extension will follow. I simply wished to call the attention of the House to it. I think, when the country understands that remarks are made in this fashion, that we on this side ought not to be held responsible for any failure to respond to statements which may be so inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Maine restate the ground of his complaint? I did not understand it.

Mr. REED. I do not think I could. I simply call attention to the fact that the gentleman from Alabama, in a five-minute speech, has succeeded in filling about two pages of the RECORD.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If I understand, from the remarks of gentlemen near me, general leave was given to print remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is now in his seat.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman if general leave was not given to print on this bill?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Certainly it was. These gentlemen are always wrong when they make such charges against us. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. I think that is a sufficient answer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have the record examined to see if there was leave to print on the bill.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, BETHEL SPRINGS.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill (H. R. 725) for the relief of the trustees of the Presbyterian Church of Bethel Springs, Tenn.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the trustees of the Presbyterian Church in Bethel Springs, Tenn., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400, being for the use, occupation, and damage to said church by the Army of the United States during the late war.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let the report in that case be read.

The report (by Mr. ENLOE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 725) for the relief of the trustees of the Presbyterian Church of Bethel Springs, Tenn., submit the following report:

The evidence filed in support of this claim shows that the church building was taken possession of and used and occupied by various commands of the United States troops during the years 1862 and 1863. In accordance with precedent, it seems to be the policy of Congress to pay rent for the use and occupation of institutions of this character. Claim stated at $400. The use and occupation are proved to be $400 by the affidavits of parties who were present at the time, and estimate it from personal knowledge and experience.

Your committee therefore report back the bill and recommend its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. ENLOE. There are some amendments to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments recommended to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend in line 7 by striking out the words "and damage to" and insert the word "and" between "use" and "occupation;" and before the word "said," in the eighth line, insert "of;" so as to read, "being for the use and occupation of said church, etc."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ENLOE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WILLIAM D. MACK.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution for the relief of W. D. Mack, a clerk in the Record and Pension Division of the War Department.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The resolution was read at length.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have some explanation of this matter.

Mr. BURROWS. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that this joint resolution has not been considered by any committee of this House, nor has it been acted upon by any. It has, however, been considered by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, and reported by Senator MANDERSON favorably; and I have submitted it to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House from Ohio, and am able to state that it meets his approval.

The facts are that this man enlisted in 1861 for three years, or during the war. He was detailed for service in the Adjutant-General's Office, and has been in the employment of the Government for some twenty years.

Last year on the Fourth of July he attended a celebration at Gettysburg, and met with an accident while getting onto the cars, by which both feet were injured, and he was taken to the hospital and both feet were amputated. The leave of absence granted by law did not cover the period during which he was confined in the hospital, and this is simply to allow the Department to pay him his salary for thirty-four days while he was thus confined as the result of the accident.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the amount involved?

Mr. BURROWS. Oh, it is a little over $100—about $110, I believe.

Mr. DOCKERY. My impression was that under the law the Secretary of War had the right to grant additional leave in such cases.

Mr. BURROWS. It is not so held, I believe. I ask the Clerk to read the Senate report, made by Senator MANDERSON.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the report will be read.

The Senate report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 68) entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of W. D. Mack, a clerk in the Record and Pension Office of the War Department," having had the same under consideration, report it back favorably and recommend its passage.

The following statement of the acting chief of the Record and Pension Office of the War Department gives fully the circumstances attending the accident to Mr. Mack, and sets forth the reasons for the relief desired, and the recommendation of the Department:

"Case of William D. Mack, clerk, Record and Pension Office, War Department.

"RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE,
"War Department, March 12, 1894

"As shown by the records, William D. Mack entered the service as a volunteer soldier in May, 1861, to serve three years, and, after serving with his command (the Second Michigan Infantry) for more than two years in the field, was detailed for clerical duty in the office of the Adjutant-General of the Army. He has a record of more than twenty years' service to the Government, the last fourteen of which have been continuous. He is now rendering acceptable service as a clerk of class 2 in this office.

"On the 4th of July last, while returning from a soldiers' reunion at Gettysburg, Pa., Mr. Mack was accidently thrown under a moving railway train, and so seriously injured as to necessitate the amputation of both feet. By reason of this injury he was absent from duty until October 15, 1893, his total absence for the calendar year being thirty-three and one-half days in excess of the time, from all causes, allowed, with pay, by the act of March 3, 1893, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894.

"Mr. Mack is a man of correct personal habits, a faithful and efficient clerk, and is entirely worthy of the most favorable consideration. His case is one of peculiar hardship and evidently one not contemplated by the act limiting the heads of Departments in the time for which leave of absence may be granted without loss of pay. The enactment of the bill for his relief, it is believed, would be no more than just, considering his long and faithful service and the peculiar circumstances surrounding the case.

"Respectfully submitted.

"J. FRECH,
"Chief of Division, in the absence of Col. Ainsworth.

"The SECRETARY OF WAR."

Mr. BURROWS. That is the report from the War Department.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Let the joint resolution be read again.

The SPEAKER. It will be again reported, if there be no objection.

The joint resolution was again read.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, this has not been submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, but it was submitted to me personally by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]. I have no doubt whatever that the Committee on Military Affairs would report such a bill unanimously. This gentleman lost both feet by an accident, upon a patriotic occasion. His services have been very faithful and very efficient, and he is also a veteran of the late war. For that reason I suggested to the gentleman from Michigan that I would concur in the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. CAPEHART. I think the bill should be considered by the Committee on Military Affairs. I object.

COLD WATER RESERVOIR ON HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION, ARKANSAS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7488) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant leases for sites on the Hot Springs Reservation, Arkansas, for cold water reservoirs.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to lease unto the Hot Springs Water Company, of Hot Springs, Ark., its successors and assigns, or to any other person or corporation authorized to supply the city of Hot Springs with cold water for drinking and domestic purposes, a site upon the West Mountain of the Hot Springs Reservation, to be selected by him, for the purpose of constructing and maintaining thereon a reservoir for cold water and the pipes necessary to connect the same with the system of water supply of the city of Hot Springs, the term of such lease to be not to exceed twenty years, and the consideration therefor an annual rental of $300, to be collected and accounted for as now provided by law in relation to the collection and accounting for of revenue derived from leases of bath-house sites upon the Hot Springs Reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. COOMBS. I will ask the gentleman why the amount of this rental is made $300.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. Really they ought not o be charged any rent, but to put it under the control of the Secretary of the Interior we think there should be some rent, and the committee simply fixed it at $300. The Secretary of the Interior approves of the proposition.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to know, Mr. Speaker, if this waterworks company propose to take that part of the reservation for which an appropriation was made, some time since, for a reservoir to hold back the water, for fear of a flood down through the city of Hot Springs, which might injure the tunnel that the Government built there at a large expense a few years ago? I want to know if the site located is the site of that reservoir that the Government built there for the purpose of holding back the water?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. There is no connection between the two as far as I know, Mr. Speaker, and indeed I know there is none. I will state to the gentleman from New York that all the elevated ground at all close to the city of Hot Springs belongs to the Government, and therefore in their municipal matters they are compelled to come to Congress, much as the District does, in business of this character. This is to put an additional reservoir upon a mountain top, and not in the valley. It is to be done at their own expense.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to inquire of the gentleman if there is a stream of water running over the mountain top where it is proposed to have this reservoir?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. Not at present; but we hope to conduct the water there by pipes if you will allow this bill to pass.

Mr. PAYNE. Is it proposed to pump the water onto the mountain top?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. PAYNE. I think I shall have to object until I look into the matter.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have the regular order.

IMPROVEMENTS ON THE MINNESOTA RIVER.

Mr. KIEFER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Concurrent resolution authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to transmit to the House of Representatives any reports that may have been made, since his last annual report, with reference to improvements on the Minnesota River.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed to transmit to the House of Representatives any reports that may have been received since his last annual report pertaining to the improvement on the Minnesota River in the State of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the consideration? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF JUDICIARY ACT.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2794) to amend the judiciary act of August 13, 1888.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of an act entitled "An act to correct the enrollment of an act approved March 3, 1887, entitled 'An act to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from the State courts, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1875," approved August 13, 1888, be amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That every receiver or manager of any property appointed by any court of the United States may be sued in respect of any act or transaction of his in carrying on the business connected with such property without the previous leave of the court in which such receiver or manager was appointed, and that service on such receiver or manager in such suits may be made upon him or his agents in the same manner as process would be served upon said corporation or its agents if it were not in the hands of such receiver or manager, and with like effect; and any final judgment or decree rendered against such receiver or manager shall be conclusive of the amount and validity of the claim sued on, but no execution thereon shall be issued; but a copy of such judgment or decree may be filed for payment in the cause in which such receiver or manager was appointed, and shall be subject to the general equity jurisdiction of the court in which said receiver or manager was appointed, so far as the same shall be necessary to the ends of justice."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague [Mr. TATE] to offer a slight amendment, to which there is no objection.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "effect," in line 21, the following words: "And such suits may be brought in any county in which they could be brought under State laws against said corporation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TURNER of Georgia, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURT AT MONTPELIER, VT.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2135) to provide that a term of the circuit and district court of the United States for the district of Vermont may be held at Montpelier.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter in each year one of the stated terms of the circuit and district court for the district of Vermont may, when adjourned, be adjourned to meet at Montpelier.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. POWERS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING COCONINO COUNTY, ARIZ., TO ISSUE BONDS.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7506) authorizing the county of Coconino, Territory of Arizona, to issue bonds for the construction of a county building at the county seat thereof.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the board of supervisors of the county of Coconino, Territory of Arizona, be, and is hereby, authorized to issue bonds of the said county not exceeding $15,000 in amount, and bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 5 per cent per annum, for the construction of a county building at the county seat of said county.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "amount," insert "payable in not less than two nor more than twenty years."

Mr. DOCKERY. I would ask the gentleman from what committee this bill has been reported?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Committee on the Judiciary unanimously reports the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman please make a brief explanation?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman will be permitted to make a brief explanation.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter local to Arizona entirely. This is a county which has recently been cut off from an older county which was so large that it was impossible to transact the business. At the time of its creation the county assumed one-third the indebtedness of Yavapai County, which amounted to $159,000. Under the Harrison act, which limited the legal indebtedness of counties in the Territories to 4 per cent of the value of the property in the county, as shown in the last assessment roll of the county, this is in excess of the amount, and they are not able to construct this building on account of the amount involved running over the amount of debt they may incur.

Mr. DOCKERY. It does not involve any charge on the Treasury?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It does not. It allows the people to tax themselves this $15,000 to construct a building to protect their records from fire of which they are in danger at any time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ALBERT E. REDSTONE.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1105) for the relief of Albert E. Redstone.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. HUTCHESON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is equivalent to an objection. The regular order is call of committees for reports.

DECORATION FOR COMMANDER DAVIS.

Mr. GEARY, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7475) authorizing Commander C. H. Davis, United States Navy, to accept a decoration from the King of Spain; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CONSULAR OFFICERS.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6468) to amend section 1674 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to consular officers; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC PARK AT CASTINE, ME.

Mr. MARSH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4322) granting the use of certain land to the town of Castine, Me., for a public park; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SALEM, OREGON.

Mr. MERCER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 76) to provide for the construction of a public building at Salem, Oregon; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT INDIANAPOLIS.

Mr. BRETZ, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 259) to provide for the erection of a public building at Indianapolis, Ind.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call. The morning hour begins at sixteen minutes to 1 o'clock, and the call rests with the Committee on Naval Affairs.

BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS, NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I call up the bill (H. R. 6320) to provide for the creation of the office of assistant to the Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, Navy Department.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an officer of the Pay Corps of the Navy may be detailed as assistant to the Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts in the Navy Department, and that such officer shall receive the highest pay of his grade, and in case of the death, resignation, absence or sickness of the Chief of the Bureau shall, unless otherwise directed by the President, as provided by section 179 of the Revised Statutes, perform the duties of such Chief until his successor is appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs at the request of the Secretary of the Navy, at whose instance it was drawn. I will read his letter, which partly explains the necessity for the bill:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 15, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a draft of a bill to provide for the creation of the office of assistant to the Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, Navy Department.

Owing to the increase of the Naval Establishment, and to the centralization of accounts in the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, the duties and responsibilities of the Chief of that Bureau have been greatly increased; and in order to expedite the business of the Department I respectfully recommend that the inclosed bill may receive the favorable consideration of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives.

Very respectfully,

H. A. HERBERT, Secretary of the Navy.

HON. AMOS J. CUMMINGS,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives.

I have ascertained, Mr. Speaker, that under the law it is impossible for the chief clerk of that Bureau to act as Chief of the Bureau in the absence of the Chief. Business there has largely increased with the increase of the Navy. The work of the Bureau involves the expenditure at times of millions a month. These expenditures ought to be closely scrutinized. The committee is satisfied that an assistant is really necessary. On general principles, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to allowing assistant chiefs to the various bureaus in the Navy Department, but in this case I am entirely satisfied that the good of the public service requires an assistant.

Since the bill was reported to the House I have received letters from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, and have been urged by the Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts to secure prompt action. The Chief of the Bureau is overworked, and there is nobody to take his place in case he should go away. I hope that this statement will be satisfactory and that the bill will pass.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what increased expense, if any, the detail of this officer will impose upon the Treasury?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The increase will be exactly the difference between the pay on the sea and the pay on the land of the officer who may act as chief of the Bureau. That is all.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not know what that amounts to.

Mr. CUMMINGS. It amounts to very little. The Chief of the Bureau of Navigation is allowed an assistant. This bill is drawn in accordance with the provision that gave him an assistant. There ought to be no distinction in this respect between those two Bureaus. Both, I believe, require an assistant.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then the gentleman thinks there has been such increase in the volume of business as to warrant the assignment of an officer as assistant?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I am satisfied there has.

Mr. DOCKERY. As I understand, this is not in fact the creation of an office, but simply a provision for the detail of an officer.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The bill simply provides that an officer shall be detailed at the usual pay to act in this capacity.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I have just come in, and I would like to understand what this bill is.

Mr. CUMMINGS. It is a bill providing for the appointment of an assistant to the Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. While the number of the employés of the War Department to the extent of several hundred are decreased, and it is stated in the newspapers—I do not know how the fact is—the Secretary of War has been taking the army officers that have been having easy places under that Department and sending them upon duty, so that if he is not accomplishing economy he is at least making an advertisement of it—does not the gentleman desire that the Navy Department should enter into competition with the Secretary of War in these reforms and economies; and does not the gentleman now come in and propose to still further burden these Bureaus by additional details? Does the gentleman think that is wise?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will reply to the gentleman from Illinois by saying that all the money disbursed from the Navy Department is disbursed through the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts. We can not be too careful in watching the disbursements of the immense sums that the Government expends every year through its Departments. In this case the increased expense to the Government does not actually exceed $500 a year.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But this bill does take an officer from active service and gives us another officer here in the city for clerical service?

Mr. CUMMINGS. We have the officer, either in Washington or elsewhere, and we might as well pay him to do duty here, where his services will be more beneficial, than to have him ensconced in some navy yard, where his services might not be absolutely required.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Has the gentleman thought of a remedy for the existing evils—if the Navy is top-heavy and there are too many officers—by reducing the number graduating from the Naval Academy?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will suggest that there is a joint committee investigating that subject now. At the proper time they will undoubtedly present a bill and give the gentleman an opportunity to express his opinion upon it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The only fear I had was that while the joint committee is performing the duty, and preparing the measure to which the gentleman refers, and making preparations for the reforms in the service, yet at the same time one Cabinet officer is advertising his attempt at reform by sending army officers detailed on duty here back to their legitimate posts; and I had hoped that the great economist from New York, for whom I have the highest respect, might have been able to present some plan by which this reform could be a little more far-reaching, so as that there might be something like harmony between the administration of the various Departments.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The joint committee will probably bring in a measure in time which may meet the point to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I hope that the economical features of the matter will commend themselves to the approval of my distinguished friend from Missouri, the chief of the joint commission which is undertaking to reform the administration of these various Departments.

Mr. CUMMINGS. This is a necessity——

Mr. DOCKERY. If my friend will permit me a moment, I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois that the joint commission has given no consideration whatever to the adoption of new methods in the administration of the Navy Department. As I understand it, the gentleman from New York did not refer to the joint commission appointed by authority of Congress to provide improved methods for the administration of business in the Departments, but to the Joint Naval Committee——

Mr. CUMMINGS. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). Which has charge of the personnel of the Navy.

Mr. CUMMINGS. That was what I referred to.

Mr. DOCKERY. And the gentleman had no reference to the joint commission for improving the business methods of the departments.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Not at all; but I hope that joint commission will in time reach the Navy Department, because with the well-established reputation of the gentleman from Missouri in regard to such matters I do not doubt that it will be productive of good results.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope so. I observe that the legislative bill carries an appropriation of $36,840 for the clerical force of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, and in reference to this matter the Secretary of the Navy says in his letter that—

> Owing to the increase of the naval establishment and to the centralization of accounts in the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, the duties and responsibilities of the chief of that Bureau have been greatly increased.

Now, I would be glad to know from the gentleman from New York, in whose judgment I greatly rely, in what particular "the duties and responsibilities of the chief of that Bureau have been greatly increased"? Because it seems to me that if the work in the Bureau is behind, or in arrears, possibly the increase ought to be in the clerical force rather than in the detail of an assistant to the chief of the Bureau.

Mr. CUMMINGS. There is nobody under the present law who can act for the chief of the Bureau in case of his absence. In case of sickness or where sudden absence from the office may be required in the performance of his duty, some provision ought to be made for an assistant. You do not want the Bureau closed indefinitely. The result might be disastrous.

I will say to my friend that it is easily understood how there is more work than heretofore in the Bureau. It arises from the increase of the Navy. The consumption of coal and of all sorts of supplies has been increased. Then there is a change in the system of accounting. Accounts formerly kept at the Mare Island navy-yard and at the Brooklyn yard, and elsewhere, are now kept here. The old Bureau of Provisions and Clothing is now the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, carrying with it extra work and responsibility.

Mr. DOCKERY. But is the gentleman able to give any figures showing the increase of the duties of this Bureau? The Secretary of the Navy says there has been an increase of the duties and responsibilities of the chief of the Bureau.

I quite agree with the gentleman from New York as to the necessity of designating some one to act in cases where the chief is necessarily absent; but I had hoped the Committee on Naval Affairs, for which I have the very highest respect, could designate someone to act for him rather than detail an officer for that purpose.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I did not think it necessary to secure the exact figures, because the facts as to the increase of the work are well understood, and, in the judgment of the committee, the necessity for the passage of the bill is clear.

Mr. PAYNE. Let me ask my colleague a question. Could not the object sought by the committee be accomplished as well by authorizing by law the chief clerk to perform the duties of the chief of the Bureau in case of his absence?

Mr. CUMMINGS. That would not meet the condition, because the chief clerk has his own duties, which are equally as important and as onerous as those of the chief of the Bureau.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The chief is a regular naval officer, detailed, is he not?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The Paymaster-General is the chief of the Bureau, and gentlemen can see that with the enormous sums expended under his supervision he ought to have whatever force he requires to carry it on.

A MEMBER. Is he permanently disabled?

Mr. CUMMINGS. He is no more permanently disabled than members of this House are who ask sick leave every day. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CUMMINGS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT PAYMASTERS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to call up the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 1954) to amend section 1379, chapter 1, Title XV, Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to appointments of assistant paymasters in the Navy.

Be it enacted, etc., That the limitation as to age contained in section 1379 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to appointment of assistant paymasters in the United States Navy to fill vacancies that may now or hereafter exist in said grade, shall not apply to such of the graduates of the Naval Academy as were at sea upon duty at the time of the passage and approval of the act of Congress approved August 5, 1882, who were discharged thereunder at the end of their two years' cruise, after passing successfully all the examinations required of them: And provided further, That this amendment shall not be construed as giving any preference in said appointment of assistant paymasters to said graduates except as to waiving the limitation of age.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

Mr: HOLMAN. I hope the report will be read.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope there will be some explanation.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Let us have the report read, and then the gentleman can make his explanation.

Mr. MONEY. The report really covers the bill that was rejected by the committee. This is a bill which has passed the Senate, and the Senate bill is substituted for the House bill, both being in the same words.

All that this bill does is to put upon the eligible list for appointment as assistant paymasters the graduates from the Naval Academy in the classes of 1880 and 1881, who were, by the operation of law, and it is claimed by a misconstruction of the law passed while they were at sea, dropped from the list. This is to give these men the same opportunity that any other citizens of the United States have, for appointment as assistant paymasters, from which appointment they are now excluded by the age limit, the age limit usually being 26 years. This is only to give them an opportunity to come in.

Mr. HOLMAN. How many officers are affected?

Mr. MONEY. There are only two vacancies, and there is no assurance that these young men will ever receive the appointment. It is not a recommendation. It simply relieves them of the bar of age.

Mr. McNAGNY. Simply makes them eligible.

Mr. MONEY. Simply makes them eligible among the other young men in the United States. These young men are particularly fitted for this business, have been educated in the Navy, and are now deprived of a career for which they had educated themselves.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. A great wrong was perpetrated when they were dropped.

Mr. MONEY. And it was afterwards admitted by Mr. Robeson that it was a mistaken construction of his own bill, and he wrote a strong letter in favor of their being reinstated in the Navy, but that was not done. This is now an attempt at partial reparation of what was considered a very great wrong to a set of worthy young gentlemen.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask that the gentleman from Mississippi yield to me for a few minutes.

Mr. MONEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection to this bill as it is explained by the gentleman from the committee, but I do object to the manner in which we amend the statutes continually by passing some act limiting their scope and referring to them in some way that no man can understand unless he has the statute before him. The constitutions of some of our States require that no amendment shall be made to any statute which does not reënact the statute as amended.

While we have no such provision in the Constitution of the United States, I think it would be well if Congress should inaugurate a system that whenever an amendment is made to a section of the statute, especially to a section of the Revised Statutes, that the old statute as amended shall be reënacted, so that any gentleman reading it can understand it, and not depend upon the interpretation of the effect of the amendment given by the member who proposes it. His idea may be one way and the construction of the courts may be another way.

But if the statute itself was reënacted with the amendments, then every member of the House could have the opportunity of determining precisely what the effect would be. It is more difficult to find out what the Statutes of the United States are than any other laws in existence. Some of them are in appropriation bills, and they are scattered here and there, and every amendment is of this character, providing that some limitation shall be applied to a particular section.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MONEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

COMMODORE OSCAR C. BADGER.

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (S. 943) for the relief of Commodore Oscar C. Badger.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GEISSENHAINER], from the Committee on Naval Affairs, calls up a Senate bill, which the Clerk will report. This bill is on the Speaker's table.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Commodore Oscar C. Badger, now on the retired list of the Navy, a rear-admiral on said retired list, to take effect on and from the 12th day of August, A. D. 1885, the time of his retirement, he having been at that date at the head of the list of commodores and first for promotion, but was disbarred therefrom by the law requiring all officers to be retired at the age of 62 years. Upon promotion, as authorized by this act, he shall be allowed the pay of a rear-admiral retired on account of age, from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is that bill reported from any committee?

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. It is.

Mr. DOCKERY. I make the point of order that it must first be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The bill, as the Chair understands, is on the Speaker's table, and not reported from the committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understood the Chair so to state.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that to be the fact.

Mr. DOCKERY. I make the point of order that the consideration of this bill is not in order at the present time.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. A House bill identical with that has been considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs and favorably reported. I suggest that we might take up the House bill and substitute the Senate bill for it.

The SPEAKER. That would require unanimous consent, of course. Under the rule, the committee can only call up a measure which has been reported on a previous day.

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. A similar House bill has been reported to the House.

The SPEAKER. But this is a Senate bill on the Speaker's table, which has never been referred to the committee.

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. Then I will withdraw that bill and call up the bill H. R. 4683.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4683) for the relief of Commodore Oscar C. Badger, United States Navy.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. BAILEY. I make the point of order that this bill must be considered in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. I ask that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BAILEY. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BAILEY. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 57.

So the House refused to go into Committee of the Whole to consider the bill.

PAY AND RETIREMENT OF MATES IN THE NAVY.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I now call up the bill (H. R. 38) relating to the pay and retirement of mates in the United States Navy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the law regulating the retirement of warrant officers in the Navy shall be construed to apply to the twenty-eight officers now serving as mates in the Navy, and the said mates shall be entitled to receive annual pay at the rates following: When at sea, $1,200; on shore duty, $900; on leave or waiting orders, $700: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to authorize any increase of pay for any time prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think that the bill had better be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I move that the House resolve itself in Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. LESTER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The title was again reported.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the report will be read in the first instance.

Mr. CUMMINGS. If the gentleman will allow me I will read nearly all the report in explaining the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, by the act of July 15, 1870, the further appointment of acting masters' mates or mates in the United States Navy was stopped. It left the mates already in the Navy on duty, and those mates, or what there are left of them, are carried on the Navy register to-day. Death has laid its hand upon them. There are only twenty-seven left. They were appointed under the act of July 24, 1861. Section 2 of the act of March 3, 1865, provided that acting masters' mates should be styled mates, and authorized the increase of their pay to a sum not exceeding $60 a month. The act of July 2, 1864, designated boatswains, engineers, carpenters, and sailmakers as warrant officers; and under sections 1448 and 1455 of the Revised Statutes, these warrant officers are retired the same as commissioned officers; but you will notice that the act left out the mates in the Navy.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the real point.

Mr. CUMMINGS. They were neither warrant nor commissioned officers. The omission was undoubtedly an inadvertence at the time, because everybody upon the floor of this House must know that a mate is a superior officer to a boatswain or a carpenter. They were thus deprived of the benefits of a law passed for the retirement of commissioned and warrant officers.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then, as I understand my friend, the effect of this bill under consideration is to increase the retired list to the extent of twenty-seven mates.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The effect is to increase the retired list to the extent of twenty-seven noncommissioned officers who ought to be on the list, or the retired list itself be abolished.

Mr. HOLMAN. Which is the proper thing?

Mr. CUMMINGS. One or the other.

Mr. HOLMAN. Which is the proper thing?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Are you going to legislate in favor of commissioned officers and against old tars? The injustice here, it seems to me, is perfectly apparent.

Mr. DOCKERY. What would be the cost?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will come to that in a minute. I want to say that there are twenty-seven of these old men in the service. They have served from twenty-five to forty-five years in the Navy as acting master's mates, or mates. And in the face of all this service you discriminate against them. They are getting old and have families to support. Why, sir, some of these very men are to-day practically commanding vessels in the United States Navy. This House will surely take into account the fact that boatswains and carpenters are on the retired list, while these gallant old tars, some of whom served in the Mexican war, and all of whom served in the last war, are to be left stranded through an inadvertence at the time the law was passed placing warrant officers on the retired list.

Now, I want to say that Secretary Chandler, Secretary Whitney, Secretary Tracy, and Secretary Herbert have all earnestly favored the passage of this bill. They have acknowledged its justice. It has repeatedly been favorably reported both in the House and in the Senate in different Congresses. Until to-day nobody has championed the rights of these old salts, but in almost every Congress you find men willing to champion the aspirations of commodores and admirals on the retired list who are seeking an increase of pay.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary for me to expatiate further. The fact that these old jack tars have suffered from this injustice ever since 1864 ought to commend to you their demand for justice now.

I quote the following letter here, written on behalf of these mates. It reflects credit on the admirals, commodores, and commanders who have signed it:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 1, 1886.

To the Naval Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives:

HON. SIRS: The mates of the Navy are efficient officers, having performed the duties of commanding, executive, and deck officers for many years, some having served upward of forty years as enlisted men and officers.

Nearly all served in the United States Navy during the late war, and some were in the service during the Mexican war.

They have the same uniform, mess bill, and other expenses that warrant officers have, and in line of duty take precedence of warrant officers.

They are the only ones who do not receive longevity pay, and should receive the same as warrant officers, and also the benefits of the retired list as now allowed to all other officers.

David D. Porter, admiral; S. C. Rowan, vice-admiral; Thornton A. Jenkins, rear-admiral; John L. Worden, rear-admiral; C. R. P. Rodgers, rear-admiral; E. T. Nichols, rear-admiral; T. H. Patterson, rear-admiral; Henry Walker, rear-admiral; J. M. B. Clitz, rear-admiral; Wm. E. Leroy, rear-admiral; A. C. Rhind, rear-admiral; D. B. Harmony, commodore; W. W. Queen, commodore; L. A. Kimberly, commodore; Ralph Chandler, commodore; D. L. Braine, commodore; W. T. Truxtun, commodore; Montgomery Sicard, captain; R. R. Wallace, captain; Geo. C. Remey, captain; J. Fyffe, captain; Albert Kautz, captain; R. L. Law, captain; Geo. Brown, captain; J. N. Miller, captain; M. Haxton, captain; A. P. Cook, captain; S. Casey, commander; A. H. McCormick, commander; J. H. Sands, commander; A. G. Kellogg, commander; M. L. Johnson, commander; H. B Seely, commander; Theodore F. Kane, commander; J. C. Watson, commander; H. B. Robeson, commander; Wm. Whitehead, commander; Geo. W. Coffin, commander; P. F. Harrington, commander; C. N. Schoonmaker, commander; C. S. Cotton, commander; C. McGregor, commander; John McGowan, lieutenant-commander; Geo. M. Book, lieutenant-commander; Geo. N. Totten, lieutenant-commander; C. A. Schetky, lieutenant-commander; Jas. M. Forsyth, lieutenant-commander; O. W. Farenholt, lieutenant-commander.

I concur in the representation made in this communication.

WM. E. CHANDLER.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think it necessary to climb the heights of eloquence on behalf of these veteran and patriotic sea dogs of the American Navy. They were warrant officers, even if they did not receive their warrants. They ought to have received the courtesy at least that a corporal in the Army gets from his colonel. You will find them acting as executive officers on men-of-war to-day, and in some instances even acting as commanders of vessels. The Fishhawk, used by the Fish Commission, has been under command of one of these mates. Still he was not even granted the courtesy of a warrant; he had no commission at all except his forty years' term of service.

Mr. Chairman, if no gentleman desires to oppose this bill I would like to get a vote upon it. Let us give these old tars justice while we have the opportunity.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard on this question very briefly. The proposition presented by this bill is an extension of the retired list of the Navy. So far as I know, members of this House on both sides have been indisposed in in recent years to extend the retired list, either of the Army or of the Navy.

This bill proposes to make eligible for retirement on the naval list twenty-seven mates, who, as I see by the report, were not included in the provisions of the act of July, 1864, which permitted certain naval officers to be retired at certain ages.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not familiar with the laws relating to retirement of officers, either of the Navy or of the Army. But I am conversant with the general opposition which the people have expressed through their representatives on this floor against the further extension of special retiring privileges, either to officers of the Army or officers of the Navy. Mr. Chairman, in times like these, when thousands, yea, hundreds of thousands, of men in this country are out of employment, with nothing to do, tramping the country, when manufactories are closed and general industrial paralysis extends over the country, is it wise for us as the representatives of the people to add this burden to the taxpayers of the United States?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I suggest to the gentleman that it is wise to do justice to the defenders of this Union at any time. [Applause.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Then why was not this measure of justice meted out by the act of July 2, 1864, if this class of men were entitled to special recognition? The gentleman from New York says that it was doubtless an inadvertent omission; but——

Mr. CUMMINGS. And Secretary Chandler says so too.

Mr. DOCKERY. But there is nothing shown in the report which I have hastily glanced over which indicates that such was the case. It seems, Mr. Chairman, to have been a deliberate purpose on the part of Congress at that time to make this omission. If not, I hope it will be the deliberate voice of this House, expressed in disapproval of this bill, that we will not, at least at this moment of industrial paralysis, add this burden to the people whom we have the honor to represent.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be an impression in the House that by the retirement of these twenty-seven mates somebody will be promoted to their positions. There is not the shadow of truth in such an insinuation. There are no mates in the United States Navy to-day except these men. The rank has been abolished, and it is a rank. These are the only mates left. In discriminating against them by retaining them in service in their old age you are practically punishing them for doing their duty toward the country.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. My colleague [Mr. DOCKERY] makes the point that this bill will increase the burdens of taxation. I want to know whether, when anyone is retired from active service in the Army or Navy, he does not go on the retired list with less pay than he received when on active duty?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Certainly. It is cheaper to put these men on the retired list than to retain them in active service.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Then, by passing this bill we shall decrease taxation, instead of increasing it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Practically so.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] give us the figures showing a decrease of taxation? I should be glad to have that shown. If this is a measure to decrease taxation, I should like to know just how it accomplishes the result.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Will the gentleman from New York allow me one other question in order to clear this matter up?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mates receive when on sea pay $900; on shore-duty pay $700, and on leave or waiting-order pay $500.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. And if they go on this list they receive less?

Mr. CUMMINGS. If they go on the retired list they get three-quarters pay.

Mr. DOCKERY. But you give them pay for doing nothing when they are put on the retired list.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Does not an admiral get pay for doing nothing when he goes on the retired list? Is there not just as much justice and right in putting these men on the retired list, when they are incapacitated by old age from active service?

Mr. COX. Let me ask the gentleman from New York a question.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Certainly.

Mr. COX. The proposition is to retire these men at a rate of compensation less than what the Government is now paying them?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Exactly.

Mr. COX. Now, when you retire them and put them on a less compensation than they are receiving now, do I understand it is stated correctly that there are none others to take the places of these men, and that the office is abolished?

Mr. CUMMINGS. There are none others to take their places. The rank is abolished.

Mr. COX. Then is it not a reduction of expenses to the Government?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Certainly; that is the practical effect.

Mr. BYNUM. Why is it a benefit to these men to reduce their salaries, then?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Because they are old and want to go home to their wives and families, the same as you do when it gets too hot in this House. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I always differ very reluctantly with my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS], for I know that in most cases he is right. I may even go so far as to agree with him in his statement that if there is anybody on the retired list who ought to be there, these men ought to go on it. If there is any sense or any justice in putting men on the retired list who when in active service received a salary of $5,000 a year, there is greater sense and far more justice in putting a man on that list who in active service received only $900 a year.

But while agreeing with my friend from New York to that extent, my opposition to all bills of this kind is based upon the belief that no living man has a right, without working for it himself, to eat the bread that other people earn by their labor. If these men have suffered in the service of their country there is a pension roll which is accessible to them, a roll that is maintained now and has been maintained by this Government every hour since the first Congress assembled under the Republic; and if they have won for themselves a right, by their services to their country, to be cared for by their countrymen, I will vote to put them upon it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Does not that pension roll apply to admirals and commodores and other officers as well?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly it does; but the gentleman from New York does not contradict me and can not make me appear inconsistent by that suggestion, because I have never supported a proposition to put an admiral on the retired list, and I never will.

Now the truth is, and we had just as well understand it, that the aversion to men going on the pension roll instead of the retired list is this: If they go on the pension list they continue to draw for twenty years, if they live that long, exactly what they got on the first day they were placed upon it; but, on the other hand, if they are placed on the retired list, they draw not only what they first began to draw, but for every five years they remain upon the list there is an increase of compensation of 10 per cent for each five years until the original compensation may be increased 40 per cent.

Now, we have the remarkable anomaly under this system, that an officer of the Army who in active service gets $1 when he retires and does nothing, if he remains on the retired list long enough he will get $1.15. In other words, he gets $1 when he works and $1.15 when he plays.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. One dollar and five cents.

Mr. BAILEY. No; he can get 40 per cent as longevity pay.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. And it amounts to one dollar and five cents, under the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman's arithmetic is bad. Forty per cent added to 75 makes 115 per cent.

Mr. COOMBS. But this would come to $1.05.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, Mr. Chairman, here is another gentleman whose arithmetic is worse than his politics, if that is possible. Both the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] are mistaken.

The 10 per cent allowed for each five years, it is true, is computed on the retirement pay; but this 10 per cent can be allowed for each five years until it equals in the language of the law "40 per cent on the yearly pay of the grade" held by the officer when he retired. He retires on 75 per cent of his original salary, and he may be allowed longevity pay equal to 40 per cent—not of his retired pay, but 40 per cent of his original pay; and certainly gentlemen will not dispute that 40 added to 75 makes 115. I therefore repeat my statement that when he works he gets $1 and when he plays he gets $1.15, and this is the reason why gentlemen prefer the retired list to the pension roll.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this bill ought not to pass.

Mr. DOCKERY. Do I understand the gentleman from New York to state that this office is abolished?

Mr. CUMMINGS. It is abolished.

Mr. DOCKERY. What are these twenty-seven men doing now?

Mr. CUMMINGS. They were left there by the law, which provided that no further mates should be appointed.

Mr. DOCKERY. What officers succeed them?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do not know that any officers succeed them.

Mr. DOCKERY. Someone must be performing the duties heretofore performed by them.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Not necessarily. The change in the style of ships, and in the method of managing them, has brought about a change in the duties necessary to be performed. Ships do not depend upon wind any longer, as Congress seems to do at times. [Laughter.] Ships depend upon steam, and the mates of the old men-of-war are no longer required. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 111, noes 33.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. LESTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 38) relating to the payment and retirement of mates in the United States Navy, and had instructed him to report it to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and was accordingly read a third time.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division on the passage of a bill that increases the retired list.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 103, noes 32.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. CUMMINGS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. There are two minutes of the hour remaining. Does the gentleman desire to call up any other bill?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Nothing else, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, then, as there are only two minutes of the hour remaining, that will be considered as exhausted. The Clerk will report the title of the pending bill after the morning hour, for the admission of New Mexico.

ADMISSION OF NEW MEXICO.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 353) to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

The SPEAKER. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, the Chair is informed.

Mr. BURROWS. I withdraw that.

The SPEAKER. There is no other amendment pending now. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 20. That the constitutional convention may by ordinance provide for the election of officers for a full State government, including members of the Legislature and a Representative in the Fifty-fourth Congress, at the time of the election for the ratification or rejection of the constitution. In case the constitution of said State shall be ratified by the people, but not otherwise, the Legislature thereof may assemble, organize, and elect two Senators of the United States; and the governor and secretary of state of the proposed State is admitted into the Union as provided in this act, the Senators and Representative shall be entitled to be admitted to seats in Congress and to all the rights and privileges of Senators and Representatives of other States in the Congress of the United States; and the State government formed in pursuance of said constitution, as provided by the constitutional convention, shall proceed to exercise all the functions of State officers; and all laws in force made by said Territory at the time of its admission into the Union shall be in force in said State, except as modified or changed by this act or by the constitution of the State.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 15, in section 20, line 17, after the word "and," insert the following words:

"From and after the admission of said State into the United States in pursuance of this act, the laws of the United States shall have the same force and effect within said State as elsewhere in the United States, and."

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I accept that amendment.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. That simply makes it conform to the condition on which all other States are admitted. I desire to offer one further amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, this amendment will be considered as agreed to. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 15, section 20, line 18, after the word "Union," insert the words "until amended or repealed."

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I accept that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 21. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act, whether passed by the Legislature of said Territory or by Congress, are hereby repealed.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, the last paragraph of this important bill has been read, and its consideration is completed. Now, by our votes, we are to have the pleasing duty of adding another star to the banner which the world reveres as the emblem of American civilization, American progress, and American freedom. Welcome, thrice welcome, noble, chivalrous people to our sisterhood of States. I say welcome to our brothers, the brave American pioneers who have made their homes in this land of the far, far West.

Welcome our Spanish brethren, whose ancestors braved the broad Atlantic and planted the seeds of Christianity and civilization in the beautiful valley of the Rio Grande nearly a century before our forefathers landed upon the shores of Virginia and New England. Welcome, thrice welcome, to all the rights, all the joys, and all the blessed privileges of this great, glorious, and powerful Republic. [General and prolonged applause.]

The SPEAKER. By order of the House, the previous question is ordered.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed. [Applause.]

On motion of Mr. WHEELER of Alabama, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HALL OF RECORDS, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, under a special order of the House adopted sometime ago, I desire to call up the Senate bill 22, for the erection of a hall of records in the city of Washington.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama calls up a bill under a special order which was heretofore made. The Clerk will report the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this day be assigned to the consideration of H. R. 5483, a bill for the erection of a Government Printing Office, and Senate 22, a bill for the erection of a hall of records in the city of Washington; this order to continue (subject after to-day to the consideration of general appropriation bills) from day to day until such bills are disposed of.

The SPEAKER. So far as the bill relating to the Government Printing Office is concerned, that has been disposed of, and under this order the gentleman calls up the Senate bill in relation to the hall of records. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 22) for the erection of a hall of records in the city of Washington.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill (S. 22) making appropriations for the purchase of ground and the erection thereon in the city of Washington, D. C., of a building to be used as a hall of records. This bill has been reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment in the form of a substitute. If there be no objection, the substitute will be read in lieu of the original bill.

The substitute was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, for and in the name of the United States, at a cost not to exceed $300,000, for the purposes and in the manner hereinafter provided, the following described real estate, with the improvements thereon, known and designated as original lots numbered 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 20, and 21, in square numbered 635, city of Washington, D. C., and containing, with the alleys to be utilized, 92,658 square feet, more or less, and being bounded on the north by B street south and on the west by First street west, and the said Secretary is hereby instructed to cause to be erected (under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army) upon that portion of said above-described property as is embraced in lots 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13, and the alley abutting on said lots, and which alley is hereby declared to be closed for such purpose, at a cost not to exceed $200,000, a suitable fireproof building, to be used as a hall of records for the safe-keeping of such valuable records of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the Government as in the judgment of the heads of such departments are not required for constant reference, and the balance of said property as embraced in lots 6, 7, 20, and 21, is to be used for storage rooms and folding rooms for the House of Representatives, and for such other purposes as may be hereafter determined.

SEC. 2. That the said Secretary is authorized and directed to acquire said property by negotiation, so far as said property may be acquired and title thereto secured, at a price not above the fair relative value of the same, or by condemnation proceedings, as provided in the act approved June 25, 1890, to provide an eligible site for a city post-office, with amendments thereto, approved August 30, 1890.

SEC. 3. That whenever and as title to the several parcels of such real estate, with improvements thereon shall be acquired as aforesaid, and the same shall be ready for delivery, and the sufficiency thereof shall be certified by the Attorney-General of the United States, or whenever by condemnation of any parcel the fair value shall be ascertained, the Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized and directed, upon the requisition of the said Secretary, to pay the purchase price of such property, parcel by parcel, and to pay into court the condemnation price, parcel by parcel, of all of said property that may be condemned.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect from the date of its approval.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have read the report accompanying this bill. It is short.

The report (by Mr. BANKHEAD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 22) making appropriations for the purchase of ground and the erection thereon, in the city of Washington, D. C., of a building to be used as a hall of records, have considered the same and report a substitute therefor.

The Senate bill provides for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a building to cost not exceeding $300,000, both inclusive. Your committee fully concur with the Senate that a hall of records is one of the present pressing needs of the Government here at the capital. Very large accumulations of records of great value are now stored in insecure buildings, liable to destruction by fire or to damage or loss from other causes. If through any accident these records should be destroyed their reproduction would be impossible, and great inconvenience and much embarrassment would result to the several Departments of the Government thereby.

In most instances these records pertain to questions of great importance and value, and they have been steadily accumulating since the organization of the Government, and they must be preserved for future reference. They are in such quantity as to require a great deal of space, and are, of course, constantly increasing in volume. Those which are not placed on storage in unsafe outside buildings are occupying highly valuable space in the various Departments, which is badly needed for the transaction of current business.

In some instances Department buildings have become dangerously overweighted with these accumulated records, and the heads of Departments have found it necessary for safety to remove the files into other buildings. These records all together are now occupying a vast quantity of space in the Department buildings, and it is believed that the transfer of all of them now required for daily use to a building constructed for the purpose would greatly facilitate the transaction of the public business.

The committee in reporting a substitute for the Senate bill were largely controlled by a desire to provide permanent storage room and folding room facilities for the House of Representatives. Until very recently the books and records belonging to the House of Representatives have been stored in the basement of the Capitol building, and in buildings rented in various sections of the city, the folding being done in the basement of the Capitol building, a place wholly unfit for the purpose. An arrangement has recently been made through which the House secured the large and commodious two-story brick building which is located on a portion of the lot now proposed to be purchased, and all of the public documents belonging to the House of Representatives will soon be stored therein.

A folding room entirely suited to the work has been arranged in the building and an elevator has been put in for hoisting books to the second floor.

This lot will furnish all the room the Government will ever require for storage and folding purposes, and on that portion of it situated next to the cable car line the hall of records will be constructed. The lot contains 92,658 square feet altogether and about 40,000 feet of which will be used for the hall of records.

It is excellently well located for the purposes for which it will be used. It can be directly reached by street railroads from each one of the Government Departments and is conveniently near to the Capitol. The price named, $300,000, is reasonable. Your committee recommends that all after the enacting clause be stricken out and that the accompanying substitute be inserted.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, the bill just read is a substitute reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for a Senate bill which passed the Senate during the extra session of Congress. The necessity for a hall of records was so pressing that the Senate took up this question early during that session and sent this bill to the House. Every Department of the Government has very valuable records which have been accumulating from the organization of the Government up to the present time. These are now being stored in insecure buildings and are liable at any time to destruction by fire or to loss or damage from other causes.

It is frequently necessary to consult these records; and when that necessity arises access to them is very difficult, and requires much time, because these records are stored in a number of different buildings, without any system or order. Besides, very much valuable space in the different departmental buildings is now being occupied by these records which ought to be stored somewhere else for safety and convenience. Every Department of the Government has urged the passage of this bill.

The committee in reporting a substitute for the Senate bill has had in view another object. The House of Representatives has met with great difficulty and been subjected to great inconvenience in finding a suitable storage place for public documents belonging to the House. These documents have been stored in the basement of the Capitol, and the folding department of the House has also been there until recently. About the beginning of the regular session of Congress the House passed a resolution authorizing the Doorkeeper to rent a building located upon the property which this bill proposes to purchase, and in that building we have stored a large portion of the public documents.

Indeed, all the documents that were formerly stored by the House of Representatives in rented buildings, located in different sections of the city, have been removed into this building. A suitable and commodious folding room has been arranged, in which the employés can work with comfort and dispatch. An elevator has been placed in the building for the purpose of carrying the documents to the second floor. This building is of such dimensions as easily to furnish storage for all the public documents perhaps for all time to come.

Besides, a committee of this House, the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, having made a thorough inspection of the condition of the basement of the Capitol building, reported a few days ago a resolution declaring that it is absolutely necessary to remove from the basement of this Capitol one million volumes of books now stored there. These volumes must go out and be stored in the building already rented by the House or some other building. The Government has secured a one year's lease upon this building, which will expire in about six months. We are now paying $400 a month for that portion of the property situated on this lot, which is being occupied by the Government. At the expiration of the present lease I have no doubt the rent will be doubled, as is always the rule in this city when the Government comes to rent buildings for its own use.

It appears to me, sir, that it is a matter of economy, and is a sound business proposition, that the Government should buy this property and build upon that portion of it not occupied by the storehouse and folding room, a suitable hall of records where these valuable records of the Government can be securely deposited and where there may be some system and order in their storage so that when it becomes necessary to have access to those records they may be found without the loss of days and weeks in turning over and shifting old documents or records piled up indiscriminately as they are now in the buildings where the records are stored.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that the price named for this property is reasonable. The improvements upon the property are worth more than $100,000. The building is exactly what the Government needs for its purposes, and what it needs now. If we should undertake to erect a building for a folding room and a storage place for the public documents of Congress we could not construct a building which would be better adapted to our use than the building now on this lot. It is on the cable road, so that there is easy access to and quick communication with all the Departments of the Government.

If we should undertake to secure a site for a hall of records anywhere in the vicinity of the Departments it would cost at least $1,000,000. The price of land on the Avenue anywhere beyond Sixth street ranges from $7 to $12 per square foot; and on F street, between Sixth street and the White House, the prices range from $15 to $25 per square foot. The price of this property, including the improvements upon it, which, as I have said, are worth $100,000, and are just such as the Government must have, is only $3 per square foot.

Mr. BOWER of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question for information.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. BOWER of North Carolina. Is this the Mahone property?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No, sir. This, I will state to the gentleman, is the large building at the foot of the hill here on the southwest side of the Capitol grounds, what is known as the Georgetown street-car stables.

Another matter I may mention; Mr. Chairman, in connection with this location, is that if it be desired a hall of records can be established and can communicate directly with the Capitol by means of an underground tunnel, so that books and documents and other matter can be transmitted directly from the basement of the Capitol and from the folding room into this building.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. If the gentleman will permit an interruption, I have not been able to gather from the reading of the report where this lot is situated.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Right at the foot of the Capitol hill.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Does the gentleman refer to the large building on the line of the street railroad?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; where the Georgetown street-car sheds are. This is the property of the Georgetown road, but is now being occupied by the Government, and has been partly fitted up to make it available for storage.

Mr. EVERETT. It is the building just below the marble yard.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; the marble yard is a part of the property included in the bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I was about saying that if it shall be the opinion of the members of this body, and those interested in the importance of this subject, that some suitable place should be provided for the safe storage of the valuable records of the various Departments of the Government that are not in daily or regular use; if they are of opinion that the valuable space now occupied in the already overcrowded Departments of the Government on account of these publications should be relieved by removing these files and records which are not required for constant use to a place of safety, and if they are of opinion that the danger which constantly menaces us by the overweighted condition of many of the buildings by reason of the accumulation of these records should be remedied, then this bill ought to pass.

The Supervising Architect of the Treasury a few days ago, in conversation on this subject, told me he had been recently called to examine one of the public buildings in this city, and found it weighted down to the very danger line with the accumulation of records, and they had to be immediately removed in order to insure the safety of the structure itself.

Mr. CRAIN. What building does the gentlemen refer to?

Mr. BANKHEAD. This was a portion of the Treasury Department, but the Busch building and two or three others our attention has been called to as being equally overloaded.

Again, Mr. Chairman, if we are to have a permanent place, a suitable and convenient place for the storage of the files of the Departments, and of the vast accumulation of public documents printed by order of Congress, there can be no better place than this selected, and no cheaper property can be bought nor building erected within thousands of dollars of what this can be procured for. It is already fitted up at considerable expense, and is now ready for the storage of all the documents the Government can remove and store there.

Besides, it appears to be absolutely necessary that the documents now stored in the basement of this building, more than a million volumes, must be immediately removed if we are to have any care for the health and comfort of the members of this House; and we are told this by a committee of the House who have thoroughly and carefully investigated the question. We can not afford to rent buildings by the year, and the Government can not make a contract for a longer period, except by option, and by the time we move in the lease expires and the rent is raised and we have to move out.

We ought to have a permanent establishment for the storage of all these documents, not only for the convenience it will afford, but as a matter of economy and to save from possible injury valuable documents which are now imperfectly cared for.

I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS], and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, it is well known to the House that my duty in connection with the Committee on Appropriations in preparing the legislative and judiciary bill was to make an examination of the various buildings that are rented by the Government. I remember that while the report was being made in the House, the chairman of the committee [Mr. SAYERS] remarked that he wished that the members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds were present, so they could appreciate the necessity of providing buildings of our own in which the documents and files of the Government could be stored.

In making this investigation we found that the Government was paying all the way from 10 to 19 per cent of the estimated value of the buildings which it rented and which were entirely inadequate to the purposes for which they were being used. We found that buildings were being overloaded; and in the opinion of that committee it is—and I am glad to say in other instances this opinion is supplemented by the opinion of the Architect of the Capitol—that forced removal should be made of documents which have accumulated to such an extent as to endanger the buildings on account of the giving way of the floors by reason of the weight imposed upon them.

I am not familiar with this bill, nor am I familiar with the property proposed to be taken for the purpose of building such a structure upon, but I understand it has met the approval of the full committee.

There is one thing, however, that strikes me, and that is that it will not be sufficient for the purpose, but that a building for the storage of files in use in the Treasury, Navy, and War Departments should be located very much nearer to those Departments.

It is very convenient for a folding room and a storage room for the Capitol, but I am afraid that it will divide the administration of these other Departments so seriously as to cause inconvenience and possibly a greatly increased cost of administration. Now, while I shall not oppose this bill, I give the House notice that this is not going to answer the purpose.

A MEMBER. Why?

Mr. COOMBS. Because it is inconveniently located in relation to the other Departments which must have access to it. The proper place to locate it is on Pennsylvania avenue near the Departments, and Congress will finally have to make an appropriation for a building of that kind. The cost of administration of these Departments is very great. No merchant would think of dividing his office into places a mile or 2 miles apart. He would locate them together, so that he might administer the affairs of his business and have his eye upon them; but here squads of clerks are to be located in different parts of the city, and it is necessary to have an organization in every one of them.

Mr. BRETZ. Does not the gentleman know that the purpose of this building is simply to store the records of past years, that are only referred to perhaps once in five years?

Mr. COOMBS. If it is for that, I do not oppose it; but when you are to have a working building for the use of the Departments, for the storing of records, for the relief of the overloaded archives of the Departments, you will be obliged to locate that building nearer the work of those various Departments.

I am glad to see this movement, but I hope that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will not stop here; that they will go on and devise larger things, by which we shall save money for the Government and have exactly the buildings that are needed for the use of the Government. There is no wisdom, no economy, and it can not be justified as good business management, to pay from 15 to 17 per cent for the use of buildings which could be erected and owned by the Government, buildings adapted to the purposes of the Government, at a cost not to exceed 3 per cent. The building provided for in this bill may meet one want. I hope that the committee will take into earnest consideration the other necessities of the Government in this direction.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, if the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had been proposing to find some place for the storage of documents and vouchers pertaining to the Capitol building alone, it might be possible that their selection would meet with approval. But so long as they propose that this location shall be selected for a hall of records for the general storage of the unused vouchers, and all the accumulations of a century from the Departments at large, I can not imagine that they could have selected a more inappropriate place, or one which will be more inconvenient in the actual use of the building if erected.

The location is at the corner where the cable cars turn to come up to the Capitol. That is the property known as the Washington and Georgetown stables, which have been leased by this House temporarily, for the storage of public documents and for use as a folding room. Contrary to all custom and practice in the location of Government buildings, they did not take the whole square. They do not surround the proposed building by an open space which would protect it from fire, but they bring it squarely up to the building line of private property. Then they take out of the square a piece which is irregular in shape. They take out one corner, and then they turn almost at right angles to that, and take two other lots, running out to the other street, which two other lots are adjoined on both sides by private property. If anyone wishes to see the location, I have before me a map of the city, which will show it.

Now, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has said in his opening remarks that the building down there is just such a building as we wish and need for a hall of records.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, no; I said for a storage room.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. For a storage room, but I see that a still further purpose of the bill is to locate the hall of records on that part now occupied by the stables.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, no; between the stables and the railroad tracks on B street.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The bill says:

> Known and designated as original lots numbered 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 20, and 21, in square numbered 635, city of Washington, D. C., and containing with the alleys to be utilized, 92,658 square feet, more or less, and being bounded on the north by B street south and on the west by First street west.

Those lots are a part of the ground which is now covered by the stable building, and part immediately east of that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is only covered by the shed, not by the main building.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Then it is so much the worse. If the gentleman proposes to build a hall of records which shall be abutted on the one side by the stable building of the Georgetown Railroad Company, so much the worse, even though that comes into the ownership of the Government, because the building which he himself has suggested as being cheap at $100,000 would be of no use at all to the Government, and could not be.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Certainly, if I can have my time extended.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The proposition is to erect the hall of records on the lot between the stables, the old street-car stables, now used as a hall of records, and B street, and there is a plenty of room for this hall of records and space left all around it, it being surrounded on two sides by streets. I think my friend is misled by the fact that there is an old street-car shed, which leads back to the stable, that is occupying a part of the ground that would be required by the hall of records. That part of the building would have to be taken down.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Does the gentleman propose that the hall of records be placed east of the corner?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It goes down to the corner.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Then it takes in the regular building, because the stable building is in the corner; and the bill provides that the hall for the public documents of the House shall be built on lots 20 and 21, which front on Delaware avenue.

Mr. BANKHEAD. You are mistaken as to where the stable is.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will you come and examine the map?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would rather examine the property. It extends back 200 feet. I have been on the ground frequently, and know exactly where the stable is.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. And so do I know exactly where the stable is, and know the people who live on the corner of this very property. There is a private building, and next, east, is this stable, and to the south of the private residence there are a series of other private residences.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is where you are mistaken. The next east is not the stable, but is the old shed running into the stable, a long, narrow strip.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. In other words, it was the place where the cars were housed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is right.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. It is the property which the Georgetown and Washington Railroad Company used as its stable and as a shed for cars. Are we agreed in that?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That shed is proposed to be taken down; and that is where the hall of records is to be erected.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. And there is not one single foot occupied by the building which is fit for any purpose which the gentleman's bill proposes; and so far as the building is concerned, that would be an absolute waste of money; and on all the other part of this lot there is not one single building that could be utilized in any proper sense for a hall of records, or for the storage of records of any permanency.

Now, let us look for a moment at the ground itself. Here is the ground situated partly on the side of the hill. This substitute for the Senate bill proposes to appropriate just as much as the Senate bill did, but that left, as it should leave, according to my judgment, the location of this building to a committee consisting of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Treasury. This building is to be used not especially for the House or Senate, but more especially for the storage of documents of the Executive Departments, and it is proposed to locate it on an average a mile and a quarter from those Executive Departments.

Whenever it should become necessary for a clerk in any of those Departments to examine any of the books, papers, or vouchers to be stored in this hall of records, it would be necessary for him to go a mile and a quarter to this building, and to return a mile and a quarter, which will take necessarily an hour of his time upon the street. It is not an economic, not a common sense, and not a business policy.

Then, again, this ground down here is not of such value as the gentleman's bill indicates. Some of that very ground which he proposes to take by the provision in this substitute upon which to erect this building has been offered to me within a year at 90 cents a foot.

Mr. HULICK. What would be the amount in the aggregate?

A MEMBER. Why did not you take it?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Because I did not believe there was any money in it at that. Now, I can not imagine why——

Mr. CRAIN. What is the price per foot proposed to be paid?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Over $3, I think.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. It is something over $3 a foot.

Mr. CRAIN. Do I understand you were offered the very same ground at 90 cents a square foot?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I have no doubt that part of it could be bought for less than a dollar a foot.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will you name the lot you can buy at 90 cents a square foot?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I am not in the real estate business. There is nothing in the Senate bill as it came over from the Senate that does not bear on its face the mark of entire candor and entire justice. We ought to have a hall of records which shall be sufficient for the storage of the present records and sufficient for those of future times.

This bill as it now comes to us from this committee is nothing but a miserable makeshift and will not fill the full measure required, as the Senate bill does, for which our committee has substituted this peculiar bill, which is one that has not in it, in my judgment, a single line to commend it to this House. It will not fill the present needs and will require at our hands within a few years another appropriation and another building.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. What is the location the Senate makes?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The Senate leaves the location to be selected by a commission consisting of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. At what does the Senate fix the cost?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Three hundred thousand dollars, the same as the House committee.

Mr. COOMBS. What location does the Senate fix?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. They do not fix a location, but provide for a commission to select a location.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. As I read the substitute, it provides for an expense of $300,000 for the land and $200,000 for the building.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. That is exactly what the substitute provides. Now, let me read the provision of the Senate bill:

That the sum of $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the purchase of a site in the city of Washington, D. C., and the erection thereon of a brick and metal fireproof building.

Now, the reason which may have induced the Senate to adopt this provision is that there is ground in this city lying southwest of the principal Departments which can be bought cheaper than this site selected by the House committee, and which is better suited for the contemplated building, and will be better in practical use because it is nearer to the Departments. The Senate already has a building for the storage of its documents, and the House, with a very small expenditure, could secure one for the storage of its documents. Consequently at this end of the city a building of this kind is not needed. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment, neither this nor the Senate bill ought to pass at this time. The proposition is to buy ground and erect a hall of records. Now, this proposition has been before Congress in one shape or another ever since I have been here—for twenty years. It seems to me it might be well enough to test the importance of this proposed bill by adding to it a provision for raising the money; a provision authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue interest-bearing obligations to secure the money to meet this expenditure. Tested in this way, I doubt whether there would be half a dozen votes in this House in favor of the measure. Yet that is what you are proposing to do.

Now, so far as public buildings in the District of Columbia are concerned, there is but one, in my judgment, which we would be justified in borrowing money on interest to build. In my view, an improvement for which such a measure would be justified is either to make an addition to the Government Printing Office, or to secure a site and erect a new Government Printing Office; because a Government Printing Office is absolutely necessary for the proper conduct of public business and for the safety of the employés of the Government in that branch of the service. I would not at this time vote to authorize any public building in Washington except a Government Printing Office; and for that reason I am against this measure.

Now, I want to say to gentlemen coming from other parts of the country and having in their districts great cities or small cities where buildings for the public service are really needed—more sorely needed than is this hall of records—I want to remind gentlemen of the policy with which we are met by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. They have not recommended in any instance, I believe, thus far during this Congress, nor do they intend practically hereafter, the authorization of any public building throughout the country.

Take, for instance, the city of Chicago, in my State—not a city which I represent. There is a crying necessity for a public building in that great city of nearly 2,000,000 people. But such a building is not to be authorized I apprehend at this session of Congress——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I know the gentleman wants to be fair and candid.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then I remind him that a bill for the construction of a public building at Chicago has been reported by our committee, and has been on the Calendar for sometime.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Certainly it is on the Calendar. Yet in view of the borrowing of fifty or sixty million dollars and in view of a deficit of $75,000,000 or $80,000,000 for this year, and the absolute certainty that to pay current expenses you must borrow more by the issue of interest-bearing bonds, it is an open secret that the bill to which the gentleman refers is not to pass at this session of Congress.

Now, all that I have to say is that I will not vote to authorize any new public building anywhere now, unless I believe the necessity for its construction is so great that I would be willing to tack upon the measure an amendment providing that the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to borrow money at 3 per cent to construct such building. In these Democratic times that is what stares you in the face. Tested in that way, the bill now before us, in my judgment, ought not to pass.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN].

Mr. CRAIN. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, this bill ought to pass. I do not believe that any bill providing for a hall of records ought to pass at this juncture. I do not believe there is any overweening necessity for any hall of records in this city now. In the first place, assuming the statements of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER] to be correct, it is very evident that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has been imposed upon with reference to the site provided for in the bill, because that gentleman has stated that he has been offered a portion of this same land at 90 cents a foot, whereas the price to be paid, if this bill should become a law, is $3 a foot.

Again, for the reasons stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], I do not believe this bill ought to pass. Why is it that the policy has obtained here of denying to the districts of the country, in all sections of it, appropriations for public buildings, which are covered by bills that have been introduced and favorably reported upon by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds? Whenever recognition is sought on the floor for that purpose, it is always urged that it covers "an appropriation;" that "the Treasury is empty;" that there is a "deficit staring us in the face," and that as a consequence such appropriations should not be permitted.

As has been said by the gentleman from Illinois, we have been compelled, through the Secretary of the Treasury, to sell $50,000,000 of bonds for the purpose of raising funds; and we are now wrestling with a revenue bill, the object of which is to raise sufficient money to meet the expenses of the Government and carry on its business; and one of the principal items in the expense list of the Government is found in the necessary appropriations to carry on the construction of the Library building in this city.

Another item of considerable importance is the one to provide means to carry on the construction of the post-office building here. Gentlemen who are comparatively new to the legislation of this House may not be aware of the fact that the limit of cost of the Library building was fixed at $6,000,000, and the limit of cost of the post-office building is $2,000,000, and in these limits of cost is not included the cost of the sites of these buildings, respectively. One million and eighty-five thousand dollars has been already paid for the site of the Library building; so that we will have paid out, when that building shall have been completed, $7,085,000 under the present limit.

The cost of the site of the post-office building was $600,000; so that when that building shall have been completed we will have paid out $2,600,000 on that account. The appropriation bill for the coming fiscal year carries an appropriation of $600,000 for work on the Library and $200,000 or $250,000 for work on the post-office building.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, another consideration is involved in these two items, namely, that the appropriation, made annually, is indefinite in its character, and depends entirely and exclusively upon the contracts made by the contracting engineer. So that while these appropriations are only $850,000 for the coming year—a large sum under existing conditions—yet that may be in coming fiscal years increased to $2,000,000 or more, according to the terms and conditions imposed by the contracts made under authority of the contracting engineer.

Now, there is not a man on this floor who would go further in making all necessary appropriations for the improvement and ornamentation of this great capital of the nation than I. But when it comes to the consideration of a bill, the passage of which is urged because it involves a necessity, then I feel myself called upon to investigate that question and determine for myself, with the lights before me, whether as a matter of fact that necessity really exists.

Mr. Chairman, as I have already said, I believe there is no necessity for the erection of a hall of records in this capital today. Why? Because each of these Department buildings, which are overloaded as the gentleman from Alabama said, can easily be relieved by passing a law of limitation against these old claims and vouchers, of which thousands upon thousands of tons have been accumulated, and which form the bulk of the weight that is now complained of as endangering the stability of these buildings.

They will never be examined or investigated and a statute of limitations covering these moth-eaten and dust-covered vouchers and claims and authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury or the Postmaster-General or any other Department officer to destroy them, to burn them or to dispose of them in some way, would afford the necessary relief. There is necessity, of course, for protecting the documents in the City Hall or the records department of the Government; but they are few in number comparatively speaking. Wills, deeds, and documents involving titles—muniments of title—ought to be protected and preserved; but there is no necessity for protecting the vouchers for money orders which have been paid years and years ago.

Go through the Sixth Auditor's Department, and what do you find? The character of documents just mentioned, which it is proposed by this bill to protect and preserve by the erection of a hall of records, you find tons upon tons of them there. I say again that the passage of a law providing that a limitation shall run in favor of the Government against all of these antiquated claims, which date back a specified number of years, and the files and papers attached thereto, would do away with the necessity for a large hall of records for their preservation.

So far as the documents in the Senate and House of Representatives are concerned, do Representatives not know that there are tons of them belonging to members who are dead, or gone out of public life? What is the reason why, by resolution, we can not provide for their distribution among the present members or for their sale by public auction for the benefit of the Treasury which now is in a depleted condition?

I say, sir, as the gentleman from Illinois well said to the House, that it would be something to our credit and much more to our advantage, as well as to that of the Government, if we were to provide by proper legislation for the erection of a public building to protect and preserve those employés of the Government who are now in danger in an overcrowded building known as the Government Printing Office.

Would it not be better for us, more to our credit, and more advantageous to the whole country, were we to pay, even by the sale of bonds if necessary, for the erection of a Printing Office for the protection of human beings, their lives, and their health, than to be compelled as we may possibly be to pay compensation to those who may be injured by a falling building or whose relatives are dead by reason of the insecurity of a Government building? Such a course is now contemplated by the investigation and report of a committee of the Senate upon the falling of the old Ford Theater.

I say again, there is no pressing necessity for this building. There is, however, a necessity in various parts of the country for the erection of public buildings to facilitate the transaction of the public business; to hold courts in, and to transact the customs business; but no member representing a district in any part of the country who asks recognition, even if he receives it from the Speaker for that purpose, can make a request for the consideration of such a bill without being confronted by the objection that there is no money in the Treasury to meet the necessary appropriation for the purchase of a site and the erection of the building provided for in his bill.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that I am opposed to the passage of this bill: First, because of the reasons stated by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER]; second, because of the reasons, and cogent reasons, adduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and also for the reasons which I have contributed in the few minutes which have been allotted to me.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN].

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, some five or six weeks ago we had before the House a bill, reported by this committee, for the erection of a public building for a Printing Office. The site selected by the committee was a block of ground down near the Baltimore and Ohio depot. The amount to be appropriated was $300,000, and the amount of land was very nearly the same as that provided for in this bill. After discussing that bill for several hours, by a vote of 2 to 1 the House instructed the committee to bring in another bill, providing for the location of that building upon ground now owned by the United States.

Here is another building bill, brought here by this committee, appropriating about the same amount, $300,000, for the purchase of another site, for the erection of a hall of records.

Mr. Chairman, the first objection which I desire to make to the bill is that if the building is needed—and I am willing to take the judgment of the committee which has examined the question upon that point—if we are absolutely in need of some such building, it seems to me that the first question which presents itself to us is, Have we land upon which we can put this building, or is it necessary to go out and buy land?

And if the House believed, on a former occasion, that we had land suitable for the erection of a great printing office which was to cost a million and a half of dollars, why is it that we can not find upon our abundant space sufficient ground upon which to erect a hall for storing books, at an expense of $200,000.

The site which has been selected here is described as a piece of property the price of which is reasonable. In a few minutes' time I was able to ascertain, in regard to the proposed Printing Office site, that the land around it could be bought for about one-half what it was proposed to pay for the land to be bought by the Government, and that land, of about the same amount in extent, is better situated and worth more per foot than the land which is now proposed to be bought at the corner of B and First streets southwest.

The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER] has said that he found that he could buy land there at 90 cents per foot. If you will go up on the hill you can buy far more desirable property at a less price than it is proposed to pay for that land down at the foot of the hill, and yet the committee say that this is a reasonable price.

Mr. Chairman, when the time comes I desire to move to strike out the words "three hundred thousand dollars" and insert the words "one hundred and fifty thousand dollars," and I believe in doing that we will leave a margin of at least $50,000 more than that land can be bought for, if it ought to be bought at all. When the proper time comes I shall ask recognition to move to recommit the bill to the committee, with instructions that they locate this building upon ground now owned by the United States.

The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER] has called attention to the location of this land. The committee has not explained, at least not in my hearing, what led them to select an irregular piece of land. Why is it that two lots are proposed to be bought which run off to another street, and which are barely connected with the body of this land? May I ask the gentleman if those lots belong to the street-railroad company?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes. I am willing to strike out that part.

Mr. BRYAN. Then, as I understand, these two adjoining lots belong to the street-car company, and I do not know that there is any better reason for adding on two lots which could not be built upon without making a very ugly structure, unless it be that as the street-car company owns the land there, and has no further use for it, we ought to take it off its hands at about two or three times its actual value.

Mr. Chairman, the same reasoning which applied to the bill which we had before us a few weeks ago applies with much greater force to this. Every reason which applied to that applies with greater force to this. One reason why we objected to that was that we thought it was proposed to pay too much for it. That reason applies with still more force to this. Another reason was that it was remote from the buildings to be used in connection with it, and the same reason applies to this.

Here is a piece of land away off from these Executive Departments, away off from the Treasury Department, from the Interior Department, from the Pension Bureau, from the State, War, and Navy Departments. And, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there can be no justification for the selection of this site and the purchase of this land, except to relieve a corporation which owns the land and desires to get rid of it.

You will remember that after the committee was instructed to secure Government land for the erection of a printing office, they reported back a site up here between Sixth and Seventh streets, what is known as the Armory Square, a splendid site for that building. Yet until they were instructed by the House, they did not select that ground.

If I am correct in the figures, the land which they have selected on Armory Square is about 4 feet higher than this land which they are asking us now to buy. When on that occasion I suggested that they take Government land, and when I mentioned the Mall, we were told that they could not get a foundation there; and yet no one speaks to-day of any danger from overflow to this proposed site down here at the corner, within a block of the canal itself.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that it needs no further argument to convince this House that if we are going to buy this land at all we ought to cut down the amount of it at least one-half, and not leave it at over $150,000; and it seems conclusive to my mind that if we need this building at all we had better put it on some land that we have now and not buy a piece of land to help out somebody who owns the land and wants to sell it. In that way we can find a far more convenient site for the books which will be collected there.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PICKLER. What portion of public ground can you find that will be convenient to all these departmental buildings?

Mr. BRYAN. I would suggest the tract between the same streets—Sixth and Seventh streets. There is land there which is much more convenient to the Departments than that on which this proposed building is to be located.

Mr. PICKLER. That would be a mile and a half from the War Department.

Mr. BRYAN. It would be half a mile nearer than this.

Mr. PICKLER. It is impossible to find a lot for the building that be near to all the different Departments.

Mr. BRYAN. That is true; but yet when we can show you public ground near the Departments, and more convenient for the purpose, it seems to me needless expense and a needless appropriation of money to authorize the purchase of land down here in this low ground at the foot of Capitol Hill. That is all I wish to say.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I listened with some degree of interest to the remarks of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] and the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER]. I have listened with some degree of surprise to their criticism with reference to the relative value of the property. The gentleman from New Hampshire stated that he had been offered property in this lot for 90 cents per square foot, and that he knew the parties who live on the corner very well. Now, I have seen the options given by all the parties; and that piece of the lot on that corner, owned by the very party that he speaks of, is estimated by the party owning it at, and the party who had the option has agreed to pay, I believe, $7.50 a foot.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. May I correct the gentleman? The corner lot was not the lot of which I spoke; but if the gentleman wishes to know the lot to which I did refer, it is lot 12, immediately east of the stable—a vacant lot.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the gentleman who got the option on that got it at $1.25 on that vacant property. But, Mr. Chairman, this property is almost covered with buildings. The property which we propose to use is exactly as I have stated, suitable for the Government purposes. I have been informed, and I have a statement of that fact under oath, that the buildings themselves cost $65,000.

Now, everybody knows when you undertake to get property in this city for Government purposes as soon as the property owners of the square find it out the price advances three or four times. You know it, Mr. Chairman, and every man in this House knows it; and there is not a man in this House who does not know that when we were seeking the ground for the post-office in this city the price advanced three times from the time we began the selection of a site until we got possession.

Mr. BRYAN. Is it not the introduction of such bills as this that encourages property holders to hold their property so high?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am perfectly willing that this land should be condemned if the House thinks it would be preferable. In fact, I do not care whether the bill passes or not. It is nothing more to me than it is to any other member of Congress. So far as I am concerned, it makes very little difference to me what is done with it.

Mr. BOATNER. Can not we scuffle along without this hall of records for awhile?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I suppose we could. We did scuffle along without a Capitol at one time. This building is not to be used for the Executive Departments only, but it is to be used for storage purposes for all the records that belong to Congress, and for a folding room. The records are there now, and largely the documents are being folded there. The building is exactly suited to the purpose, and I do not see any reason in the world why we should not decide on taking that place if it is decided by the House that it is necessary that this work should be done.

If Congress does not think these records should be preserved, or if it is decided that we should pay 15 or 20 per cent rental, or 15 or 20 per cent interest annually on buildings which are unsuitable buildings and where these records are liable to be destroyed, why, then, that is all right with me.

Mr. BRYAN. How much do we pay for that building?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Four hundred dollars a month, and I suppose we will have to pay $800 a month when this lease runs out. I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be considered as closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the debate be considered as closed.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I wish a few moments in reply in the time that is reserved. I do not entirely agree with all of those who seem to oppose this bill, for I am one of those who believe that a hall of records is necessary. My opposition to this bill is simply because of the location of the building and of the proposed price of the lot. The original idea of a hall of records was that it should be exactly what the name indicates, not that it should contain also a storeroom for the documents of Congress; but that it should be for the records and vouchers of the Executive Departments of the Government and to supply sufficient room for the storage of those documents now existing and those which will inevitably come into the possession of the Government in the coming years, which will require a building larger than the one that the gentleman from Alabama from the committee proposes to erect here.

That building should undoubtedly be located as near to the several Executive Departments as possible, in order that time may not be lost in passing from the several Departments to the hall of records for the purpose of examining vouchers there stored.

This bill proposes to locate the hall of records nearly a mile from any one of the Departments and on an average a mile and a quarter from all of those Departments. As I have already said, a clerk can not leave any of the Executive Departments at the upper end of the town and come down to this place and return without consuming about an hour in the simple transit.

Now, if it is necessary, and I presume it is, that the House of Representatives should have some place for the storage of documents (and there is a vast difference between documents and vouchers), let us secure a proper place and erect a suitable building as near the Capitol as possible, so that convenience and economy in the transaction of the business of the House may be secured.

In providing a hall of records for the Executive Departments, let us act on precisely the same principle. Let us select from property already belonging to the Government, or let us purchase, ground as near those Executive Departments as possible, because this hall of records is to be simply a continuation of the file rooms of the Departments.

Mr. PICKLER. What point does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I suggest that there is any quantity of very cheap land lying to the southwest of the War, State, and Navy Department building——

Mr. PICKLER. How close would that be to the Pension Office?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. That would be as near the Pension Office as the site proposed by the House committee.

Mr. PICKLER. How near would it be to the Agricultural Department?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. It would be within about three squares of the Agricultural Department, and within one or two squares of the War, State, and Navy Department building.

Mr. PICKLER. Would that be on low ground?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. It would be just beyond where the Corcoran Art Building is being erected—right below that. And ground which is fit for the erection of an art building would be fit for the erection of a building for the hall of records.

Mr. PICKLER. But the ground the gentleman has in view would be no such situation as that of the Corcoran Art Gallery.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Would not that location be as far from the Interior Department and the Post-Office Department as the location we propose?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Just as far; but very much nearer to the other large Departments.

There is no sense whatever in confounding books and vouchers, which constitute what may be called records of the Government, with the documents issued by Congress. Let those two matters be kept entirely distinct; and we shall accomplish what will conduce to the wants of the Departments and will at the same time meet the demands of Congress.

Mr. PICKLER. As I understand, the gentleman wants to erect two buildings—one for the documents of Congress, the other for the records of the Departments.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. This hall of records would be designed simply for the Government Departments, but the House committee, differing from the Senate, proposes to make a jumble of the whole thing, and place a building in a location where it ought not to be for the purpose of meeting both purposes. These two objects have nothing in common, and they should be kept separate; and the buildings whenever erected should be erected separately.

Mr. PICKLER. I would like the gentleman to explain how there is to be any economy in buying ground in two different places and erecting two great public buildings, rather than buying a single location and erecting a building suitable for both purposes.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I have not in any sense proposed to erect two buildings. I have only said that if it was necessary that would be the more proper course. And if it is necessary to have two large buildings, one for the use of Congress and the other for the use of the Executive Departments, I know no reason why they should not be erected; and it would really cost no more to erect two than to erect one, because there would, of course, be in the two buildings no more space than it would be necessary to have for both purposes in a single building.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to straighten out my friend on this proposition, if I can.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I would be very glad to have the gentleman do so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman seems to have the idea that our proposition is to erect or use jointly a building for the storage of official files of the different Departments, and also the records and documents of Congress. Now, the simple, plain proposition is that upon that portion of the lot which is not occupied by the building in which we are now storing the documents of Congress this hall of records shall be built; separate and apart from the building which we are using; having no connection with it; a separate building, to be used exclusively as a place for storing the files of the Departments of the Government.

At the same time we have for the storage of our documents and for a folding room the building which I have already described; a building exactly suited to the purpose, and which I guarantee the Government of the United States, under its system of erecting public buildings, could not construct for $100,000. That building we do not propose to touch or to change in any way, for it is exactly what we want. Now, where is the jumble in that?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I will tell you. Beside the building which you propose to use for the purposes of Congress, you propose to buy this additional land from the railroad company and erect, at an average distance of a mile and a quarter from the Departments, a building which is designed exclusively for the daily use of those existing Departments. There is where the jumble is. I think that project is entirely and completely improper.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask unanimous consent that general debate be considered as closed.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the first section of the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, for and in the name of the United States, at a cost not to exceed $300,000, for the purposes and in the manner hereinafter provided, the following described real estate, with the improvements thereon, known and designated as original lots numbered 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 20, and 21, in square numbered 635, city of Washington, District of Columbia, and containing, with the alleys to be utilized, 92,508 square feet, more or less, and being bounded on the north by B street south, and on the west by First street west; and the said Secretary is hereby instructed to cause to be erected (under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army), upon that portion of said above-described property as is embraced in lots 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13, and the alley abutting on said lots, and which alley is hereby declared to be closed for such purpose, at a cost not to exceed $200,000, a suitable fireproof building, to be used as a hall of records for the safekeeping of such valuable records of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the Government as in the judgment of the heads of such departments are not required for constant reference, and the balance of said property, as embraced in lots 6, 7, 20, and 21, is to be used for storage rooms and folding rooms for the House of Representatives and for such other purposes as may be hereafter determined.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to offer an amendment to this section, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5 strike out "three hundred" and insert "two hundred and seventy-five," so that it will read, "not to exceed $275,000."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I also move to strike out lots 20 and 21, in lines 9 and 10. These lots will not be very valuable for the purpose contemplated.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "two hundred and seventy-five" and insert "one hundred and fifty," so that it will read, "$150,000."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, if the House thinks proper to adopt this amendment it is very evident to everybody except the gentleman from Nebraska that this is the end of it. Now, you can not buy the property for that sum, and nobody who has any knowledge of real estate in the city of Washington would expect such a thing. And I may add that nobody who has any proper regard for the public interests would suggest such an amendment as that to this bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the gentleman will permit an interruption just in that connection, I wish to ask a question for information which may have been developed during my absence at the Senate. I want to know the price per foot of this property, if $275,000 is allowed for the land?

Mr. BANKHEAD. About $3 a foot. This property, as I have stated, is almost entirely covered with buildings. There is one vacant lot, a small one.

Mr. McMILLIN. Have you any information as to the cost of the buildings?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The buildings of the Georgetown Street Railway Company, the stable, which is a part of the property proposed to be acquired, and which is now being used for storage, having been fitted up for that purpose, was represented to the committee to have cost $75,000.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is it fireproof in its present condition?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Perfectly; from the outside.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is it suitable for the purpose contemplated and capable of being properly heated and ventilated? I know the building was erected for and applied to other purposes.

Mr. BANKHEAD: Oh, yes; we have already fitted up a folding room there. The building outside of that—the second story—we would not probably want to use, and there may be some difficulty in heating it. I do not see any necessity for it, however. It will be only necessary to make provision in that regard for that part of the building where the employés would be at work.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is it contemplated to put valuable records in this building, such as the records of the Land Office, and the Pension Office, and the War Department, when they become too numerous for storage in their respective Departments?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, no.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then this proposition could be more properly designated as a hall of documents than of records.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; for we propose to erect on the remaining part of the lot—that part not now occupied by the present structure—a hall of records. In other words there are some 55,000 feet unoccupied that we propose to erect this building upon.

Mr. COOMBS. Will that be in the corner?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; on the corner up this way.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is the gentleman able to state the current price of unimproved property in that locality?

Mr. BANKHEAD. A gentleman stated here that he was offered a vacant lot for 90 cents a foot, and said that such property could be bought there for that price. I think it would not be such property as would be suitable for the purpose contemplated here, however.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no information as to the value of lands around there, but I had supposed the price the gentleman fixes, $3 a foot, would be quite a high valuation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That would be true of vacant property; but this includes a valuable building.

Mr. PICKLER. Let me ask the gentleman if the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have carefully gone over this subject and have examined the price, taking into consideration the location and all other questions bearing upon the subject?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, yes; we went down and personally examined it.

Mr. PICKLER. Is it the judgment of the committee that this is a reasonable price for the property?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; and we so report.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Is that building on the ground now any more fireproof than any other ordinary brick building?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know as to that. It has a slate roof, a thick brick wall, and I suppose it is as nearly fireproof as a brick building can be.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Yes; as nearly fireproof as any brick building that will easily burn.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I have already stated, it may be that the vacant lot included amongst these lots—and they belong to other parties, for these lots do not all belong to the Georgetown Railroad Company, and that seems to be a mistake into which some gentlemen have fallen; that company only own the lot upon which the building is located—I say, as to the vacant lots, it may be that the price would be considered a high one. There is a vacant lot there, and a gentleman has an option upon it at a price, I think, of $1.35; but I will guarantee that he will not make $10,000 on his option if this bill passes. And you all know that it is the only way by which you can get a square of land together in the city of Washington—for somebody to undertake to get an option upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McMILLIN. Inasmuch as the gentleman has been interrupted, I ask that his time be extended five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. COOMBS. I understand the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to say that some one has an option on all this property?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. COOMBS. And that you have been talking with this person?

Mr. BANKHEAD. He filed his statement with the committee, showing the price of each piece of property—which he had agreed to pay for it.

Mr. COOMBS. There are provisions in the bill for the condemnation of the property, are there not?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course. The Secretary of the Treasury can not pay more than $275,000 under the bill as amended. He can negotiate for it for that, or he can condemn it, but he can not pay any more than $275,000 under condemnation proceedings.

Mr. COOMBS. Could the property that is owned by the Georgetown Railroad Company be purchased separately for the use of a folding room? As I understand, that would be just about large enough for a folding room, according to the gentleman's idea.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, I do not know about that. I could not answer the question whether it could be purchased separately or not.

Mr. COOMBS. The reason for my asking the question is that while I think it might be a very good place for a folding room, it does not strike me as being peculiarly favorable for a storage room.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I know the option filed with the committee showed that he had an option on the Georgetown Railroad property, for which he agreed to pay $200,000.

Mr. LYNCH. I see that the price proposed to be paid for the property by this bill, with the building on it, is about $3 per foot. Now, under your amendment, which fixes the limit at $275,000, and estimating the cost or value of the building now on the premises at $75,000, that would leave the price of the ground itself about $2 per foot.

Mr. COOMBS. I understand the gentleman does not give that as his positive estimate, that that brick stable is worth $75,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. They said it cost between $65,000 and $75,000.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Does that include both buildings on that corner, the one that faces on B street as well as the other?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. WASHINGTON. And they say it cost $75,000?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I have not been through the building, but it seems to me it is not worth more than half that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman had been through it, he would see that it is an immense building.

Mr. WASHINGTON. How many square feet are there in the lot which it is proposed to buy?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Ninety-six thousand square feet in the property we propose to buy.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I have not asked any real-estate agent about the price of adjoining property, but even with that building there, estimating that at $75,000, it seems to me that is a high price for that ground. Does not the gentlemen think it could be condemned by proceedings in court?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am perfectly willing to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to condemn it, without fixing any price, as far as I am personally concerned.

Mr. McMILLIN. Recurring to the point on which the gentleman touched a moment ago, if the records from the offices that he mentioned are not to go there, what records is it contemplated to put there?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Nothing is to go into the building we are talking about now, except the documents belonging to the House of Representatives. There are now five or six hundred thousand volumes stored away in the basement, which it it said must be moved.

Mr. McMILLIN. We have been trying to provide a means for the distribution of those documents, and I think that is the proper method of getting rid of a good deal of the junk in the basement.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That may be true, but the gentleman knows that we always have a large accumulation of documents.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is true, and it strikes me that this amount is a large sum to pay for the construction of a hall for this purpose, when it is only a question of time, and a very short time, before we shall be compelled to build an expensive fireproof building for the purpose of having a place to store our valuable records.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is exactly what we are proposing to do. We propose to erect, on the balance of this lot, not occupied by this storehouse, this hall of records for the storing of these valuable documents you are talking about.

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to call the attention of the House to the wording of this bill. The estimate given here of 92,658 square feet includes the alley to be utilized.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is one small alley.

Mr. BRYAN. An alley 30 feet wide runs all around it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It does not run all around it. It is about 6,000 feet, I think.

Mr. BRYAN. Six thousand feet, which is more than 5 per cent of the entire amount, consists of an alley that we do not have to buy. The amount of land in these two lots stricken off amounts to nearly 15,000 feet. The sum of $25,000 has been taken off the total which it is proposed to pay—a reduction of $25,000 for a reduction of 15,000 square feet—so that when you come to figure up the pay for the amount left, it will run nearer to $1 a square foot than to $3 a square foot; and one of the members of the House has stated to the House that he had an opportunity to get a part of this same land for 90 cents a square foot within a year, and everyone knows that land is cheaper now than it was a year ago.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if we amend this bill so as to limit the amount to be paid to $150,000, we shall leave all that will be necessary with which to buy this property, if we want to buy it, when the people find out that they can not get more. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] says that whenever we attempt to buy anything, people raise their price to three or four times the value of the property. Because they do that is no reason why the Government should appropriate three or four times the value of the property.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will ask the gentleman if he would be willing to accept an amendment simply providing that the Secretary of the Treasury shall condemn this property, without fixing any price upon it in the bill?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I think the bill as it came from the Senate had no limitation whatever as to price.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; you are right; but it did not select any site.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am perfectly willing to consent to an amendment providing simply that the Secretary of the Treasury be empowered to condemn the property and take it at whatever price he can get it. I shall be glad to do that, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. BRYAN. I shall not accept that amendment. I think it would be better to fix it, because we are now fixing more than the property is worth, measuring the value by surrounding property.

In view of the fact that the committee have attempted to select a particular piece of land, and inasmuch as they have attempted to fix the price so high, I think it would be better to meet them on their own ground and fix the price so that the holders can not demand too much; and taking into consideration the value of the surrounding property, I believe we are justified in the conclusion that $150,000 will be a sufficient sum, when the people find out that they can not get any more.

We ought not by our legislation to encourage the raising of the price of property in anticipation of purchase by the Government. It seems to me that the explanation given by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is a sufficient explanation of the amount fixed in this bill. He states that we can not expect to buy land for what it is worth, and that it is customary to raise the price.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that we can buy this land for what it is worth, if we need to buy it at all. If we want the land, I think we can get it for $150,000. But I hope that when we reach another part of the bill, we shall decide to place this building on Government land, and not buy any private property that we do not need.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska, fixing the amount at $150,000.

Mr. PICKLER. I want to ask the gentleman from Nebraska a question.

Mr. BRYAN. I will yield to a question.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman talks about evidence. What evidence has the gentleman that this property can be bought for $150,000?

Mr. BRYAN. One member of the House stated that he was offered one lot included in this site, facing on B street, at 90 cents a square foot. It was also stated that the buildings only cost $65,000 to $75,000; and yet they want to buy a building already constructed, constructed at a time when it cost more to build than it does now, and place the estimate at the highest point given as the cost of the construction by the people who want to sell.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. And that a stable.

Mr. BRYAN. And that a stable.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to what I believe to be a wrong policy we are pursuing. Some time ago, when we were discussing the question of the selection of a site for the erection of a new Government Printing Office, I took sides against the report of the committee and voted to locate the building upon public ground.

After I had done so it occurred to me that perhaps I had not been as wise as I ought to have been as a legislator; and then I took occasion to inform myself. I tramped over the public grounds myself a great deal; and I made up my mind, after having tramped miles, that the committee knew more about this matter than I did, and that I had done an unwise thing in voting against its recommendation. I came back to the House and examined the membership of that committee and saw no reason why we should not have confidence that they would do an honest and wise thing.

I looked over the constitution of the committee, and I thought that the House ought to follow the advice of that committee.

If we are going to put up any public buildings we have to follow the lead of somebody. It is admitted that we need this building. I do not know. I take it for granted that we do need it. Now, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that we are going to do an unwise thing if we stand up here and repudiate everything that the committee recommends. As wise men, it seems to me, we must follow that committee as we do other committees; and I do not see why we can not do so after they have made their examination.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Then you have changed your opinion.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I have changed my opinion; and I think I voted wrong.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Certainly.

Mr. PICKLER. Is it not the gentleman's experience, the same as that of every other member, that after this committee make a report recommending that a certain price be paid for a particular piece of property some other gentleman always finds that it can be bought for half of that?

Mr. NORTHWAY. I am not charging weakness upon anybody, but I was guilty of weakness on one occasion. I thought I knew better than the committee did; but after I had tramped all over the public grounds I made up my mind that the committee knew more than I did, and that I had done an unwise thing in voting against their recommendation.

Now, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this is a matter of compromise. The bill proposes to leave it in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury. Ordinarily he is not a fool or a scoundrel.

Mr. COOMBS. It does not leave it in the hands of the Secretary. It instructs them to buy this property.

Mr. NORTHWAY. It authorizes the condemnation of the property. Now, the chairman makes a fair proposition. He moves to strike out all the figures and leave the Secretary power to condemn. I think we ought to compromise on that. We can not stand here and fight in this way. That will not do, and we ought to acknowledge that fact. I think it is wrong. I can not carry out my idea of what property ought to be bought. It is not wise that I should attempt it. The committee has done hard work in this matter; and I submit that it is the part of wisdom on the part of this committee to stand by the committee having this matter in charge. Let us strike out the $275,000 and accept the proposition made by the chairman of the committee, leaving it alone with the Secretary of the Treasury to fight this thing and condemn the property. If we are to have this building, let us have it, and get rid of our personal feelings in this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. COOMBS. I ask that it be read.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BRYAN. Division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BLACK of Georgia. What is the amendment, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposes to fix the amount at $150,000. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Nebraska, fixing amount at $150,000.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 41.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by making it $175,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think we had better strike out the amount named in this bill. I am perfectly willing to do so, and leave it entirely with the Secretary of the Treasury to condemn this property.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Why should we leave it to the Secretary of the Treasury to condemn this property when the Senate bill, for which this bill is a substitute, constitutes a commission composed of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Treasury to locate and condemn?

Mr. BANKHEAD My objection to that is that it seems to me that Congress, while it is in session, and especially while it has so distinguished a gentleman as my friend over the way to aid it in a decision, may be able to make as good a selection for a public building as any commission.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We have selected this site, and let the Secrstary have it condemned.

Mr. BYNUM. By leaving it open we would have competition. By closing it now there can be no competition.

Mr. BRETZ. And you would have a pool.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska, fixing the amount at $175,000.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BRYAN. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 35.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let us have tellers.

Mr. TRACEY. I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The tellers took their places, and pending the count,

Mr. TRACEY said: I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I renew it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire renews the point of no quorum, and tellers will resume their places.

After further count, tellers reported—ayes 31, noes 62.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. No quorum.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. I would like to ask whether or not the tellers are on the same side of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no information on that point. The gentleman from New York made the point that no quorum had voted.

On this question the ayes are 31, the noes are 62. The gentleman from New Hampshire insists on the point of no quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, when the following-named members failed to respond:

Aitken,	Ellis, Oregon	Kilgore,	Schermerhorn,

The roll call being concluded, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (S. 22) making appropriations for the purchase of ground and the erection thereon, in the city of Washington, D. C., of a building to be used as a hall of records, had found itself without a quorum; whereupon, in accordance with the rule, the chairman had caused the roll to be called, and now reported to the House the names of the absentees, to be entered on the Journal.

The SPEAKER. One hundred and ninety members, being a quorum, have answered to their names. Under the rule the Committee of the Whole will resume its session.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. DOCKERY in the chair), and resumed the consideration of Senate bill No. 22.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska. The tellers will resume their places.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 40, noes 72.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and the following-named members failed to answer:

The SPEAKER. One hundred and seventy-two members have answered to their names.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. No quorum.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. LINTON. I ask that my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] be excused from the session of to-day on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. BANKHEAD was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. LOUD, from the Committee on Claims: A bill (H. R. 7434) directing the issue of a duplicate of a lost check drawn by Capt. W. H. Bixby, Engineers, United States Army, at Newport, R. I., in favor of Stout, Hall & Bangs. (Report No. 1182.)

By Mr. STONE of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims: A bill (H. R. 5121) for the relief of H. P. Bennett. (Report No. 1183.)

Mr. LACEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted a supplementary report (No. 1096) on the bill (H. R. 4850) to increase the pension of Marcus D. Box; which was ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. KIEFER, from the Committee on Claims, reported adversely the bill (H. R. 6443) for relief of Stout, Hall & Bangs; which, with the accompanying report (No. 1183), was ordered to be printed and laid on the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4258) to restore Lieut. Samuel Howard to his proper rank, and H. R. 642, of the same title, and the same were referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. McRAE: A bill (H. R. 7590) to ratify certain farm improvement in the Indian Territory—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BURROWS: A joint resolution (H. Res. 197) for the relief of W. D. Mack, a clerk in the Record and Pension Division of the War Department—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee: A joint resolution (H. Res. 198) to print Agricultural Report for 1894—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. STORER: A resolution of the General Assembly of Ohio, relative to the centennial of the conquest of the Indian nations—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts: A resolution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, relative to the suppression of the lottery traffic—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a resolution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, relative to the extermination of the gypsy moth—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, a resolution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, relative to the appointment and removal of veterans in the national civil service—to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. BOEN: A bill (H. R. 7591) making appropriations for survey of the Minnesota River and the Red River of the North and tributaries above Fergus Falls and Crookston, Minn., and for other purposes—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. COX: A bill (H. R. 7592) for the relief of the trustees of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of Pulaski, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7593) for the relief of Rhoda Rucker of Tennessee—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ENLOE: A bill (H. R. 7594) for allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies, etc.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FIELDER: A bill (H. R. 7595) for the relief of Col. George W. Getty—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McETTRICK: A bill (H. R. 7596) to increase the pension of Frances F. Gockeritz—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7597) to pension Maurice O'Flanigan, of South Boston, Mass.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PATTERSON: A bill (H. R. 7598) for the relief of the estate of Richard Cox, deceased, late of Fayette County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RITCHIE: A bill (H. R. 7599) to correct the military record of Dr. George W. Bowen—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STONE of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 7600) for the relief of Benjamin B. Rhoads—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TURNER of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 7601) for the relief of the estate of Henry M. Baker, deceased, late of Frederick County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7602) to pension Mary R. Williams—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WEVER: A bill (H. R. 7603) for the relief of Charles Deal—to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. COGSWELL: Petition of A. A. Sharpley and others, of Salem, Mass., against income tax on certain beneficiary societies—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of John W. Jewett and others, of Danvers, Mass., against a tax on incomes of certain beneficiary societies—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. COOMBS: Petition of W. H. Allen and A. H. Desborough, of Brooklyn, N. Y., for the enactment of a law whereby the Secretary of the Treasury shall be empowered to charge a premium on all gold withdrawn from the Treasury for export to foreign countries—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ENGLISH of California: Two petitions of N. G. Sturlevant and others, of California, in the interest of fraternal society and college journals—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of J. H. Chipman and others, in the interest of fraternal society and college journals—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GORMAN: Petition and papers to accompany House bill 6759—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina: Resolutions of the Produce Exchange of Wilmington, N. C., urging a national exhibit at Atlanta, Ga.—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois: Petition of J. D. Rickerd and others, of Illinois, against income tax on certain beneficiary societies—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MORGAN: Petition of Newton Boughn, to accompany House bill 7589—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers to accompany House bill 7587 and House bill 7588—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MITCHLER: Two petitions of citizens of Bethlehem, Pa., favoring an amendment to the income tax, that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations, operating on the lodge system shall be exempt from all the provisions of this bill requiring taxation in any form—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STEVENS: Petition of 14 citizens of Peabody, Mass., praying for exemption from taxation of all fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STORER: Resolutions of Toledo Produce Exchange, for passage of House bill 7402—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Also, resolutions of Cincinnati Board of Trade, in favor of increased fast-mail facilities between Cincinnati and the South—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. VAN VOORHIS of Ohio: Resolutions of the Board of Lumber Dealers of Cleveland, Ohio, indorsing the project of a ship canal to connect Lake Erie with the Ohio River—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. WILSON of Washington: Petition of 68 citizens of Seattle, Wash., favoring an amendment to the income tax that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations operating on the lodge system shall be exempt from all the provisions of this bill requiring taxation in any form—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of Typographical Union, of Seattle, Wash., favorable to House bill 4478—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 29, 1894.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when,

On motion of Mr. FAULKNER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 20th inst., a statement of the visible and invisible supply of wheat likely to be in the United States on July 1, 1894, together with certain information concerning the crops of 1894; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills received yesterday from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 199) to authorize the Secretary of War to appoint a board of review in certain cases; and

A bill (H. R. 6039) to reimburse John Nelson for money paid in 1863 to avoid a draft.

The bill (H. R. 6447) to fix a term of the Federal district and circuit courts of the southern judicial district of Mississippi, to be held at Meridian, Miss., to include the counties named, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CULLOM presented a memorial of sundry wire workers of St. Louis, Mo., remonstrating against the adoption of the so-called Allen amendment to the pending tariff bill, by which barbed fence wire is to be placed upon the free list; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Gilroy, Cal., praying for an international bimetallic convention; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented sundry petitions of citizens of San Francisco, Cal., praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of 44 woolgrowers of Ohio, remonstrating against a reduction of the present duty on wool; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade and Transportation of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for a fast mail service between Cincinnati and the South; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE presented the petition of G. F. Saunders and 19 other citizens of York Beach, Me., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BATE presented a petition of 117 members of Parnassus Council, No. 466, Royal Arcanum, of Columbia, Tenn., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry dealers, rehandlers, and repackers of leaf tobacco, of Tennessee, remonstrating against the passage of the clause in the pending tariff bill relating to leaf tobacco; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MILLS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Dallas, Tex., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of 36 citizens of Cumberland County, Me., praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of 28 citizens of Danforth, Me., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DANIEL presented the petition of Robert Strother and sundry other citizens of Lynchburg, Va., and the petition of Isaac Skarrett, H. C. Jones, and sundry other citizens of Bristol, Va., praying that the funds of mutual loan and building associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. PROCTOR, March 20, 1894, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 28th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and be printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. CAMERON on the 13th instant, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and be printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Rules, reported an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HUNTON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 26th instant, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 16th instant, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and be printed; which was agreed to.

NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 193) to appoint three members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, to report it favorably without amendment, and as it is a matter of some urgency and I think there can be no objection to the joint resolution, I ask that it be considered at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read for information.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That Charles M. Anderson, of Greenville, Darke County, Ohio; Sidney G. Cooke, of Herington, Dickerson County, Kans.; and A. L. Pearson, of Pittsburg, Pa., be, and the same hereby are, appointed as members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers of the United States. Charles M. Anderson to succeed Gen. A. L. Barnett, whose term of service has expired; Sidney G. Cooke to succeed Maj. E. N. Morrill, whose term of service has expired; and A. L. Pearson to succeed himself, his term of service having expired. All to take effect from and after the passage of this resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MINNEAPOLIS GAS LIGHT COMPANY.

Mr. WASHBURN. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7449) authorizing the Minneapolis Gas Light Company, of Minneapolis, Minn., to lay submerged gas pipes across the Mississippi River at Minneapolis, to report it without amendment. I ask the Senate to consider the bill at the present time, as it will take but a moment.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2166) to increase the pension of Andrew R. Jones; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 2167) granting the use of certain land to the town of Castine, Me., for a public park; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 2168) granting a pension to Kate C. McDougal; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SQUIRE introduced a bill (S. 2169) fixing the times when regulating the manner in which, and declaring the character of the accounts which shall be hereafter stated to the Treasury Department for settlement between the United States and the several public-land States relative to the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands made and to be made therein by the United States, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 2170) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses, and fulfilling treaty stipulations with Indian tribes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 2171) for the relief of John A. Fairfax, of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. FAULKNER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DIXON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAFFERY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLACKBURN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Depredations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MARTIN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

JUDGMENTS IN INDIAN DEPREDATION CASES.

Mr. DOLPH submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to transmit to the Senate a list of the judgments rendered in the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases since the last report submitted in pursuance of Senate resolution of April 14, 1894, together with a statement of the date when each was rendered, in whose favor rendered, the amount in each case, and the aggregate amount.

USE OF RENTED CARS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. SHERMAN, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce is hereby instructed to inquire into the expediency of regulating by law the employment and use of sleeping and parlor cars, not owned by railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce, the cost of operating them, the charges made for their use, and what would be a reasonable charge for the seats, berths, and sections therein.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution continuing the appropriations for the expenses of the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of the Government.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 196) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to commit the joint resolution to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have a motion pending to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution continuing the appropriations for the support of the Government.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri, from the Committee on Appropriations, reports favorably a joint resolution which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (H. Res. 196) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.

Mr. COCKRELL. By request of the Committee on Appropriations, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That all appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government, and of the District of Columbia, and for the payment of pensions, under existing laws, which shall remain unprovided for on the 30th day of June, 1894, be, and they are hereby, continued and made available for a period of thirty days from and after that date, unless the regular appropriations provided therefor in bills now pending in Congress shall have been previously made for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895; and a sufficient amount is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry on the same: Provided, That no greater amount shall be expended for such operations than will be in the same proportion to the appropriations for the fiscal year 1894 as thirty days' time bears to the whole of said fiscal year: Provided further, That the total expenditures for the whole of the fiscal year 1895, under the several appropriations hereby continued, and under the several appropriation bills now pending, shall not exceed in the aggregate the amounts finally appropriated therefor in the several bills now pending, except in cases where a change is made in the annual, monthly, or per diem compensation, or in the numbers of officers, clerks, or other persons authorized to be employed by the several appropriations hereby continued, in which cases the amounts authorized to be expended shall equal thirty three-hundred-and-sixty-fifths of the appropriations for the fiscal year 1894, and three hundred and thirty-five three-hundred-and-sixty fifths of the appropriations contained in the several bills now pending when the same shall have been finally passed, unless the salary or compensation of any office shall be increased or diminished without changing the grade or the duties thereof, in which case such salary or compensation shall relate to the entire fiscal year and run from the beginning thereof: Provided further, That the session employés of the Senate and House of Representatives now authorized by law, shall be continued upon the rolls until the end of the present session of Congress and paid at the rate per diem or month at which they are now paid; and a sufficient amount is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to pay the same: Provided further, That there be and is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated a sum sufficient to enable the Clerk of the House to pay to Members and Delegates the amount which they certify they have paid or agreed to pay for clerk hire necessarily employed by them in the discharge of their official and representative duties, as provided in the joint resolution approved March 3, 1823, until the end of the present session of Congress.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: Mr. President, I rise to a privileged motion. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the House joint resolution continuing the appropriations of the Government. I desire to be permitted to say a few words on the motion, and then I shall withdraw it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. HOAR. I had made up my mind not to interpose any further objection to the passage of the joint resolution, but I owe it to myself to say that if I had had my own way I should not have consented to it, notwithstanding the public inconvenience which might have been occasioned from a failure to make the public appropriations in this way under the present circumstances.

The reason for this extraordinary proceeding, making in the twinkling of an eye, without consideration by any committee, the appropriations for carrying on the Government for a twelfth of the entire year, is that the dominant party have compelled us to give our attention for three months to a tariff bill which has never been considered in committee at all. So the Senate has been doing committee work in a clumsy and crude way for the last two or three months. If conducting the opposition, I should myself be perfectly satisfied to say that we would not permit it, and we would appeal to the country for our vindication in insisting upon decent and becoming methods of legislation.

I think there is no public desire for the passage of the tariff bill which would make any human being find fault with us for doing so. But I know that Senators here on the Republican side, especially the members of the Committee on Finance upon this side, are carrying on their shoulders a very heavy burden of responsibility and under very difficult circumstances.

I know that they are gentlemen whose judgment as to what is the proper method of resisting the tariff bill is not only better than mine, but is understood to be much better than mine by my political associates who have placed them in a position where that duty devolves upon them. Therefore I have not felt like taking the responsibility of insisting upon an individual judgment without the concurrence of the wisest and best-informed of my political associates, and I do not insist on the position which I stated yesterday. I withdraw the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider is withdrawn.

SUITS UNDER EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. KYLE. I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration the bill (S. 346) to remove the bar of the statute of limitations and give the right of appeal in certain cases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the statute of limitation shall not be interposed in any suit brought by any laborer, workman, or mechanic in the Court of Claims against the United States to recover wages claimed to be due him under the national eight-hour law: Provided, That such suits shall be commenced within three years from the passage of this act: And provided further, That any number of claimants may join in the same suit, and the court may find in favor of some and against some, as in law and equity may be right, and both the claimants and the United States shall have the right to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, irrespective of the amount claimed.

Mr. HILL. I desire to inquire what committee reported the bill?

Mr. KYLE. I will state that it was reported unanimously by the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HILL. Should it not have gone to the Judiciary Committee? It is a question involving the statute of limitations and involving the course of procedure in the Federal courts.

Mr. KYLE. The bill was passed by the Senate last year on the favorable report of the Committee on Education and Labor, and a similar bill has been passed by the Senate six or seven times without objection.

Mr. HILL. That may be; but somehow or other it has not passed both Houses. I think the bill deserves some more consideration than it may have had. I wish the Senator would not insist upon its consideration this morning.

Mr. KYLE. If the Senator objects, of course the bill will go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HILL. I object to its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. KYLE. I ask that the bill may retain its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNITS OF ELECTRICAL MEASURE.

Mr. TURPIE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6500) to define and establish the units of electrical measure.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was read.

Mr. HALE. What committee does the bill come from?

Mr. MORGAN. It comes from the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is a bill which has passed the other House.

Mr. HALE. I notice clauses in it in reference to electricity, but I did not catch their full force. Has it any local application?

Mr. MORGAN. None whatever. It provides a national measurement of the force of electricity.

Mr. HALE. Then it is all right.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, line 5, after the word "be," to insert "what is known as;" so as to read:

First. The unit of resistance shall be what is known as the international ohm, which is substantially equal to one thousand million units of resistance of the centimer-gram-second system of electro-magnetic units, and is represented by the resistance offered to an unvarying electric current by a column of mercury at the temperature of melting ice fourteen and four thousand five hundred and twenty-one ten thousandths grams in mass, of a constant cross-sectional area, and of the length of one hundred and six and three-tenths centimeters.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 14, after the word "be," to insert "what is known as;" so as to read:

Second. The unit of current shall be what is known as the international ampère, which is one-tenth of the unit of current of the centimeter-gram-second system of electro-magnetic units, and is the practical equivalent of the unvarying current, which, when passed through a solution of nitrate of silver in water in accordance with standard specifications, deposits silver at the rate of one thousand one hundred and eighteen millionths of a gram per second.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 22, after the word "be," to insert "what is known as;" so as to read:

Third. The unit of electro-motive force shall be what is known as the international volt, which is the electro-motive force that, steadily applied to a conductor whose resistance is one international ohm, will produce a current of an international ampère, and is practically equivalent to one thousand fourteen hundred and thirty-fourths of the electro-motive force between the poles or electrodes of the voltaic cell known as Clark's cell, at a temperature of 15° centigrade, and prepared in the manner described in the standard specifications.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 1, page 2, line 31, after the word "be," to insert "what is known as," and in line 33, after the word "by," to insert "a;" so as to read:

Fourth. The unit of quantity shall be what is known as the international coulomb, which is the quantity of electricity transferred by a current of one international ampere in one second.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 1, page 2, line 34, after the word "be," to insert "what is known as;" so as to read:

Fifth. The unit of capacity shall be what is known as the international farad, which is the capacity of a condenser charged to a potential of one international volt by one international coulomb of electricity.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 1, line 38, to capitalize the letter beginning the word "joule," so as to read:

Sixth. The unit of work shall be the Joule, which is equal to ten million units of work in the centimeter-gram-second system, and which is practically equivalent to the energy expended in one second by an international ampere in an international ohm.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 1, page 3, line 43, to capitalize the letter beginning the word "watt," and in line 46 to capitalize the letter beginning the word "joule," so as to read:

Seventh. The unit of power shall be the Watt, which is equal to ten million units of power in the centimeter-gram-second system, and which is practically equivalent to the work done at the rate of one Joule per second.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 3, line 47, to capitalize the letter beginning the word "henry," and in line 50, to capitalize the letter beginning the word "ampere;" so as to read:

Eighth. The unit of induction shall be the Henry, which is the induction in a circuit when the electro-motive force induced in this circuit is one international volt while the inducing current varies at the rate of one Ampere per second.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1963) for the relief of the sureties of Dennis Murphy.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 725) for the relief of the trustees of the Presbyterian Church of Bethel Springs, Tenn.; and

A bill (H. R. 6529) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the St. Croix River between Wisconsin and Minnesota.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to transmit to the House of Representatives any reports that may have been received since his last annual report pertaining to the improvement on the Minnesota River in the State of Minnesota; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 196) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 28th instant approved and signed the act (S. 730) making Labor Day a legal holiday.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 725) for the relief of the trustees of the Presbyterian Church of Bethel Springs, Tenn., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 6529) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the St. Croix River between Wisconsin and Minnesota was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

MINNESOTA RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed to transmit to the House of Representatives any reports that may have been received since his last annual report pertaining to the improvement on the Minnesota River in the State of Minnesota.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of half past 10 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator give way to me a moment?

Mr. HALE. I wish to make a motion to strike out section 104, but I give way to the Senator.

Mr. HILL. I desire to ask the Senators in charge of the bill whether it is proposed to go back and supply any small defects which may have occurred in the bill before it is reported to the Senate?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. A number of paragraphs have been passed over, to which the committee intend to return before the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. HILL. Then I shall waive for the present the amendment I was going to offer.

Mr. HALE. I move to strike out section 104.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The section has not yet been read. After the section has been read and the amendments proposed by the Committee on Finance have been acted upon, the Chair will entertain the motion of the Senator.

The Secretary read section (89) 104, as follows:

'SEC. (89) 104. That section 3 of an act approved October 1, 1890, entitled 'pAn act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," is hereby repealed, and that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed, but the repeal of existing laws or modifications thereof embraced in this act shall not affect any act done, or any right accruing or accrued, or any suit or proceeding had or commenced in any civil cause before the said repeal or modifications; but all rights and liabilities under said laws shall continue and may be enforced in the same manner as if said repeal or modifications had not been made. Any offenses committed and all penalties or forfeitures or liabilities incurred prior to the passage of this act under any statute embraced in or changed, modified, or repealed by this act may be prosecuted or punished in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed. All acts of limitation, whether applicable to civil causes and proceedings or to the prosecution of offenses or for the recovery or penalties or forfeitures embraced in or modified, changed, or repealed by this act shall not be affected thereby; and all suits, proceedings, or prosecutions, whether civil or criminal, for causes arising or acts done or committed prior to the passage of this act, may be commenced and prosecuted within the same time and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal the provisions of section 3068 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act approved February 23, 1887, in respect to the abandonment of merchandise to underwriters of the salvors of property, and the ascertainment of duties thereon.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend the section, in line 19, after the first word "That," to strike out "section" and insert "sections;" in the same line, after the word "three," to insert "fifteen and sixteen;" in line 22, after the word "purposes," to strike out "is" and insert "are;" in line 23, before the word "all," to strike out "that;" and after the word "all" to insert "agreements or arrangements made or proclaimed between the United States and foreign governments under the provisions of said section are hereby abrogated, of which the President shall give such notice to the authorities of said foreign governments as may be required by the terms of such agreements or arrangements."

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator allow me to modify this amendment on the part of the committee before he addresses the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HALE. I should prefer to go on now, because I am called away; but I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VEST. I simply want to place the amendment as it will be proposed before the Senate, so that the Senator can address himself to the real issue. The committee move to strike out in line 19, after the first word "That," the word "sections" and insert "section;" in the same line, after the word "three," to strike out "fifteen and sixteen;" in line 22, to change the word "are" to "is;" and in line 23, after the word "repealed," to strike out the remainder of the section and insert what I have sent to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee, as now proposed by the Senator from Missouri, will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section [89] 104, after the first word "that," it is proposed to strike out "sections" and insert "section;" in the same line, after the word "three," to strike out "fifteen and sixteen;" in line 22, after the word "purposes," to strike out "are" and insert "is;" and in line 23, after the word "repealed," to strike out:

And that all agreements or arrangements made or proclaimed between the United States and foreign governments under the provisions of said section are hereby abrogated, of which the President shall give such notice to the authorities of said foreign governments as may be required by the terms of such agreements or arrangements.

And insert:

But nothing herein contained shall be held to abrogate or in any way affect such reciprocal commercial arrangements as have been heretofore made and now exist between the United States and foreign countries, except where such arrangements are inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] as the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the only effect of this amendment will be to raise a question of doubt as to the abrogation of all the reciprocity agreements which have been made, with such happy results, with different nations of Europe and of South and Central America. It is another instance of the difficulty which we all find in following the sinuous course which the committee pursues upon these subjects-matter. Whether or not the amendment now presented for the first time by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], just as the subject is to be debated, does abrogate the reciprocity agreements, is a question. The clause, as the Senate has seen it for the last two weeks, was clear and distinct.

By one fell swoop the whole fabric of reciprocity, with all its favorable results to American trade, was struck down. I have little or no doubt that the interpretation of the amendment now submitted by the Senator from Missouri will be the same, and that this change of form, that the reciprocity arrangements shall not be abrogated unless they are inconsistent with the general terms of this act, will be construed as operating their destruction.

Mr. President, I do not propose at this late day and at this late hour to consume much of the time of the Senate upon this proposition. The measure of the bill has been taken by the country, and the two parties will stand or fall upon it. I do not suppose that any appeal now made to save this most wise and liberal feature of the McKinley act will be of any avail. Senators upon the other side have consolidated their ranks; they have broken down the opposition with hardly an exception. I do not know whether there are now more than one or two independent men upon that side; but the majority will secure sufficient votes for the passage of this bill, with every blow that it strikes at American industries.

The bill has been changed in some features. Senators who are half protectionists have stood before the committee and before the party caucus with pistol in hand and have demanded and enforced terms which apply to local industries, but, generally speaking, the great industries of the country by this bill are threatened and to be sacrificed. There is no blow, Mr. President, that will be felt by certain great industries of this country more keenly than the destruction of this whole fabric of reciprocity, which is involved in the section I propose to strike out, whether amended as proposed by the Senator from Missouri or not.

The scheme of reciprocity had its foundation in a Republican Administration; it was incorporated by a Republican Congress as part of the tariff bill of 1890; it was approved by a Republican President; it was accepted by the country at large; and in the storm that for a time prevailed against the McKinley act there was no feature of it that helped to limit the disaster which followed more than the reciprocity feature; and yet from the beginning there has been no part of that act which has been so assailed by the other side and denounced and derided and buffeted like the reciprocity scheme.

There has been large debate upon this subject in this Chamber. I have had heretofore repeated controversies with the Senator from Missouri upon the effect of this system of reciprocity in opening and extending trade with foreign countries, and especially with Central and South America; there have been between him and me issues of fact as to the increase of trade which had resulted from these reciprocity agreements. Fortunately the things which were in doubt, or which could not be demonstrated when the Senator and I have stated our respective sides before the Senate, have been demonstrated since by ample, complete, official, undoubted returns of trade between the different countries, showing the effect of this great system upon our exportations.

With Brazil, with Cuba, with the British islands of the Caribbean Sea, with Germany, with the Danish colonies, agreements have been made, and the result has been a constant increase of our trade, especially our export trade, and what is very notable, a corresponding falling off in the export trade of Great Britain and other European nations with these American countries. The figures which I shall give later show clearly that from the time when this law went into operation, including the years 1891, 1892 and 1893, there has been a most gratifying and marked increase of our exports, not only in machinery and agricultural implements, but in the products of the soil, in wheat notably, in other grains, in lard, petroleum, and all the great articles which we export. The figures which I shall give, many of which were brought before the Senate by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] several weeks ago, show completely what has been the effect of the reciprocity part of the McKinley act.

Mr. President, all this is to go for nothing. All this system of reciprocity, which is not free trade, as sometimes maintained by the other side, but which is simply the opening of trade with foreign countries, so that we can export to them articles which they do not produce, and receive in return from them articles which we do not produce, in no degree involves the great issue of protection against free trade, except as an adjunct to protection. It is not opening our markets to rival manufactures and products of other countries, but to increased trade with the countries which produce things which we can not produce and encourages us to send to them articles which they can not produce.

I had occasion before in the debate to describe the difference between reciprocity and free trade. Reciprocity, Mr. President, means more products and more manufactures at home and more sales abroad. Free trade means less products and less manufactures at home and more purchases abroad. The difference between the two is the difference between prosperity and hard times. Reciprocity increases trade, not at the expense of our producers, but to their benefit. Free trade increases foreign trade to the benefit of the foreign producer and manufacturer.

All this is to cease, Mr. President. We have got notice of it already. Take the dependencies of Spain in the great sea which lies between North and South America. The duty upon flour before the reciprocity clause in the McKinley act was enacted was $5.31 per barrel—practical prohibition. It made flour cost to the Cuban consumer $11 if sent from here, and at the same time lesser duties were put upon the product of the Spanish wheat-grower and miller. Our flour trade had fallen to almost nothing; but the moment that this feature of the McKinley act went into operation, we negotiated a reciprocity agreement with Brazil, giving that country the benefit of free sugars in return for reduced duties to our products and manufactures which we exported to them.

The Spanish sugar planters at once made such a pressure upon the home government that it was forced to negotiate an agreement by which the duty on flour was reduced from $5.31 per barrel to $1 per 200 pounds; and at once the flow from our great Northern manufacturing establishments and mills began to set towards Cuba. It gained month by month and year by year until, as the official statistics show, an average annual export of our own products to Cuba of $11,000,000 leaped up in the year 1892 to $18,000,000, and in 1893 mounted to the great aggregate of $24,000,000.

In breadstuffs the increase was from $757,049 in 1891 to $3,488,032 in 1893, and in flour alone from $591,886 in 1891 to $2,821,557 in 1893.

But such a result as this does not in any degree lead the Senators representing this bill upon the other side to stay their destructive hand. They report outright an amendment abrogating all these agreements. What is the result? The Spanish Government at home at once introduced in the Cortes a bill restoring partially or entirely the old duties for the benefit of the Spanish miller and the Spanish grain-grower. We shall have the spectacle under this bill of the great trade which has grown up with Cuba gradually shrinking and at last becoming nearly annihilated.

Does anybody suppose that the American people are going to look on and see such a result as this without making their feelings manifest at the ballot? We have predicted what would follow, and the people have already spoken. We shall see within the next month what will be actually done here, and then we shall have no further need of predicting. We will go to the country upon this bill, including this provision, and take our chances with the people.

Mr. HOAR. I ask to go back to the amendment of which I gave notice last night.

Mr. ALLISON. Before we conclude the pending section?

Mr. HOAR. Yes. I suppose that will take some time, and I do not propose to take any time at all.

I move between section 94 and section 95 to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After section 94, it is proposed to add a new section as follows:

Any manufacturer finding it necessary to use alcohol in the arts, or in any medicinal or other like compound, may use the same under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and on satisfying the collector of internal revenue for the district wherein he resides or carries on business, that he has complied with such regulations and has used such alcohol therein, and exhibiting and delivering up the stamps which show that a tax has been paid thereon, shall be entitled to receive from the Treasury of the United States a rebate or repayment of the tax so paid.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the complaint of this proposed measure by the manufacturers of perfumes, of medicines, and dyes—I do not speak now of dyes used in manufactures, but for other smaller purposes, varnishes, and in the case of other small and large occupations—is that the duties on the things they manufacture are by the bill largely reduced or wholly destroyed.

Alcohol is the chief and substantial element and the chief and substantial cost, except the labor, in the product which they sell. There are all over New England, and I dare say in other parts of the country, in almost every village and city men who are making something of this sort, something they themselves have invented or introduced into public use by a large system of advertisement. There are manufacturers of medicine, like Mr.

Ayer, at Lowell, and manufacturers of beverages, like Hood, with his sarsaparilla. I do not mean that sarsaparilla itself is an instance of it, but they make a great many of these things. They say their business is to be wholly at the mercy of foreign competitors from the fact that there is this heavy excise tax on alcohol, with a reduction of the duty on the competing article.

The amendment proposes simply that where alcohol is used for this purpose the Secretary of the Treasury may make regulations under which, ascertaining the fact that it has gone into an article of this kind, the stamps being delivered up, of course, having already been canceled, there may be a rebate of the tax on alcohol. I do not wish to detain the Senate by a long argument, because in some form or other this matter has been before the Senate, and I have no hope that the majority will break away from the bill on this point as proposed by the committee. I have, however, selected from the hundreds of communications which have been made to me, three or four in which practical manufacturers state their own case in their own way, which I ask consent of the Senate to print as part of my remarks, or rather in lieu of remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SENSELESS AND WICKED LEGISLATION.

We understand that an attempt is to be made to increase the already excessive tax upon alcohol. Legislation of this character is both senseless and wicked. We protest against it as Democrats and humanitarians.

The Democratic party was elected by the people in the hope of a decrease in the severe burdens they have so long borne. Alcohol is a prime necessity. Not whisky or brandy or wine or beer, but alcohol. Enormous quantities are used in the manufacture of medicines, and an increase in taxation means a necessary increase in their price to the suffering poor. Sick people, however poor, must have medicine, but can ill afford any additional increase in cost.

Druggists and physicians who dispense their own medicines will also be seriously affected.

Then, too, the excessive tax upon alcohol exerts a paralytic influence upon home industry. Compels us to import millions of dollars worth of drugs and chemicals that were better made at home.

In the name of patriotism, of humanity, of compassion for the sick and suffering of our land, we protest against such outrageous legislation by men who have not considered and do not understand the practical working of such statutes.

We call upon the medical profession, individually and collectively, to use all possible influence to defeat the bill for an increased tax on alcohol.—Medical Brief, April, 1894.

NEW YORK, February 20, 1894.

DEAR SIR: I beg to hand you herewith copy of a brief now on file with the the Committee on Finance of the Senate and a letter to the subcommittee touching the interests of the perfumery business of this country.

This interest is menaced with great danger to its existence if the duty on alcoholic perfumery be reduced from $2 per gallon and 50 per cent ad valorem to $2 per gallon and 25 per cent ad valorem, as proposed in the Wilson bill, as set forth in the accompanying brief.

I beg your careful consideration of the facts therein presented, and trust that you will see your way clear to sustain these arguments upon the floor of the Senate and give your vote in favor of them.

Yours, respectfully,

HENRY DALLEY, JR.,
Secretary of the Committee.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS, May 15, 1894.

DEAR SIR: We trust you will excuse the liberty we take in sending you the inclosed paper in regard to the increased tax on alcohol.

We have been in the business of manufacturing chemicals and pharmaceutical preparations for forty-seven years, and think we are capable of judging of the effect of the proposed tax on our line of business.

In our opinion, it will work great hardship to all in our line, and be positively ruinous to many.

We earnestly beg that you use your influence against the proposed increase.

Very respectfully,

HENRY THAYER & CO.

REMARKS ON THE SUGGESTIONS IN BOTH HOUSE AND SENATE TARIFF BILLS TO INCREASE THE INTERNAL-REVENUE TAX ON DISTILLED SPIRITS AND, AT THE SAME TIME, TO DECREASE THE CUSTOMS DUTIES ON IMPORTED ALCOHOLIC PREPARATIONS.

PHILADELPHIA, April 9, 1894.

DEAR SIR: Your attention is respectfully directed to the inadequate rates of duty imposed upon a number of preparations in which alcohol is used in the manufacture in both the House and Senate tariff bills.

To the manufacturing chemist, alcohol is as essential as iron is to those engaged in many other branches of industry; and the internal-revenue tax on distilled spirits is a burden very severely felt by American producers, especially where they are obliged to compete with manufacturers abroad who enjoy great advantages by having free solvents suitable for many of their processes.

The internal-revenue tax on a single barrel of 94 per cent alcohol, say 47 gallons, per the Senate bill, will amount to $97.20.

Without tax, alcohol would sell at from 26 to 30 cents per gallon.

With present tax, it sells, in carload lots, at about $2 per gallon.

The quantity of alcohol consumed for medicinal and manufacturing purposes, and for the arts, is very large, and as a consequence the tax paid by manufacturers is enormous, there being no discriminations made in the United States in favor of those who are obliged to employ alcohol for the uses named.

In the face of proposing to increase the tax on distilled spirits from 90 cents to $1 per proof gallon by the House bill, and from $1 to $1.10 by the Senate bill, the suggestions in the House are to reduce duties on imported alcoholic preparations, and in the Senate to allow the reduced rates of the House bill to remain unchanged.

The result is that the internal-revenue tax exceeds the customs duty, in several instances.

Such propositions have been made, apparently, without reference to the fact that customs duties, in all European countries, are adjusted so as to countervail, or compensate for, the excise taxes or inland duties.

We are quite at a loss to understand why such an inconsistency has been permitted to form part of a tariff bill, inasmuch as attention was called to the insufficient rates of duty in ample time for correction.

An inconsistency and injustice of this character is so self-evident that it demands rectification, irrespective of the views of anyone on the great dividing question of Protection to home industries vs. Unrestricted foreign competition.

We ask attention to the tabulated statement herewith presented:

	Under present law.	Under House bill.	Under Senate bill.
Internal-revenue tax on 1 proof gallon distilled spirits*	$0.90	$1.00	$1.10
Customs duty on 1 proof gallon distilled spirits*	2.50	1.80	1.80
Internal-revenue tax on 1 wine gallon 94 per cent alcohol	1.692	1.88	2.068
Customs duty on 1 wine gallon 94 per cent alcohol	4.70	3.384	3.384
Internal-revenue tax on the alcohol in 1 pound sulphuric ether	.35	.39	.43
Customs duty on 1 pound sulphuric ether	.40	.35	.35
Internal-revenue tax on the alcohol in 1 pound spirits nitrous ether	.25	.28	.30
Customs duty on 1 pound spirits nitrous ether	.25	.20	.20
Internal-revenue tax on the alcohol in the sulphuric ether lost in making 1 pound of tannic acid, or tannin	.47	.52	.57
Customs duty on 1 pound of tannic acid, or tannin	.75	.35*	.35

*In England the inland tax on 1 gallon proof spirits is 10*s.*, the customs duty, 10*s.* 4*d.*—difference 4*d.*, or 8 cents. Here the difference, under present law, is $1.60 per proof gallon.

It shows that the customs duty on alcohol is so enormous as to be absolutely prohibitory. Hence, American manufacturers are forced to buy exclusively alcohol made in the United States, and to pay such prices as may be demanded by those who, by Government enactment, need fear no foreign competition.

The present customs duty on 1 wine gallon of 94 per cent alcohol is $4.70. The present internal-revenue tax is $1.692 per wine gallon—a difference of $3 per gallon.

It shows that by an entirely contrary process the internal-revenue tax on the alcohol used in the making of 1 pound of sulphuric ether (as proposed by the Senate rate of $1.10 per proof gallon of distilled spirits), will amount to 43 cents, and yet, against 43 cents imposed upon American manufacturers, the customs duty levied upon sulphuric ether made in foreign countries is to be 35 cents.

We are unable to comprehend why the customs duty on one gallon of alcohol should be $3 higher than the internal-revenue tax, as now, or $1.50 higher as per House bill, or $1.32 higher as per Senate bill; while the customs duty on 1 pound of sulphuric ether of German, French, or English make is to be 8 cents less than the internal-revenue tax on the alcohol used by American manufacturers in making 1 pound of sulphuric ether.

The present duty on sulphuric ether is 40 cents per pound.

The House rate is 35 cents per pound.

The Senate rate is 35 cents per pound.

One gallon of alcohol weighs 6.80 pounds,

One hundred pounds of alcohol will make 70 pounds sulphuric ether.

One gallon of alcohol, or 6.80 pounds, will make 4.76 pounds sulphuric ether.

The tax on 1 gallon of alcohol is, therefore, to be distributed over 4.75 pounds of sulphuric ether.

At 90 cents on proof spirits per gallon, the tax on 1 pound of sulphuric ether is 35.55 cents, against 40 cents customs duty.

At $1 on proof spirits the tax will be 39 cents. The customs duty proposed by the House is 35 cents, or 4 cents less than the tax.

At $1.10 on proof spirits the tax will be 43 cents. The customs duty suggested by the House, and agreed to by the Senate committee, is 35 cents, or 8 cents less than the tax.

Legislation such as this will simply suspend the manufacture of sulphuric ether in the United States, as it will any article where the excise tax exceeds the customs duty

SPIRITS, NITROUS ETHER.

One pound of spirits nitrous ether requires about 1 pound of alcohol.

At the present rate of tax on distilled spirits, 90 cents per gallon, or $1.692 per gallon on 94 per cent alcohol, the tax on the alcohol in 1 pound of spirits nitrous ether is about 25 cents.

The present duty on spirits nitrous ether is 25 cents per pound, which is a countervailing duty only.

With the House bill tax of $1 on distilled spirits, or $1.88 on 94 per cent alcohol, per gallon, the tax on 1 pound of alcohol, required for 1 pound spirits nitrous ether, is 28 cents.

The proposed House bill duty is 20 cents per pound on spirits nitrous ether, or about 8 cents less than the tax.

The Senate bill increases the tax to 30 cents per pound and leaves the House rate of duty remain at 20 cents, so that the internal tax exceeds the customs duty 10 cents per pound.

ACID TANNIC, OR TANNIN.

(Made of nutgall in fine powder and sulphuric ether.)

Present duty, 75 cents per pound.
House bill, 35 cents per pound.
Senate bill, 35 cents per pound.

The Senate rate of tax on distilled spirits will make the tax on the ether lost in making 1 pound acid tannic, or tannin, about 57 cents per pound, while the customs duty suggested is but 35 cents per pound.

The amount of ether required is somewhat variable, but the figures named we regard as a fair average.

We consider 75 cents (the present rate of duty) on a pound of acid tannic, of official quality, as a reasonable and proper rate, and trust that it will be maintained, and that the 35 cents may be stricken out.

When the bill, known as the Mills bill, was formulated, there was entire willingness expressed to leave rates on all alcoholic preparations undisturbed, in view of not changing the spirit tax; whereas, in the present case, the House advances the spirit tax 10 cents per gallon, and reduces the customs duties, and the Senate committee still further advances the spirit tax 10 cents per gallon, while allowing the reduced customs duties of the House bill to remain unchanged.

By reference to the tariff law of Great Britain, you will find that duties are imposed on alcoholic preparations at least sufficient to countervail the inland-revenue tax; as on chloroform, chloral hydrate, collodion, ether sulphuric, ether acetic, etc.; so that, inasmuch as Great Britain grants protection to none, the question for consideration there was one of simple justice and consistency, and not of protection.

That the excessive internal-revenue tax on alcohol is already burdensome enough to manufacturers, we hardly think can be disputed.

That it is but a measure of justice not to discriminate against manufacturers of your own country, we are sure you will grant to be sound policy.

That in adjusting customs duties on alcoholic preparations of foreign manufacture, care should be taken to see that they shall at least compensate for the inland taxes imposed upon your own fellow-citizens, especially in view of the fact that many countries have laws granting free methylated spirits, or other solvents, to their manufacturers, we think will be admitted to be correct.

In the United States the tax on the distilled spirits entering into the alcohol used for medicinal and manufacturing purposes and for the arts is precisely the same as when the spirits are used for drinking purposes.

There are other items of similar character to those cited, to which your attention might be directed, and doubtless information will be given by manufacturing chemists, if desired.

Commending this matter to your careful consideration, we are,

Respectfully yours,

POWERS & WEIGHTMAN.

Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR, Senator.

H. R. 4864—SCHEDULE A, PARAGRAPH 7—ALCOHOLIC PERFUMERY.

To the honorable the Committee on Finance, United States Senate:;

The committee appointed by the manufacturing perfumers of the United States, preferring to take as little of your valuable time as possible, beg leave to present a few facts touching their interests as affected by this bill.

Perfumery, which is conceded to be a luxury of the highest order, is properly a subject for taxation, while this bill reduces the tariff thereon and diminishes the revenue therefrom.

Duty now, $2 per gallon and 50 per cent ad valorem.

Duty proposed, $2 per gallon and 25 per cent ad valorem.

We most earnestly call your attention to the fact that, while the tariff has been reduced upon the foreign manufactured article, the internal-revenue tax upon the articles which are used in the manufacture of the domestic goods, such as alchohol, has been increased, and a duty upon our imported raw materials, such as enfleurage grease (or pomades, so-called) of 20 per cent has been retained, together with a duty of 25 per cent on many of the essential oils.

Keen domestic competition makes the manufacturing of perfumes in this country (at a fair profit) increasingly difficult, and yet this bill not only reduces the duty, but increases the cost of manufacturing here by making the internal-revenue tax $1.10 a proof gallon on alcohol, instead of 90 cents, or 18 per cent increase, thus working in both ways to decrease the revenues of the Government, for if foreign goods are imported at a lower duty fewer domestic goods will be manufactured, and thus no benefit will accrue to the consumer, and the Government will lose the revenue.

Under the present law importations of perfumery increased 11 per cent during 1893, and will undoubtedly continue to increase as the existing rate represents, as near as may be, the maximum rate of revenue duty.

No fortunes have been or can be made under present conditions, but the industry has supported large numbers of workers, not only in its own ranks, but amongst bottle manufacturers, box and paper makers, alcohol distillers, lithographers, and traveling salesmen all over the United States.

The price of alcohol is $2.34. At $1.10 per gallon internal-revenue tax, alcohol will cost the manufacturer here $2.72, while foreign manufacturers pay for their refined spirits less than 25 cents per gallon, thus showing how great an advantage the foreign manufacturer has over the domestic, and in whose interest, it will be readily seen, the new law would largely work.

Thus the amended bill would simply have the effect of transferring to the foreign maker the business which properly belongs at home, and at the same time it would reduce the revenue from this luxury.

The manifest justice of our claim can not be gainsaid.

First. That, as a luxury, the 50 per cent duty should be retained.

Second. That at least 50 cents per gallon should be added to the compensatory duty to cover the increased tax on distilled spirits.

Respectfully submitted,

A COMMENTARY ON THE PLAN TO INCREASE THE REVENUE DERIVED FROM INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXES AS PROPOSED IN BILL H. R. 4864—THE TARIFF BILL NOW PENDING IN UNITED STATES SENATE.

CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS., May 15, 1894.

DEAR SIR: The present rate of tax on distilled spirits is 90 cents per proof gallon, or $1.692 per gallon on alcohol.

The proposed rate of tax on distilled spirits in H. R. 4864 is $1.10 per proof gallon, or $2.068 per gallon on alcohol.

In other words, the present rate of taxation on alcohol is 500 per cent, the proposed rate is 750 per cent of the cost of the article taxed.

Alcohol "the universal solvent" is the indispensable raw material for many kinds of important manufacturing industries.

It is shown that at least one-half of the tax for last fiscal year on distilled spirits, $87,712,513.03, was collected on alcohol used in the arts and manufactures.

H. R. 4864 now proposes to reduce the duty on all the foreign competing products to these manufactures largely, in many cases 50 per cent. and to add a tax to alcohol, a raw material of the domestic manufacturer, increasing its original cost 150 per cent.

This is contrary to sound public policy and will prove detrimental to the public welfare. It will seriously affect the manufactures and commerce of the United States.

In the manufacture of chemicals, pharmaceutical preparations, varnishes, flavoring extracts, and many other lines in which alcohol is the prominent raw material, it will prove positively ruinous, for the duty as proposed in the bill H. R. 4864 is less on the competing foreign products than the internal-revenue tax the domestic manufacturer is compelled to pay on the alcohol consumed in making the same article.

But this is not the limit of the discrimination against the domestic manufacturer, for, in addition to the labor cost being much lower in foreign countries, their manufacturers, through the wise beneficence of the principal European governments, are permitted to use alcohol free of all tax. Through this wise provision, alcohol costs them only about 25 cents per gallon.

As proposed in bill H. R. 4864 alcohol will cost the American manufacturer at least $2.40 per gallon.

We have despaired of attaining at this time the great blessing of free alcohol for manufacturing; we do, however, consider it our duty to respectfully but most earnestly pray that your honorable body will see the wisdom of retaining the present internal-revenue tax 90 cents per proof gallon on distilled spirits (whisky and proof spirits), and striking from bill H. R. 4864 the proposed tax of $1.10 per proof gallon.

As a further reason for urging this course, we wish to call your attention to the fact that while alcohol, a raw material used exclusively in manufacturing, is taxed 750 per cent in the proposed bill, yet fermented liquors (ale, beer, etc.) are taxed but $1 per barrel of 31 gallons, less 7½ per cent discount, or 92½ cents net.

Beer is simply a stimulant, a luxury which enters into no manufacturing industry, but is entirely consumed as a drink.

It is a necessity to no one, but even assuming it to be such, an increase of the tax $1 per barrel would not be felt by the consumer, as the increase is not sufficient to increase the retailing price, besides beer not being a necessity, the tax may be avoided by the individual if he so chooses, by abstaining from its use.

Assuming the consumption to be the same as last fiscal year, an addition of $1 per barrel to the tax on fermented liquors would increase the revenue $34,551,317.

The proposed increase of revenue tax on distilled spirits (whisky and proof spirits) will add to the revenue, assuming the production to be the same, $19,610,000.

Gain in revenue by increasing tax $1 per barrel on fermented liquors instead of 20 cents per proof gallon on distilled spirits, $14,944,517.

This comparison demonstrates that the proposed increase of tax on alcohol is unnecessary—any unnecessary tax is wrong, this unnecessary tax is especially wrong, as alcohol enters into the manufacture of most every chemical, pharmaceutical, and medical preparation. It is a tax upon the necessities of the poor and the needy, upon the laboring man and his family, the sick and the suffering, those who are least able to bear the burden.

We therefore ask that the tax on proof spirits remain as it is, namely, 90 cents per gallon proof, and that the internal-revenue tax on beer and like intoxicating liquors which are and can be used only as beverages (and can not be made sources of alcohol to be used in the arts and in medicine) be increased $1 per barrel, or sufficiently to provide the internal revenue required in the bill now before Congress.

HENRY THAYER & CO.

COPY OF BRIEF SUBMITTED TO COMMITTEE ON FINANCE IN THE MATTER OF ALCOHOLIC PERFUMERY IMPORTED INTO THE UNITED STATES AND MANUFACTURED THEREIN.

To the honorable the Committee on Finance,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

GENTLEMEN: The committee appointed by the manufacturing perfumers of the United States respectfully submit the following for the consideration of your honorable body:

Two dollars per gallon and 50 per cent ad valorem:

At this rate the duty is equivalent to 62 per cent ad valorem. At the rate of duty named in the Wilson bill, viz, $2 per gallon and 25 per cent ad valorem, the duty will be equivalent to 38 per cent ad valorem. At this rate the business of manufacturing perfumery in this country will have practically no protection. It is a small though growing industry, and at the present time is estimated to amount to not more than $2,500,000, and the charges upon it for operating expenses and extensions are very heavy.

The importations of alcoholic perfumery in 1892 amounted to $267,331.16; in 1893 to $296,706.77; showing an increase of 11 per cent, or $29,375.61.

The foreign perfumery manufacturers are now anxiously waiting the adoption of the proposed rate of duty, and are openly declaring that they will be able to flood the American market with foreign product and undersell the American manufacturer. By comparison of the following figures, it will be seen that they will be able to do what they propose, and that under those conditions it will not be long before the domestic industry will be badly crippled.

In Europe the prices paid for labor are from $2 to $12 per week, while here the same class of labor commands from $5 to $40 per week. In Europe a gallon of alcohol can be bought for 25 cents. Here we are now paying $2.34 per gallon. The Wilson bill proposes to increase the internal-revenue tax on alcohol from 90 cents to $1 a proof gallon. This increase will necessarily have to be paid by the consumer, and will have the effect of increasing the price of a wine gallon from $2.34 to $2.53. The average prices for the five years last past have been as follows:

	Per gallon.
1889	$2.15
1890	2.24
1891	2.40
1892	2.38
1893	2.36½

We therefore respectfully submit that not only should the present tariff on these goods be maintained, but that the former tariff of $3 per gallon and 50 per cent ad valorem, which prevailed until 1888, should be restored. This would afford to the industry in the United States only a fair measure of protection and encouragement, without which it can not be maintained on a profitable basis, but must be surrendered to foreign manufacturers.

Free pomades, known in the Government statistics as "enfleurage pomades":

The duty on pomades now is 20 per cent ad valorem. We ask for free pomades on the following grounds: They are raw materials, and can not be produced in this country. Extensive experiments have been made in the culture of flowers in this country, with the hope that pomades suitable for our business might be produced here; but it has been found to be (through the cost of labor and climatic influences) impossible at a favorable price to produce in this country pomades that will answer this purpose.

The pomade, so called, is not what is commonly known as "cosmetic." There are no ingredients in it, as it is simply the fat or mixture of hog's grease and tallow used as a body or base for the absorption of the odors of the flowers, and constitutes a vehicle or container for the transportation of these odors to this country. This absorption and resulting saturation of the fat is obtained by entirely natural means, by the exhalation of the odors from the flowers, which in turn are absorbed in the grease. This grease thus saturated with odor, is shipped to this country in hermetically sealed cans, and is washed in alcohol until the odors of the flowers are extracted from the grease and held in the alcohol, which is then used as a base for the perfume. The grease having thus been exhausted of the odor which it contained, is of no further use to the perfumer.

Respectfully submitted.

HENRY DALLEY, JR.,
Secretary of the Committee.

EPITOME OF BRIEF IN THE MATTER OF ALCOHOLIC PERFUMERY IMPORTED INTO THE UNITED STATES AND MANUFACTURED THEREIN.

Duty now, $2 per gallon and 50 per cent ad valorem; ad valorem equivalent, 62 per cent.

Duty under Wilson bill, $2 per gallon and 25 per cent ad valorem; ad valorem equivalent, 38 per cent.

Importations of alcoholic perfumery: 1892, $237,331.16; 1893, $296,706.77; increase, 11 per cent, or $29,375.61.

Foreign manufacturers pay for labor, per week, $2 to $12; domestic manufacturers pay $5 to $40.

Foreign manufacturers pay for alcohol per gallon less than 25 cents; domestic manufacturers pay more than $2.34.

If internal-revenue tax on alcohol be raised from 90 cents to $1 per proof gallon, it will add 19 cents per wine gallon, making alcohol cost the domestic manufacturer per gallon, $2.53.

If internal-revenue tax on alcohol is still further raised, the cost of alcohol per gallon to the domestic manufacturer will be increased in the same proportion. Thus, if, as has been rumored, the tax be made $1.50 per proof gallon, instead of 90 cents, as now, the cost to the home manufacturer will be per gallon $3.54.

The foreign manufacturer pays for raw materials, such as enfleurage, pomades, essential oils, etc., from 20 per cent to 25 per cent less than the home manufacturer (the difference being represented by the duties imposed upon these materials), besides paying a constantly diminishing price for labor. Thus, under the provisions of the Wilson bill, the home industry is ground between the upper and the nether millstones, inasmuch as by the increase in the internal-revenue tax and by the diminution in the tax on imported alcoholic perfumery and the diminishing cost of foreign labor, it will be made to suffer burdens which it can not bear.

Domestic perfumery, by much advertising and large expenditures of money, has succeeded in establishing a reputation and overcoming the prejudice in favor of foreign goods, though now the sales amount to but $2,500,000 per annum.

Enfleurage pomades.—We urge that the duty of 20 per cent ad valorem now laid on these goods be removed, on the ground that they are raw materials and can not be produced here because of the soil and climatic influences. (See explanation in accompanying brief.)

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I suppose there is no use of supplementing what I said upon this subject yesterday, and yet the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts is a very simple one; and no relief will be afforded under it, as I understand it, except under regulations which are entirely satisfactory to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. So it can do no harm to adopt the amendment. If the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue think they can not adopt any regulations which will prevent fraud, then nothing will be done under it; but if they conclude that they can adopt such regulations as will prevent fraud in the use of alcohol in the manufactures and the arts free of tax, then there will be relief under it.

As the Senator from Arkansas said yesterday, everybody admits that this ought to be done. The only question which has ever been raised is the possibility of allowing it to be done without fraud being committed upon the revenue, and it seems to me the Senator from Massachusetts has put the amendment in a way which enables the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to devise, if possible, a plan by which they will be satisfied that no fraud will be perpetrated, and in that case the manufacturers will get the benefit. But if the Treasury Department still adheres to the idea that it is impossible by any regulations whatever to prevent frauds, then no action will be taken and nothing will come of it in the way of relief.

The number of gallons of alcohol used yearly in the manufactures and the arts has been somewhat a question of dispute between the Bureau of Statistics and persons outside who claim to be well informed. In 1888 Mr. E. R. Squibb, who has taken a good deal of pains to ascertain, put the number of gallons of spirits, exclusive of brandy, rum, wines, and malt liquors, used in the manufactures, medicines, and the arts, at 14,000,000 proof gallons. Mr. Switzler, then of the Bureau of Statistics, thought it was not so much, and put it at 5,000,000 gallons. My impression about it is that there are eight or ten million proof gallons of alcohol used in the arts and manufactures. That, under the tax which has now been put or is likely to be put upon spirits, puts a burden of from eighteen to twenty million dollars per annum upon the manufacturers who use alcohol in their business.

As I said yesterday, I represent a great many manufacturers in Connecticut who are not engaged in the business of making medicines, but who have to use alcohol in the ordinary processes of their manufacture. I think there is scarcely a metal working or a textile manufacturing establishment in the United States which does not have to use alcohol in somewhat large quantities. As it has been suggested by the Senator from Arkansas representing the committee, that they would be glad to do this if they could, I trust that they will allow this provision to go into the bill at least for the purpose, if for no other purpose, of leaving the matter open and determining before the passage of the bill whether some measure of relief can not be devised.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senators having charge of the bill are willing to let the amendment go in, so that the subject will be in their power, I will say for one that I shall not only not oppose it, but I shall support them in striking it out and make no complaint if, either on consulting with the authorities of the Treasury or on further consideration themselves, they find that it is not practical.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the pending amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to section 104 proposed by the Senator from Missouri, from the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I merely desire to say a few words as to that amendment. It is a material modification of the amendment as originally proposed.

Mr. HIGGINS. Has the Senator from Iowa any objection to having the amendment read?

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection. I should be glad to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. VEST. Let the section be read as proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. The section, if amended as proposed, will read as follows:

SEC. 104. That section 3 of an act approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," is hereby repealed; but nothing herein contained shall be held to abrogate or in any way affect such reciprocal commercial arrangements as have been heretofore made and now exist between the United States and foreign countries, except where such arrangements are inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from Iowa wait one moment? Which section of the McKinley act is proposed to be repealed?

Mr. ALLISON. Only section 3.

Mr. HALE. Sections 15 and 16 are not touched.

Mr. ALLISON. They are not touched.

Mr. HALE. Only section 3 is repealed?

Mr. ALLISON. Only section 3. Section 3 is what is known as the reciprocity provision of the McKinley law. The Senator now proposes to repeal that section and then add a proviso which declares that nothing shall interfere with existing agreements under it except in so far as they are inconsistent with the proposed act. I do not see why an absolute repeal should be made. I do not see why the Senator would not be satisfied with saying what we say in the general repealing provision, that is, "That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

In other words, allow this to stand with other repealing clauses because it is not necessary to make a special repealing clause here, unless it is the purpose of the proposed act to prohibit in the future any arrangements to be made under the third section of the act of 1890.

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator's pardon. I do not want to take any time.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not want to take any time, either.

Mr. VEST. I know the Senator does not want to do an injustice to the committee, and therefore I am constrained to make an explanation.

The Democratic party, as I understand its position, has never been opposed to these reciprocal commercial arrangements. They were commenced or advocated originally by Mr. Jefferson, the founder of our party. But we were opposed and are opposed irrevocably to that portion of section 3 of the McKinley act which gives to the President of the United States the power of retaliation against foreign countries. That is the provision that we propose to get rid of. If we were to adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa and say that "all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed," what would be the result as to sugar? We propose now to put a duty upon sugar. Sugar is coming in free from Cuba, and from South America even.

We say, provided that these reciprocal arrangements are not inconsistent with the provisions of the pending bill, we adopt them. If we were to take the language suggested by the Senator from Iowa, it would involve us in the absurdity of putting a duty upon sugar and at the same time repealing all provisions inconsistent with this enactment in the pending bill. We have adopted the only way it seems to me in which we could reach our object, whether it is a good or bad one.

Mr. ALLISON. Therefore the object of the absolute repeal of section 3 is to take away from the President of the United States in the future all authority under that section.

Mr. HIGGINS. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me? I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if the position which the committee take is that in the future the power to make such reciprocal conventions shall be left to the treaty-making power, the President and the Senate?

Mr. VEST. That is it, exactly.

Mr. ALLISON. Wholly.

Mr. HIGGINS. And that it shall be taken away from the President.

Mr. VEST. That is it.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the object. The amendment, of course, is a great improvement upon the original amendment proposed by the committee, because if it shall turn out, when the bill finally receives the signature of the President, that instead of having a duty on sugar it will be free, then these reciprocal arrangements already entered into will not be changed, because, as I understand the general provisions of the bill, there is not a provision in it that is inconsistent with these reciprocal arrangements, except that we have put a duty upon sugar.

Therefore, if sugar is made free these arrangements which have been made and are so valuable to our country will not be interfered with. But it can not be supposed that if the present arrangement as to sugar shall prevail in the bill in the end, all these reciprocal arrangements will not be absolutely abrogated. We can hardly suppose that with the discrimination we have made in the bill against Germany she will give us the benefit of the reciprocal arrangements which she has given us with reference to our great agricultural products, wheat and flour, and corn and pork, and other articles of agricultural production which we have sent there in such great quantities within the last few years.

Mr. HOAR. I wish my honorable friend from Iowa would devote a sentence or two of his speech right there to summing up the discriminations which have been made against Germany in this matter.

Mr. ALLISON. We have in the first place discriminated against Germany to the extent of a tenth of a cent a pound upon all sugar that comes from Germany, whether it be raw or refined.

I do not want to anticipate what Germany may say, but she will regard that as a direct discrimination against the exports from her country to ours, and she may say, although I hope she will not, that "in violation of the reciprocal agreement under which we have given the United States the benefit of the lowest rate of duty that we impose upon agricultural products, in consideration of our finding a market in the United States for our beet sugar, which has been taken away by Congress, we will deal with the United States as we deal with other nations against whom we now discriminate."

Now, that is as to Germany. The same rule applies to Spain. There we not only had a large list of articles admitted free because we admit free to this country the sugar of the Spanish colonies, but in addition they have given us a discriminating duty amounting to a reduction of 50 per cent upon the old duty as to agricultural products.

Mr. WASHBURN. It is more than that as to wheat and flour.

Mr. HALE. It is a greater reduction than that on wheat and flour.

Mr. ALLISON. On wheat and flour it may be more.

Mr. HALE. From $5.34 to $1.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. These great discriminations have been made under the third section of the McKinley law. Now, if we shall finally, as I hope we will, put sugar upon the free list, then the amendment as proposed now by the Senator from Missouri will be an amendment which will be consistent; but if we shall impose the duty now proposed upon sugar, the amendment is no better than the original provision making it certain that these reciprocal arrangements which have been of so much advantage to us will be taken away from us, because the whole question hinges upon the question whether we shall impose a duty upon imported sugar. In that event, this modification is nothing. But if we shall finally make sugar free, then it will be a potential and valuable modification of the provision as originally reported by the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to some statistical information with respect to our foreign commerce which will be very materially affected by the provisions of the section now under consideration. No doubt the attention of the Senator from Missouri has been called to it, but I should like to have him hear some of the statistics which I will give from public documents, and also some information that I have from letters, not only from the State of Missouri, but from the Northwestern States and some of the Southern States.

Among the most beneficial results of what is called the McKinley act, whatever demerits it may be alleged to have, has been to increase our exports to foreign countries to an extent unprecedented in the previous history of our country. I have a table from the Bureau of Statistics, which I have sent for, in which the statistics are more elaborately given. I will read some of the results effected by what is known as the McKinley act. I contrast the returns of our exports of certain articles to Cuba in 1889 with the exports in 1893. The first item is agricultural implements. The amount exported from the United States to Cuba increased from $74,135 in 1889 to $130,341 in 1893, a great increase in the exportation of agricultural implements.

Mr. HALE. To what country?

Mr. SHERMAN. To Cuba. The next item is cars, passenger and freight, the exportation of which increased from $127,533 in 1889 to $271,571 in 1893. The exportations of cotton cloth in 1889 amounted to $70,123, to $75,359 in 1893. In rubber goods the increase was from $27,804 in 1889 to $42,879 in 1893; car wheels, $1,918 in 1889 to $18,073 in 1893; cutlery, from $10,347 in 1889 to $21,094 in 1893; machinery, not elsewhere given, from $955,242 in 1889 to $2,792,050 in 1893; cut nails, from $48,349 in 1889 to $107,002 in 1893; wire nails, from $9,763 in 1889 to $20,581 in 1893; railway bars, from $20,240 in 1889 to $327,411 in 1993. The exportations of saws and tools increased from $115,232 in 1889 to $243,544 in 1893; steam engines, from $10,493 in 1889 to $130,652 in 1893; wire, from $118,214 in 1889 to $321,120 in 1893; boots and shoes, from $74,542 in 1889 to $114,943 in 1893; and all other articles, from $9,472,384 in 1889 to $18,845,067 in 1893.

Mr. HALE. Has the Senator from Ohio the figures as to the single item of lard?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not the statistics as to the exportations of wheat and other agricultural products, but they are enormous.

Mr. HALE. The exportations of lard increased from $2,000,000 to $4,600,000; more than 100 per cent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have the statistics as to manufactures, and not the others.

In the letter communicated to me by the secretary of the Isaac Harter Company, an Ohio concern, located at Fostoria, the secretary says:

> On page 40 of the same report would call your attention to the following, having reference to the increase of exports of wheat and wheat products:
> "In Cuba alone was there a notable increase. Reflecting probably the partial failure of the Spanish home crop of wheat, the imports of flour into Cuba were increased from 366,175 barrels in 1892 to 616,406 barrels in 1893."
> I would say in this connection that the imports of flour into Cuba this year will probably reach 800,000 barrels. I have information from those high in authority, politically and commercially, in Havana, Cuba, that Spain is only waiting a pretext whereby she can restore the duty of $7 per barrel on American flour, which would practically shut us out from that very important market for our products. With the South American trade for American flour surely slipping away from us on account of the phenomenal increase in the quantity of wheat grown in the River Platte district, it will probably be but a few years until that market will be lost to us entirely.

Here is a letter from Indianapolis, written by the secretary of the Indianapolis Board of Trade:

> The following is the substance of a report by our Committee on Communications and Resolutions presented at a meeting held last evening:
> "A communication has been received from the Isaac Harter Company, merchant millers, of Fostoria, Ohio, stating that if the Wilson bill, in its present form, should pass the Senate, it will abrogate the reciprocity treaty now in effect between this country and Spain, which will prove very disastrous to our mercantile interests. The following retaliatory clause is suggested for adoption, which the company thinks would obviate the difficulty."

And they here propose retaliatory legislation to prevent this evil. The proposition made by these gentleman, however they may think it affects their interest, is utterly indefensible, and the Government of the United States will never resort to that kind of a provision. We have made a reciprocity arrangement now with Spain, also with Germany and many other countries, and our exports have more than doubled in every country with which we have made special arrangements. We have lost nothing at all in our commerce with them. We receive their goods as we receive all other goods, at the same rates of duty. We make no discrimination, but we do by these provisions secure for ourselves an enormous market for a great mass of both agricultural products and other products.

I have here also a letter from St. Louis, which I shall be glad to read for the information of our friends on the other side. The writer says:

We are glad to learn that you are giving special attention to our trade relations with Cuba and the Latin-American countries, which have been so largely increased by reciprocity treaties which went into effect something over two years ago, and which the Senate amendments to the Wilson bill threaten to abrogate.

Since these reciprocity treaties went into effect our trade in flour has been very largely increased. Previous to 1891 the duty on flour was about $5.83 per barrel into Cuba, and under the treaty the duty is now about 90 cents per barrel. Before these treaties we practically had no trade with that country, and we now supply them with nearly all the flour they use, to say nothing of corn, agricultural implements, lard, and the general products of the pork establishments of the United States.

According to statistics, the American trade with Cuba and the Latin-American countries was about $13,000,000 more in 1893 than it was in 1890. This great increase has been largely from the Mississippi Valley.

I have also here a letter from Chicago showing the same information. It is as follows:

As a result of the reciprocity treaty made with Spain October 1, 1890, and going into effect January 1, 1891, we have been able to do a large and profitable trade in ornamented sheet metal with Spanish-American countries, trade that formerly belonged to Europe, and we have, of course, worked hard and at a great cost to secure this trade, which now threatens to be cut off entirely if the Wilson bill, as reported in the Senate, providing for the abrogation of the present commercial arrangements with Spain, is passed.

It would be nothing short of an outrage that anybody should attempt to set aside the reciprocity provision when we are just getting fairly started in building up a trade with these countries; and whether he belonged to either of the great parties of this country, no fair-minded man could lose sight of the fact of the injury done to the country as the proposed legislation would inflict.

I have also another letter to the same effect, from which I will only read an extract, written from Coldwater, Mich.:

I think it is the general sentiment of the intelligent millers of this country, that the reciprocity portion of the McKinley bill has been of very great benefit to our business, and we feel that the passage of the Wilson bill as amended by the Senate Finance Committee would be a great blow to the milling business of the United States.

I have here another letter, the last that I will refer to. W. C. Brown, who is the secretary of a large milling establishment, of which Hon. M. D. HARTER is president, says:

We have just received advices from our representatives in Havana that an excessive duty will be placed on American flour into Cuba again, commencing with July 1. This will be a serious blow to our trade on the island, which at this time equals 50,000 to 60,000 barrels a year, and the total of American flour shipped to the island this year would likely have aggregated a million barrels. Our only hope now for retaining this trade with Cuba is to have Congress pass a retaliatory measure discriminating against Cuban sugar.

This can not be done, as a matter of course. Cuba will retaliate by a discriminating duty. The truth is, we have made fair and excellent bargains with nearly all the countries that were willing to trade with us, by which we have gained enormous advantages, especially in increasing our exports—not only our exports of grain and produce, but also our exports of manufactures.

Now, why disturb those arrangements? Why change them? I can not see any reason for it. The only reason which can be given in a political sense is that they were brought about by a Republican administration, mainly through the influence of a gentleman who is now dead and gone. It seems to me there can be no reason whatever for any abrogation or change of these agreements. There is no necessity for it.

This provision, repealing all these agreements, it seems to me, ought to be stricken out. If they are to be abrogated or modified, as probably some of them will have to be in consequence of provisions of this bill, it ought to be done by a conference through the Executive Department; it ought not to be done by an arbitrary act of Congress.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask my friend from Ohio a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. Is there any other difficulty except dutiable sugar in the way of continuing these treaties?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; there were many provisions of the bill that are inconsistent with our reciprocal engagements with several countries. I am not now prepared to point out what they are. But the difficulty is that we undertake by law to abrogate all our agreements without a conference with the powers with whom they were made.

Mr. GRAY. I have just one word, with the Senator's permission. I am in favor of reciprocity, but I remind the Senator that the amendment which was attributed to Mr. Blaine and was introduced by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] was a pretty far-reaching provision.

I was very much in favor of it; and when the reciprocity feature of the McKinley bill was being voted on I offered as an amendment the provision as drafted, or supposed, at all events, to be drafted by Mr. Blaine, for the committee's admendment, and every Democrat voted for it and every Republican voted against it. I merely make this statement in reply to what the Senator said about the foresight and forecast of that great statesman, as we all consider him.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not talking at all about this as a political matter.

Mr. GRAY. Nor am I; but the Senator alluded to that fact.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think I was in favor of the policy of reciprocity. I was afraid of entangling alliances. I had the old idea about our foreign relations that we had better not embarrass ourselves with entangling alliances. But these arrangements have been made. Their results have been beneficial to an unexpected extent. No one dreamed of the enormous increase of our trade with the countries with whom we have made reciprocal engagements. Now, if you will destroy them, if the term of this bill are inconsistent with those engagements, then we ought to leave it to the President of the United States and the Secretary of State, who have now the power, to make convenient changes in them. Some of them ought not to be abrogated. Some of them must be changed somewhat.

Therefore, instead of repealing the reciprocity stipulations or affecting them in any way, or declaring that they are void or inconsistent with our legislation, they ought to be continued in force until abrogated by the consent of both parties. It is never wise to change a treaty by law. Undoubtedly an act of Congress can abrogate any treaty which we may make with the most powerful nation, but it ought never to be done. It ought to be left to the Executive authority, which alone has power to negotiate the necessary changes.

This mode of abrogating contracts by legislation is wrong. One of the reasons why I doubted the policy of reciprocity was because I thought it ought to be left to the executive branch of the Government, with power conferred by law. By our Constitution the President is the only officer who can deal with foreign nations, and he ought to have the full power to make or change a treaty or a reciprocal agreement. If the laws of Congress should turn out to prove inconsistent with such an agreement, then the President of the United States, as a matter of course, will present the reasons for the change to the different governments with whom we have made agreements.

Why is it necessary to modify them or change them? If necessary let it be done by two friendly Executives getting together to see whether they can substitute some other form of arrangement instead of the one existing; but when we undertake to abrogate treaties or agreements by legislation we do not have an opportunity for consideration, for talk, for explanation, for that necessary and friendly negotiation which occurs between eminent statesmen when they are charged by law with power to make a treaty.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, in answer to the suggestion made by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] and also to a hint for the first time from the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] that these Senators, representing their party, are in favor of re-ci procity, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to the fact that the original reciprocity amendment, which I introduced here, which had been drawn in the State Department by the Secretary and which presumably represented the Administration and Republican sentiment generally, was drawn upon the basis that the sugar duty should be kept on, as the leverage upon which reciprocity could be set afoot with other nations, and that the duty should not be given up without some corresponding return, but the President was authorized to use that existing and imposed duty for the purpose of negotiating reciprocity arrangements.

When the Republican party in the Fifty-first Congress determined to make a present of free sugar to the consumers of the United States, thereby reducing to them the cost of that most necessary and extensive article of consumption something like 2 cents per pound, the whole programme was shifted. The duty which was to be used as the leverage was gone. The only leverage that could be used was the authority to be given to the President, and the threat, if you may choose to call it, that unless these countries would enter into some fair agreement the duty should be reimposed. Therefore, the legislation upon this subject had as its keynote, as the Senator indicates, the duty upon sugar.

Then, when the Republican party had determined that free sugar should be one of the constituent and important parts of its tariff bill, when the Democratic party had indicated no adhesion or assent to the policy which must be pursued in regard to reciprocity, the Senator from Delaware laggardly offered the amendment which had been introduced by me before, and which would apply to another condition and did not apply to a free-sugar measure.

We have seen such a course taken frequently in other matters, where, after we have gone forward, advanced our ground and set higher our standard, our friends upon the other side come in with some old, abandoned proposition of ours and seek to make an issue upon it. The Senator was behind the times. When his associates voted for the amendment that had been introduced here under a certain condition of things they were groping in the dark. We had gone into the light; we had abolished the duty upon sugar and were using that condition as the leverage with other nations.

This was wholly satisfactory to Mr. Blaine, and he was very earnest in the desire that it should be passed as a part of the tariff bill. I recall the pleasure which I felt in sending him a message announcing the vote on the passage of the reciprocity feature of the McKinley bill.

Now, I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri—and I know he will answer me and give me a fair answer—whether he has any doubt that under his amendment, which has only shifted the form and turn of speech, these reciprocity agreements will fall to the ground if the bill goes through? Here is the provision of the McKinley act upon which all these beneficent agreements were builded:

SEC. 3. That with a view to secure reciprocal trade with countries producing the following articles, and for this purpose, on and after the 1st day of January, 1892, whenever, and so often as the President shall be satisfied that the government of any country producing and exporting sugars, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, raw and uncured, or any of such articles, imposes duties or other exactions upon the agricultural or other products of the United States, which, in view of the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides into the United States, he may deem to be reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, he shall have the power and it shall be his duty—to suspend, by proclamation to that effect, the provisions of this act relating to the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the production of such country, for such time as he shall deem just, and in such case and during such suspension duties shall be levied, collected, and paid upon sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the product of or exported from such designated country, as follows, namely:

It is directory, not a matter of his option—

Then it goes on and gives the schedule of rates of duties under which the reimposition shall be made, unless these countries come to some agreement and make some reciprocal arrangement that will be in the view of the President reasonable and equal.

I ask the Senator with the amendment he has offered if the bill goes through with taxed sugar, when free sugar was held out under the law to these countries as the leverage on which these agreements could be made, whether he does not believe that these agreements will fall?

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator from Maine want me to reply now?

Mr. HALE. I should be very glad, because I am asking the question in good faith.

Mr. VEST. It depends entirely on the importance which foreign countries would attach to the export of sugar from their own into this country. I admit there is some force in what the Senator from Iowa said, and what the Senator from Maine repeats, that the efficacy of the amendment which I have offered this morning on behalf of the committee depends largely upon what we do with sugar hereafter in the bill. I can not undertake to show the full effect of this provision because I do not know how much importance will be attached by the sugar-producing countries to the effect of a tax upon sugar.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator know that after the passage of the Wilson bill in the House, even with its free-sugar provision, very considerable discussion arose as to whether the result of that measure would be the practical abrogation of these agreements, and that it was finally generally settled and public acceptance given that such would be the result?

Mr. VEST. There was great diversity of opinion and a great deal of misrepresentation as to the views of public men in regard to the effect of that action. I never had but one opinion about it myself, though I was reported very differently in different newspapers, and I never took any pains to correct it because I was too busy to do it. I always thought that the effect of putting a tax upon sugar would seriously influence exports from the United States to the sugar-producing countries. I am frank to state that; but at the same time I never had any doubt that as to other articles a great deal of the trade would be maintained.

My opinion, however, was largely colored or influenced by my knowledge after an examination from time to time that the effects of reciprocity had been distorted in the partisan press. For instance, to give one glaring injustice, the protection organs in claiming an increase of trade between this country and Brazil leave out the quantities of exports and put in their value, concealing from view either intentionally or through ignorance, the fact that the price in Brazil was in depreciated currency, and not in gold values which govern the world commercially everywhere else. The result was that from month to month or from three months to three months we had reports from the Bureau of Statistics and in the partisan press that the trade between Brazil and the United States was being largely increased. I can show, I think, beyond question that that was not the case.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator know that when our invoices and our measures of value of exportations from this country are made up, and from that they get into the official reports, they are made up at our port of exportation?

Mr. VEST. They were not in this case.

Mr. HALE. They are made up at American ports in American currency and at American valuation. The fact that the shipper deals with a people who in time of revolution, or war, or civil commotion have a depreciated currency does not affect the value of invoices which get into our reports.

Those are made up, not in Brazil, not in Cuba, not in Venezuela, not in the turbulent countries where war and rebellion and strife exist more than half the time and where everything is fluctuating; they are made up at our ports. Those are the figures which get into our official reports. The Senator from Missouri is entirely wrong. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island, who is an expert, if this is not so?

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will allow me, that is exactly so. The Senator from Missouri undoubtedly has in mind the imports from Brazil and those countries which of course are made up in the currency of the country of importation, and that being a depreciated currency, it shows a larger increase of importations from those countries than has actually taken place; but so far as the exports from this country to those countries are concerned, they are made up here in American currency, and the fluctuations in foreign currency have nothing whatever to do with the amounts.

Mr. VEST. I beg pardon of the Senator from Maine. I did not intend to interject an argument into the middle of his speech; but I have before me a paper read at the meeting of the National statistical Institute at Chicago, September, 1893, by the present statistician of the Treasury Department, Mr. Worthington C. Ford. I will read what Mr. Ford says, and he ought to be good authority upon the subject:

All of the figures ostensibly given out as the measure of the effects of this reciprocity arrangement have been infected with an error that amounts to little less than a blunder, and one that would shame a novice in statistics. Each month the National Bureau of Statistics officially published a table which was intended to show the commerce of the United States with these South American countries, and with especial reference to the results of the reciprocity clause. In every instance nothing but the values of commodities were given, and in nearly every instance the figures bore on their face a lie; yet they were solemnly quoted as definite proof of the success of the policy and known to be inflated, no attempt was made to correct them or to give the outside public the slightest intimation that they were erroneous.

On the contrary, they were embodied in official papers, and conclusions based upon them that would have been disproved by the true returns. For more than a year was this allowed to pass unquestioned, and the friends as well as the critics of the reciprocity policy were more than surprised at the result. The former gloated over what they called the success of the scheme; and the latter were gratified to note the increasing total, and began to hope this reciprocity would after all prove an entering wedge towards widening the channels of our foreign commerce and lead to a more liberal commercial policy. The hopes of either were doomed to disappointment, because these totals which supplied the foundation of their expectations and arguments proved to be merely a matter of bookkeeping, which, when corrected, tells almost entirely against reciprocity as established by the McKinley act.

He then goes on and shows the difference between the gold value in Brazil and in the depreciated currency of that country.

Mr. HALE. The writer of that article, whoever he may be, had undoubtedly fallen——

Mr. VEST. It is Mr. Ford, the chief of the Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. HALE. He has undoubtedly fallen into a mistake, because it applies to importations, and he is taking the gross trade, including exportations and importations. I know that all the values of our exports, which are given in our reports, are based upon the valuation at the place of export. I am borne out in that by Senators who are experts upon this subject.

The members of the Committee on Finance upon the other side of the Chamber have had this placed before them constantly. I have no doubt the mistake comes from what was suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island, that in making up the aggregate of trade, including importations and exportations, he fell into the error. The importations are made up on the basis where they come from, of course, like our exports, on the basis where they go from. Mr. Ford is adopting the same course in denouncing reciprocity, and declaring that it is a sham, and that it is presented before the American people under false colors, which has been taken on the other side of the Chamber ever since this subject has been mooted.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will allow me to read from Mr. Ford a little further along than the statememt read by the Senator from Missouri, he will see that Mr. Ford himself takes this view of it. He says:

Nearly all countries of South America have resorted to paper money, and in many cases the issues have been carried beyond safety, and the notes circulate for less than their nominal value. Exports from these countries—

Mr. HALE. That is it, undoubtedly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Ford says:

Exports from these countries, quoted in paper prices, have unnaturally swelled total values, and it is such values that have been quoted officially.

and in all seriousness, as actual values, and long after attention had been called to the blunder involved. Neglecting a study of quantities of exports, values alone have been insisted upon as the true gauge. And to the extent of inflated prices have the values of imports into the United States from these countries been also inflated—a true form of bubble prosperity, if there ever was one.

Mr. HALE. Then I guessed exactly right, that the writer of that article was basing his statement upon the importation side of the trade from Brazil.

Nothing has been so demonstrated by time as the truth of the statement made by the distinguished and veteran Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], that under these agreements our exports in almost every form of product, whether of the shop or the mine or the soil, have been greatly increased in these countries.

Here I have a much more complete list of our exports to Cuba during the years reckoning from 1891 to 1893, two years of the operation of the reciprocity feature of the McKinley law, and it is something startling, Mr. President. It is startling in the view that there is one party in this country which proposes to destroy the basis of the increased exportation from this country to Cuba under our reciprocity scheme, to sweep this trade away, to tear down the whole structure of increased reciprocal trade.

It is instructive to look at this growing trade, this one dependency of Old Spain. I take the increase of our exports from 1891 to and including 1893, under our reciprocity.

I first take breadstuffs. Bread and biscuits, from $17,000 to $31,000, nearly 100 per cent increase. Corn, from $120,000 to $582,000, more than 400 per cent. Wheat flour, from $591,000 (and that had got the benefit of the first year's increase) to $2,821,000 in the two years, from 1891 to 1893, nearly 500 per cent.

Mr. HOAR. With what country is that trade?

Mr. HALE. Cuba alone. Carriages and horse cars, from $166,000 to $316,000, more than 100 per cent increase; manufactures of copper, from $29,000 to $48,000, 80 per cent increase; cotton goods, from $101,000 to $148,000, 46 per cent increase.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator from Missouri because he is always very good himself in yielding.

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator's pardon, but he mentioned cotton goods; I asked him a question in 1890, I believe, or 1892, which he has never answered; and I should like for him or some other protection Senator to answer it now. I have here the tariff of Brazil, published in Bulletin No. 8, under Mr. Blaine's administration as Secretary of State.

Mr. HALE. This is Cuba that I am reading from.

Mr. VEST. I know, but it applies to both countries. Bulletin No. 8, July, 1891. This tariff of Brazil together with the reciprocal arrangement sometimes called a treaty made by the United States under Mr. Blaine with the Brazilian authorities shows that America received a differential or discriminating duty of 12½ per cent on cotton manufactures exported from this country into Brazil. In other words, the American manufacturer had an advantage of 12½ per cent over the British manufacturer, both of them paying transportation, one from Liverpool and the other from New York, to Rio Janeiro.

Now, the Senator contends that the reciprocity, as he terms it, has increased the market of the American manufacturer under this differential in Brazil. Will he be kind enough to tell us if the American manufacturer, with a protective or differential duty in his favor against the British manufacturer of only 12½ per cent, both paying transportation, can take any portion of the Brazilian market on cotton goods away from the British manufacturer, why does it require 55 per cent protection in the United States to enable the American manufacturer at home to hold the market on cotton goods against the British manufacturer. The British manufacturer has to pay transportation from Liverpool to get into this market.

Mr. HALE. I will answer the Senator. As the Senator from Iowa suggests to me, in the first place, there is a different kind of cotton goods which is used largely in that trade. Then, too, this whole reciprocity feature goes on all fours, altogether. When you begin to increase trade, and when you get large discriminating duties on certain articles, and thereby open the trade, and open lines of steamships, and open the avenues to the increased exportation of all products, you have then the conditions which build up trade generally.

You have transportation established; you have the trade open; you have the ship lines running. So we, getting the advantage of reciprocity agreements on certain articles by large discriminations, load our ships and send them away. We open also trade in other articles where we do not get such large discriminating duties. Begin in a small way at first, as we have in Cuba, upon cotton goods. We do not need the same extent of discrimination for everything that we do on the larger articles. We are getting the trade. We are gradually gaining on it. This trade in cottons does not show anything like such an increase of trade as the other articles. The discrimination is not the same, but it shows the beginning of what will be a greater and a brighter day.

Mr. ALDRICH. When the Senator is through, or at some time at his convenience, I should be glad to make a more extended and definite explanation of the situation in Brizil in regard to cotton.

Mr. HALE. I was going on with the trade in Cuba. Here is another large item: builders' hardware, from $174,000 to $395,000, more, than 100 per cent increase; machinery, from $1,317,000 to $2,792,000, over 100 per cent; locomotive engines, from $237,000 to $418,000, nearly 100 per cent; wire, from $715,000 to $1,664,000, 40 per cent; petroleum, a product of the mines, $280,000 to $403,000, 60 per cent: lubricating oil, $42,000 to $77,000, 70 per cent; paint and painters' colors, from $23,527 to $49,000, 110 per cent; provisions, beef products, from $11,000 to $89,000, 800 per cent or more; bacon, from $351,000 to $556,000, 60 per cent increase; hams, from $234,000 to $762,000, more than 200 per cent; pickled pork, from $33,000 to $59,000, 70 per cent; lard, from $2,079,000 to $4,023,000, almost 100 per cent increase.

So I might go on. Those are some of the larger items. Boards, deals, and planks, from $604,000 to $1,058,000, 65 per cent increase; shooks, from $102,000 to $152,000, 50 per cent increase. All other articles of lumber, from $120,000 to $164,000.

The aggregate shows that our exports to Cuba have been increased from $11,000,000 in 1891 to $24,000,000 in 1893. I give here the table showing the different articles in more extended detail, upon which this increase is predicated:

Mr. President, this list shows that these benefits were disseminated broadcast throughout the country. They were not for the manufacturer alone, nor the miner alone, nor the farmer alone, but they benefited labor in all the great branches of American industry. The Senator upon the other side, representing the committee and the Democratic side of the Chamber, displays an audacity that is worthy of admiration in daring to approach the very base of this citadel of extended trade which has been erected by the Republican party and venturing to lay rude hands upon it.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question.

Mr. HALE. Certainly, the Senator may.

Mr. VEST. If reciprocity is the cause of the increase of trade which he says has taken place between the United States and Brazil, for instance, why is it that the trade between France and Germany and Great Britain and Brazil, without reciprocity, has increased in a greater extent?

Mr. HALE. I am glad the Senator has brought this up. The increase of our exports under reciprocity shows that with Germany the result under reciprocity has been almost as gratifying as it has been with Cuba.

It is surprising, even in competition with the products of the soil of the old countries—with Russia and Austria-Hungary upon the cereals—how we have gained upon them, and how with our pork product we have gained by reciprocity. Germany I was going to cite as a marked instance in favor of this policy of the Republican party.

Mr. VEST. The Senator misapprehended my question, I think. I understood him to argue that reciprocity with Brazil has caused this increase of our trade with that country.

Mr. HALE. I have not said anything about Brazil, because I have not yet reached that.

Mr. VEST. I take Brazil as an example, because I have here the figures from Brazil. In 1889 Brazil sent to Germany 122,542,000 marks, that is in value; and in 1891 189,748,000 marks. Now, reciprocity did not do that. The same thing occurred as to France, which had no reciprocal relations with Brazil, and the same thing occurred as to Great Britain. Here are the figures showing that the trade between Brazil and those countries which had no reciprocal commercial arrangements with Brazil increased in a larger degree than the trade between Brazil and the United States with reciprocity.

Mr. HALE. The great end and aim, the bright idea that ran all through this reciprocity scheme in the illuminated minds of its projectors, was, I do not mean entirely, but it was largely with the Central and South American countries, where no such conditions existed as they did in Europe. Here were countries producing articles which we do not produce, needing articles which we do produce and they can not, where for years we had witnessed almost the absorption of trade by European rivals.

There was no such condition in the trade with England or France. We had looked on for years and had seen Great Britain and Germany and France absorb seven-eighths of all the trade of the Brazils, of the Argentines, of the countries of South America, and the islands of the Spanish Main, and the object was to divert it from those countries and to give us a portion of the trade, mainly the export trade into those countries, and not so much dealing with the imports from those countries, which are all that the Senator from Missouri cites. The reciprocity feature is based upon certain articles we produce and they do not, and certain articles they produce and we do not, and the operation of it is shown by these figures in regard to all those countries, but none so great as in Cuba.

The Senator from Missouri sticks to Brazil as an illustration. The Senator knew that there has been no opportunity in the last two and a half years to illustrate reciprocity there as we have had it in peaceful countries. The wonder is that any trade has remained between us and Brazil. But let me tell the Senator what all these figures do show, that since this reciprocity agreement has been made with Brazil the exports into that country from Great Britain and France and Germany have steadily decreased.

Upon this I quote from the elaborate and convincing speech of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] of April 22:

The financial condition in Brazil during the last year, Mr. President, has been worse than it can be remembered ever to have been in the past, and it is scarcely necessary to suggest that such conditions have not furnished a fair test of the value of reciprocity arrangements with that country. Yet there has been a notable increase in the exports from the United States.

In 1889 they amounted to $9,351,081; in 1891, the first year of the treaty, they reached $14,120,246; in 1892 they were a little more, and in 1893, the year of the greatest depression and blockaded harbors, they were valued at $12,388,124.

Comparing these figures with the exports from Great Britain to Brazil, we find considerable cause for gratification. In 1889 they were valued at $30,161,500; in 1890, at $37,293,140; in 1891, at $41,550,195. In 1892, the first year after the treaty went into effect, they had fallen to $36,562,631.

The French suffered even more. There was very large gain in the trade between France and Brazil about the time of the overthrow of the empire, which was due to the establishment of a new line of steamers between Havre and the Brazilian ports, but since the reciprocity treaty with the United States was consummated all that was gained has been lost, and the goods that were bought in France are now purchased in the United States. In 1889 the exports from France to Brazil were 70,132,524 francs; in 1890 they increased to 81,010,705 francs; in 1891 they jumped to 102,934,876 francs; but in 1892, when the effect of the treaty was felt, they fell 33,000,000 and were only 69,520,091 francs. The exports from France for 1893 are not yet reported.

Our trade with Brazil has increased not as largely as it has in other countries with which we have negotiated these arrangements, because of the turbulent condition during these times. Not only do the laws cease, inter arma silent leges, but trade ceases. Both cease; and therefore we are not able to show so strong a result there as in Cuba. When we get settled times and an assured government there, and get lines of transportation opened as we have with other countries, then the full result will be shown.

Now, I want to show, on some of these articles affected by a reciprocity treaty, what we have done in Germany in regard to our products exported there. The table is remarkable, showing the increase from 1891 to 1893, inclusive:

Mr. President, Germany was in a condition where we could make a satisfactory trade with her. She was producing and overproducing the article of beet sugar. We took of her an increased product in one year from 300,000,000 pounds to 600,000,000 pounds, and in return for that we got an agreement which discriminated in our favor, so much so that a German authority used the language which I shall read.

This is from an authority in German business circles, the Frankfort Zeitung:

Mr. Blaine's idea has been successful in both cases. It has secured for the United States treaties with Brazil, Cuba, and with other of the South American States, and thus brings Mr. Blaine's great Pan-American scheme nearer realization, at the same time damaging European exporters in all American markets.

It is something to adopt a policy which wrings from our rivals such honest praise. I should be willing to sum up as the benefit of this great policy, which the Republican party is committed to and the Democratic party everywhere tries to destroy, that confession which I repeat:

It has secured for the United States treaties with Brazil, Cuba, and with other of the South American States, and thus brings Mr. Blaine's great Pan-American scheme nearer realization, at the same time damaging European exporters in all American markets.

Mr. GRAY. From what does the Senator read?

Mr. HALE. From the Frankfort Zeitung. The Senator knows that authority, an authority in business and financial circles. It is published in Frankfort-on-the-Main, the center of the German money system.

Mr. Blaine's idea has already forced Germany, Denmark, Austria, and France to repeal their prohibitions of American meat, and Italy is on the point of doing the same. But the documents we reprint to-day constitute Blaine's masterpiece. The central European tariff union has been rendered ineffective with reference to the United States. The German tariff on agricultural products was to be reduced only in favor of Italy and Austria, and to be retained against Russia and America, because the latter nations do not enjoy "the most favored nations' privileges."

This would have been profitable only to German and Austrian farmers, and not to the people, because, these two nations not raising enough grain for themselves, the price would have been fixed, not by Hungarian grain at 3.50 marks, but by American and Russian grain, at 5 marks, as heretofore.

Mr. Blaine, however, has completely upset these calculations and made the new tariff on agricultural products apply to the United States as well, in the reduction of which the United States will profit.

I do not want any better testimony than that, Mr. President; I do not want any better defense of this grand system, which we see in the Senate assailed by ruthless and destructive hands.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, the so-called reciprocity features of the McKinley act were always, I think, very interesting to anyone who presumed to call himself a statesman and to anyone interested in the measures which look toward an increase in the intercourse between this country and the nations of the world.

I have characterized before, and I characterize now, the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] in 1890, and which he has attributed to Mr. Blaine, as a farseeing and statesmanlike view of the condition obtaining in this country and what was to be gained by this country by a lessening of the restrictions on commercial intercourse.

But, Mr. President, I merely rose, not to consume time, but to call the attention of the Senate, and of the Senator from Maine especially, if I may have his attention for a moment, to this fact. I may be wrong about it, but certainly it seems to me there is a misnomer, or a misconception rather, of the effect of the so-called reciprocity feature under the McKinley act.

The Senator has spoken, and other Senators have spoken, and it has been common parlance to say that certain treaties and arrangements have been made by the President of the United States with the countries of this hemisphere by virtue of the third section of the McKinley act. There can be no treaties made by the President under that feature of the McKinley act, because all treaties as such must be ratified and confirmed by the Senate of the United States. The exercise of the treaty-making power by the President is quite independent of any authorization by statute.

Whatever arrangements he may have made are not arrangements that are authorized by that section of the McKinley act. Whatever they may have been—I do not know that I have read any of them—they must have been made upon the authority of the Executive alone. Whether they require the action of the Senate or not, I am not able to say, but certainly they were not contemplated by that section of the McKinley act.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. In the debate which took place in the winter of 1892, largely between the Senator from Missouri and myself, I inadvertently used the word "treaties." My attention was called by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who is now the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, to the fact that these were not treaties, that treaties could not be negotiated under that provision. That is undoubtedly true, and I have not myself since that time fallen into the error—a verbal error only—of calling them "treaties." They are agreements; they are not treaties.

The question as to the right of the President to make them under the statute is a broad, underlying question which Congress must settle for itself.

Mr. HOAR. They are made by concurrent action, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. HALE. Yes; they make a contract or agreement. That it is a great exercise of power, I take it, is not disputed. In the first debate—I do not know but the Senator himself was the author of it—the very witty characterization of this provision in the McKinley act was made, that it allowed the President to make treaties without the Senate and to raise revenue without the House of Representatives.

Mr. GRAY. I think it was Mr. Evarts who said that.

Mr. HALE. And it is a great power, but Congress determined that it would give to him what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has happily called the power to make concurrent arrangements between one country and another. I presume these arrangements can be abrogated without the exercise of the treaty power, as they were made without the exercise of that power.

Mr. GRAY. Congress can repeal even a treaty.

Mr. HALE. Yes; Congress can do so if it so chooses. Without regard to that, these are agreements subsisting by force of a Congressional enactment, and that enactment is now proposed to be repealed, so that the exercise of Congressional power in one case is no greater than in the other.

Mr. GRAY. I am glad to hear what the Senator has said in that regard. I have no partisan purpose in anything I may say or in any language I may use to characterize the arrangements made under the McKinley act. I sincerely want a reciprocity that is broad and liberal, and constitutes, if you choose to call it so, a bit of free trade between this country and the countries adjacent to it, or any countries in the world, if you choose, and that is what I aimed at when I reintroduced the amendment offerred by the Senator from Maine, called by himself the Blaine amendment, as a substitute for the reciprocity feature of the McKinley law. It was a bit of free trade, broad, liberal, and statesmanlike.

What I rose to call the attention of the Senate to was that the language which I understand is proposed to be stricken out by the amendment of the committee to section 101 of the bill, is very properly stricken out, because it speaks, as the Senator from Maine says he has spoken and certain other Senators have spoken, of "agreements or arrangements made or proclaimed between the United States and foreign governments under the provisions of said section."

The section referred to did not authorize any arrangements, any agreements, or any treaties to be made or proclaimed under the authority of that section. That section merely provided as follows:

SEC. 3. That with a view to secure reciprocal trade with countries producing the following articles, and for this purpose, on and after the 1st day of January, 1892, whenever and so often as the President shall be satisfied that the government of any country producing and exporting sugars, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, raw and uncured, or any of such articles, imposes duties or other exactions upon the agricultural or other products of the United States, which in view of the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides into the United States he may deem to be reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, he shall have the power and it shall be his duty—to suspend, by proclamation to that effect, the provisions of this act relating to the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the production of such country, for such time as he shall deem just, and in such case and during such suspension duties shall be levied, collected, and paid upon sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the product of or exported from such designated country.

To do what? To make a treaty? No. To make an arrangement? No. But—

That did not authorize the President of the United States to make any arrangements or any agreements.

Mr. HALE. Did it not?

Mr. GRAY. If he has made any such, he has made them upon his own motion, and whether wisely or not I am not here to say; it may have been with great wisdom, but this act did not authorize it, and this act is not responsible, so far as the action of the President of the United States is concerned, in any such arrangements as the result of any agreement made by the Executive. It is quite as open now to the present Executive to make an arrangement or agreement with any of these countries as it was for the President who was in office at the time that act was passed, and I hope that the President will take that view of it.

Mr. HALE. The Senator and I totally disagree as to the effect of the reciprocity provision which he has quoted. The basis of it was that the President, when he believed that unequal and unreasonable duties were being imposed upon certain of our products by other countries, might reimpose duties upon certain products of those countries. That in itself carried with it the right of the President, when he approached any of these countries and said through diplomatic representatives, "You have oppressive duties upon products of our soil and of our mines and upon our implements of machinery, and unless you arrange your duties upon another scale, to wit, a scale which, under the McKinley act, I shall deem reasonable and proper, I shall reimpose these duties."

The whole thing was a subject of negotiation between the two countries; so that at last the President would not be forced by these unequal and unreasonable duties of foreign countries to reimpose the sugar and other duties if an equal and reasonable rate of duties should be conceded by these countries. Therefore, if there is anything in the law at all, it authorized the President by negotiation to bring about such a condition as he should deem not unequal and not unreasonable.

Mr. President, all of these reciprocal agreements have been made under the avowed authority given by the act of 1890, as quoted by the Senator from Delaware. They have been accepted by all foreign powers as authoritative and as in full force. Each agreement has compelled a like agreement with some other rival country in order to get the benefit which its rival had gained. Brazil forced Spain's hand, and Spain forced the hand of the British West Indian colonies, and the European authority I have read from shows that the agreements with all these countries forced the hand of Germany and other European nations.

The plan has been wonderfully successful. The American people know this and appreciate the broad, deep lines on which it has been conducted. Woe be to the hands that now attempt to destroy it.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, we shall not dispute about words. I believe that the Senator from Maine has as patriotic a desire as I profess to have to prolong and retain and increase any benefits that may arise from this reciprocity, if any exist, between this country and the countries of this hemisphere. I would go further than he, and include the whole world. I should have been glad to have included Canada, as Mr. Blaine's measure intended to include it and Mexico.

But, however that may be, I am not here to cavil about words. I want to impress upon the Senate what seems to me the obvious effect that this language ought to have, which is to go out of the bill, and which the Senator from Missouri was right in saying he was going to move to strike out, "agreements or arrangements made or proclaimed between the United States and foreign governments under the provisions of said section." It still remains true that this section does not authorize any agreements or any arrangements by the President.

It is quite true, as the Senator from Maine has said, that the Executive may have opened negotiations with these countries and threatened them with using the power that this section gave him, but that did not authorize him to make an arrangement, for he was authorized without this very questionable section of the McKinley act, so far as constitutional power goes, to reimpose a duty upon sugar, hides, tea, and molasses whenever he thought the tariff arrangements of a certain country operated unequally or unjustly to this country.

As was wittily said by some one during that debate, and I do not know but that it was our lamented friend, the late Senator from North Carolina, Mr. Vance, for it sounded very much like him, that, if their tariff arrangements were unequal and unjust to this country we retaliated by putting a tax upon our own citizens, as if a man who had been insulted down town should go home and whip his wife in revenge. I think it was the Senator from North Carolina who said that.

We impose no burden upon the foreign country in retaliation for an unequal and unjust tariff arrangement, but we authorize the President to impose a tax on our own people on sugar, on hides, on tea, and on coffee, in case at any time the tariff arrangements of one of these countries should be unequal and unjust. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] smiles. I think he will agree with me about that.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not. Let me explain my position on that point.

Mr. GRAY. I have the law before me, and I should like to hear the Senator on it.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to amend the illustration the Senator just gave.

Mr. GRAY. It was not my illustration. I think it was the illustration of the late Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator said it was like a man whom somebody had insulted down town going home and whipping his wife. I think a more apt illustration would be that, if a man were insulted down town by a merchant, he would refuse to let his wife trade any more at that store.

Mr. GRAY. I like the illustration of the late Senator from North Carolina better than that of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. To take up the point just suggested by the Senator from Delaware as to the effect of the reimposition of duties upon the American consumer, take the case of Venezuela, for instance, where by proclamation the President declared that their system of taxing American products was not satisfactory to us, and the duty was reimposed upon the coffee of Venezuela.

Mr. GRAY. That is just what I said.

Mr. ALDRICH. I want now to see what was the effect of that reimposition. I say that it did not increase the price of coffee in the United States one particle.

Mr. GRAY. I will tell you why.

Mr. ALDRICH. The small proportion of coffee from Venezuela which comes to the American market has no influence upon it.

Mr. GRAY. That is true.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Venezuelan exporter paid the amount of that duty if he brought the coffee into the United States.

Mr. GRAY. I think the Senator is quite right in the illustration. He has shown the effect he has described as flowing from that act of the President, because the importation of coffee from Venezuela was so small that it did not affect the price to the consumer in this country; and, therefore, if the reimposition of the tax was not a tax upon the coffee from Brazil, or from Central America, or from wherever the large consumption in the United States is made, then unquestionably the tax would have been imposed upon the consumer in this country.

That was the power with which the President was armed. Whenever he thought the tariff arrangements of any of these countries operated unequally or unjustly toward us, he retaliated by reimposing a tax upon commodities of that country which went into the consumption of the people of the United States. We can not get away from that.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the President under the provisions of this act reimposed a duty upon all the coffee that comes into the United States——

Mr. GRAY. He never would have done so.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is a mere supposition on the part of the Senator. We knew when we passed that act that Brazil was anxious to enter into reciprocal arrangements with the United States under this provision. That was a well-known fact which was publicly stated by the Brazilian minister before the act was passed.

I will say to the Senator if we had reimposed the duty on Brazilian coffee, it might have had some effect, but it would not have had the effect the Senator contemplates. We receive about 40 or 50 per cent of our coffee from Brazil. The development in the other coffee-producing countries of Central and South America would have been so great that in a very short time the effect upon the price would have been rendered nugatory. Brazil never could have afforded to be kept out of the American market, because three-fourths, or at least a large proportion, of the coffee grown in Brazil is sent to the United States to market.

Mr. GRAY. That is the old argument, into which I do not intend to go, as to whether the imposition of taxes raises the price of an article to the consumer. But what I said is not denied by either the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] or the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], that the reciprocity section of the McKinley act undertook to punish those countries that imposed unequal and unjust tariff regulations on the products of the United States, not by anything directed against the citizens of those countries, but by imposing a tax on our own citizens. That is what I say.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do deny the proposition.

Mr. GRAY. Let me go on. Here it is in the book.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator himself admits that, so far as Venezuela is concerned, it is not true.

Mr. GRAY. I admitted that in the case of Venezuela, because the coffee production of that country is an infinitesimal portion in the consumption of the United States, and therefore it did not essentially affect it. But here is the principle, here is the line and letter to which I point the Senator from Rhode Island, and he can not gainsay it.

That was the object of the just criticism of some of the most distinguished Senators on the other side of the Chamber at the time of the passage of the law, and it was one of the grounds on which the distinguished Senator from New York, Mr. Evarts, distinguished as a jurist as well as a statesman, opposed and denounced this provision of that law, and used the very witty characterization of it which was spoken of by the Senator from Maine.

To go back—I do not wish to consume any more time—I started to say that if any of those treaties or arrangements which were entered into by the President—not under the authority of the reciprocity provision of the McKinley act, for there is no authority there given—are fruitful of good results to the United States, by the abrogation of those words in the section to which I have referred they can be retained, and the present President of the United States has precisely the same authority to negotiate with those countries in consideration of receiving from them free coffee, free hides, free tea, free wool, as we have it now, in place of free sugar—it is open to him to make any of these arrangements, any of these negotiations that his predecessor made, and which have been referred on this floor, and are referred to in this proposed amendment as "agreements or arrangements."

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator believe that it would have been possible to have made any of these arrangements without free sugar?

Mr. GRAY. I think it would.

Mr. ALDRICH. With what countries?

Mr. GRAY. With any of the nations with which they have been made.

Mr. ALDRICH. With Cuba?

Mr. GRAY. I think so.

Mr. ALDRICH. With Spain and Germany? Nobody would ever have attempted it. I never heard of any such suggestion.

Mr. GRAY. I recollect very well the brilliant speech made by the Senator from New York, Mr. Evarts, against this provision of the McKinley act, and there has just been handed to me a copy of his speech from the RECORD, upon which he has printed as the sentiment of the whole speech one sentence of it, which is:

What should it profit this nation to gain the whole world of commerce and lose its own soul—the soul of its institutions, the manhood of its laboring men, our liberty, our equality, our fraternity?

Mr. President, I am as anxious as the Senator from Maine and as the Senator from Rhode Island can be, and will be emulous with them now or hereafter to bring about, in any proper and constitutional way, reciprocity with any country in this hemisphere, including Canada, as Mr. Blaine's amendment included it, and including the nations of the Old World, or any nation reciprocity with which will gain the consent of this Senate and of the House of Representatives, or will persuade the Executive of the United States to send us a reciprocity treaty with.

If the reciprocity amendment offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] in 1890, and known as the Blaine amendment, can be so altered as to fit the present situation with dutiable sugar, I shall be glad to offer it again, or I shall be glad to give it my support if someone else offers it. If some Senator will substitute free wool for free sugar, and offer it, I shall vote for it, as I did vote for it three years ago. I am in favor of reciprocity. I am in favor of breaking wherever we can through the walls that tariffs make between the intercourse of the nations of the world. I am for freer trade all the time. I am for increasing the intercourse of the people of this country with the peoples of the world, because from that increased intercourse can only come blessings to all the inhabitants of this land.

Mr. ALDRICH. Before the Senator sits down I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. GRAY. Very well.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator agree that agreements or arrangements, or whatever they were, which were entered into between the United States and the representatives of different governments, ostensibly under the provisions of the McKinley act, and without the knowledge on the part of Congress that they had been entered into, are binding upon the respective governments until some change is had in the legislation of the respective governments?

Mr. GRAY. I should not think so.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator think they are binding or not?

Mr. GRAY. I have never heard of those agreements. They were never put in the book of treaties, so far as I know.

Mr. ALDRICH. But they were reported to the Congress of the United States by the President as having been entered into, and Congress was notified of their terms. They were entered into under the provisions of the McKinley act, and the respective governments of those countries were bound apparently on the face of the papers by those arrangements. Now, does the Senator contend that they had no force, and that they can not be enforced either here or anywhere else?

Mr. GRAY. I certainly do.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is a very strange theory.

Mr. GRAY. And yet I can understand—and I am not hypercritical about the exercise of the President's power to make those arrangements or agreements—but I certainly do understand that the Executive has no right to make any binding agreement with another country unless he sends it to the Senate of the United States for its action.

If he chooses to engage or enter into an arrangement in such ways as the executives of other countries come together for certain purposes, and that results in any benefit to this country, well and good. I do not want to be hypercritical about it. All I say is that the same power rests in the Executive, and he can make arrangements or treaties and send them to the Senate or make such agreements as have been made, because the repeal of the McKinley act does not take away the power, as it did not confer it. It never conferred any such power on the President to make treaties.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator contend that the Congress of the United States may not authorize the President of the United States to enter into commercial arrangements or agreements with other nations that might be binding without the ratification of the Senate, as a treaty would have to be ratified?

Mr. GRAY. I think not. I think we must have concurrent legislation which would amount to a ratification.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is all anybody contends for.

Mr. GRAY. I am quite willing for that.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware a question or two. The Senator says that the present Executive would have the same power to enter into these commercial arrangements with other countries as his predecessor had. I suppose the Senator from Delaware will not contend that, under the provisions of the pending measure, the President of the United States would have any power to reimpose duties or cause duties to be collected on wool or lumber or sugar or molasses or hides or coffee, should this bill become a law.

Mr. GRAY. No.

Mr. DOLPH. By the provisions of the McKinley law, now under discussion, Congress attempted to give the President power by proclamation——

Mr. GRAY. I understand that, and I could not vote for it.

Mr. DOLPH. To cause duties to be collected under the provisions of the McKinley law on certain products—sugar, coffee, molasses, hides, etc. That was the inducement.

Mr. GRAY. I understand that.

Mr. DOLPH. The failure or declination of the President of the United States to make such a proclamation was the inducement to other countries to give us favorable commercial legislation, to either reduce their duties or admit free the products of the United States. What would the present Executive have to offer to those countries as an inducement to modify their revenue laws in regard to the introduction of products of the United States?

Mr. GRAY. He would have—many things.

Mr. DOLPH. He would have nothing. It would be a mere concession on the part of other countries, and there would be nothing we could offer in any shape as an inducement for the concession.

I only desire to say in reference to what the Senator has said concerning Canada, that Canada will not want any commercial arrangement with us. Canada will not want any arrangement with us by which she can introduce anything into this country or admit anything into hers, because she gets practically, without any consideration, all she desires by the provisions of this bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I must confess my great surprise at the statement of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] in regard to the present reciprocity arrangements. As I understand that Senator, he claims that there is no binding force or effect whatever in the various arrangements which have been entered into ostensibly under section 3 of the act of 1890. The amendment just submitted by the Senator from Missouri for the committee contains this language:

> Or in any way affect such reciprocal commercial arrangements as have been heretofore made and now exist between the United States and foreign countries.

Mr. GRAY. That is all right. I am in favor of that, as I said while on the floor.

Mr. ALDRICH. If no such arrangements exist by authority of law, why should this provision be put in the bill? If the President of the United States has exceeded his power in the negotiation of these arrangements, or in making these arrangements, why should they be accepted? It seems to me the position of the Senator from Delaware is a very strange one.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware another question. I ask if the Senator favors an amendment to this bill empowering the President of the United States by proclamation to restore the McKinley duties on wool and lumber to countries that will not make proper commercial concessions to the United States?

Mr. GRAY. The Senator knows I would not do that.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not know, then, what the Senator means when he says he is in favor of commercial arrangements with other countries.

Mr. ALDRICH. By the submission of the amendment I have just read, the majority of the Committee on Finance, I suppose representing the other side of the Chamber, have changed their attitude entirely in regard to these reciprocal relations. They now seem to admit their wisdom and force and desire their continuance for everything, except in regard to sugar. Heretofore these arrrngements have been denounced, and the third section of the act of 1890 has been abused more than any other portion of that act. The whole of the Democratic party, apparently, was opposed to all of its provisions. Now we have in this amendment a recognition of its wisdom and a proposition to continue the arrangements in force, except such of those arrangements as might be continued by the imposition of a duty upon sugar.

If it be true that it is wise to apply this principle to hides, to coffee, and to the other articles mentioned in that paragraph, except sugar, why not apply it to wool? It seems to me there would be a great opportunity, and Australia would be obliged to make a very liberal arrangement with the United States, rather than to have a duty reimposed upon their production of wool. The Argentine Republic would be obliged to make a very liberal arrangement in regard to manufactured goods, rather than to have her wools excluded from the United States, as they would practically be excluded by the reimposition of a duty. The same principle would apply to lumber.

If the principle is a good one, if the provisions of the act of 1890 are wise, as now seems to be conceded upon the other side of the Chamber, why not make the application as broad as possible under the provisions of this act?

Mr. MILLS. Why not embrace cotton goods and woolen goods and iron and steel manufactures and extend the principle?

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will permit me, there is no such proposition in this bill.

Mr. MILLS. Why not put one in, if this is as good a thing as we are told it is?

Mr. ALDRICH. Those articles have not been put on the free list, and I do not understand that even the Senator from Texas, with his progressive notions in regard to tariff reform, is willing to put cotton and woolen goods on the free list.

Mr. MILLS. But we might make reciprocal arrangements by which we would reduce the duties on these goods with Germany, France, and those countries.

Mr. ALDRICH. No suggestion of that kind has been made.

Mr. MILLS. But if this principle is as good as we have been told on the other side that it is, and I believe it is, why not extend it to cotton goods and woolen goods, and iron and steel and lumber and silk, and all along the line, and let us have the benefit of it?

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no suggestion of that kind contained in the original proposition or in the pending amendment——

Mr. MILLS. I make it now.

Mr. ALDRICH. As to any articles except such as are put upon the free list by the bill. If the Senator from Texas will put his proposition in terms, we shall be able to consider it.

There was a point made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to which I think I ought to make some response. He asked the question why, with a differential duty on cotton goods exported from this country to Brazil, the exportation was not largely increased. I think that question can be easily answered. It is true that we have, under the arrangements made with Brazil, a reduction of duty of 25 per cent upon cotton goods, as against the other competing countries of the world, making an arbitrary reduction of 12½ per cent upon American cotton goods.

The vast amount of cotton goods used in Brazil are of a peculiar character. They are largely printed goods of a peculiar width, made up into pieces of a peculiar length, and done up in packages of a form and shape which will enable them to be carried on the backs of mules far into the interior of that vast country. That trade has been in the possession of the manufacturers of Germany and of Great Britain for generations. They know exactly what class of goods Brazil demands, and they have been accustomed to make goods for that country; they have the market; in other words, they have the banking facilities.

All the exchange of Brazil is done through London. They have every facility; they have direct regular transportation lines with Brazil. We have up to this time none of these advantages. Brazil has been, as every Senator knows, for the last two or three years in a state of commotion; there has been no civil order at the great ports of Brazil; trade has been very uncertain; and it would be unreasonable to expect that trade will be diverted from its regular channels under such conditions.

The cotton goods which are sent to the United States from Great Britain and France and Germany are not the class of goods which are sent by any one of those countries or by the United States to Brazil. The goods sent here by those countries are fine, fancy cottons, high-priced novelties, luxuries which will continue very largely to be sent here, while the goods which are sent to Brazil by all these countries are a class of goods which can be made almost if not quite as cheaply in the United States as they can be made in any portion of the world.

I suggest to Senators that in time this discrimination in favor of cotton goods will as surely produce a large increase in the exports of cotton from this country to Brazil, as that the sun will rise to-morrow morning. There can be no question whatever about that, for we can make cottons of this class very nearly as cheaply, if not quite as cheaply, as Germany and as England, with this advantage: when we come to have direct transportation, and when our manufacturers and merchants come to learn the tastes of the people of that country, and shall make their goods conform to the goods which are sent there from other countries, we shall certainly get that trade.

It is a very slow process to change the currents of trade where they have been running one way for a generation. The process would be slow if we had the advantages which are possible for us to procure, but with the existence of some disadvantages, the process must be even still slower. I am myself certain that if we retain the reciprocal arrangements which are now in existence with Brazil, within a very short time, and in the near future, we shall increase very largely our exports of cotton goods to that country.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. President, I confess that I am not less gratified than surprised to find our friends on the other side of the Chamber, especially those in charge of the pending bill, turn up bright and fresh this hot morning in favor of reciprocity. My only recollection of the utterances of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] heretofore on the subject has been the finest ridicule and scorn he could pour upon the whole scheme as one of pretense and fraud, and not one of wholesale possibilities of future commerce with foreign countries; but we know that "while the lamp holds out to burn" there are various results to follow. Just what will be the result of the proposed amendment of the majority of the Finance Committee is quite uncertain.

As stated by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], not merely the existing reciprocal conventions are to be affected by imposing a duty upon sugar, but they may be upset by various other provisions of the proposed tariff act after it shall have been enacted into law.

The proposition of the McKinley act was that we should make free certain products of tropical countries, namely products which we could not produce in the United States, certainly to a sufficient quantity to satisfy our demand; that those articles should be made by the tariff law duty free, but the President was clothed with the authority to reimpose those duties whenever, in his opinion, nations growing such products treated the United States inequitably in their tariff arrangements.

This bill proposes to cut that all up. The intention, the proposition, the scheme of the majority now, is to remit all the authority in this behalf to the President and the Senate as the joint custodians of the executive authority to make treaties. The existing reciprocity treaties were made by the President by mere convention or arrangement, with no necessity of submitting them to the Senate even for ratification. The authority was given by the Senate beforehand, and by both branches of Congress. No arrangement of the kind can now be made, unless it is negotiated by the President and ratified by two-thirds of the Senate. So there is a serious objection to this change because of the greater difficulty of arranging such conventions.

If my recollection is right as to our attempt to make a reciprocal treaty with Mexico in the time of President Grant (it was before I became a member of the Senate) I think such a treaty was made, but failed of ratification in the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. It was later than Gen. Grant's time.

Mr. ALLISON. The treaty was ratified by the Senate, but it required legislation to make it effectual. The House of Representatives, then being Democratic, refused to pass the legislation, although Mr. Abram S. Hewitt reported a bill for that purpose, accompanied by a long and exhaustive report upon the subject. In order to secure such legislation we made a treaty with Mexico a second time, extending the period for it to go into effect, so that the House of Representatives could have an additional opportunity to pass the legislation. During the entire period of the existence of the treaty and the extension of it the Democratic House refused to pass the legislation.

Mr. HOAR. Was it not after Gen. Grant's time, and after his visit to Mexico?

Mr. HIGGINS. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the first treaty was negotiated by Gen. Grant; I am not sure about that point, but it was all done during the Administration of President Arthur.

Mr. HOAR. That is what I understand.

Mr. HIGGINS. I am glad to have the advantage of the full knowledge of the Senator from Iowa. All that happened before I was a member of the Senate. It only illustrates, however, the very much greater difficulty of securing the enactment or the perpetuity of such a policy when it rests upon the treaty-making power. It shows the enormous efficiency of the scheme of reciprocity initiated in the McKinley act.

I am glad to know that my colleague is in favor of reciprocity and that he is not a convert to it; that he has always been in favor of it. I do not understand or at least appreciate the force of his criticism upon the language of the third section of the McKinley act, that it does not in terms give the President power to negotiate such treaties. If it does not do so in terms, it does by implication.

The President has the power, as I have already stated, to reimpose the duty on sugar, hides, and other products named in the act where he considers the arrangement made by any other nation inequitable. Under that provision the President of the United States in the last Administration did negotiate, I believe, fifteen such treaties, and I do not understand that my colleague or any other Senator or anyone else impugns the validity of those reciprocal conventions. They have been accepted and they are doing their beneficent work.

The two most interesting examples of their effects are Cuba and Brazil, the one almost free from obstructions and having had a fair sweep that might tell what its results would be; the other full of promise, of hope, and of interest to every American on the northern or southern portion of the western hemisphere, and yet met so far by obstructions, though none so deadly as the Democratic majority in this Congress.

To Cuba, since our reciprocal arrangement with Spain went into effect, we have more than doubled our exports. From less than $12,000,000 before the treaty they rose to over $24,000,000 in 1893.

What they would amount to in time, if its beneficent sway were unimpeded, time alone can tell. Cuba is a survivor of the old colonial system of the European countries. The mother country would allow the colony to trade with nobody but herself; its goods to be carried in none but the ships of the mother country, and the colony could only buy its goods from the mother country on such terms as she saw proper to fix.

The repeated insurrections in Cuba, with which we are only too familiar, grew not merely out of a rule of severe, if not savage repression in the years that are past, more particularly back in the fifties, a brutal and cruel rule, but out of the commercial repression which Spain so mercilessly imposed upon Cuba. I am afraid to say how much a barrel of flour cost in Cuba before our flour went there. It is all contained in the very instructive speech of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] delivered in the earlier period of this debate. I think it was something over $12 a barrel, and so the people could not use flour at all. I am told it was between $11 and $12 a barrel. They now get it for $6, and $1 is imposed on American flour. They are thus now enabled to enjoy that comfort of life.

Spain just milked and milked and milked Cuba until there was hardly anything left. Of all the negroes who were carried into that island, I am told that only about 250,000 remain now, and with its unsurpassed resources its other population does not exceed a million and a half. She is feeling the breath of life that is everything to her, relatively small as she is compared with us. We are enjoying a splendid fruition from this policy on our part.

Spain is near us. There is no difficulty in the carrying trade between her and us. It is easy for us to get our productions there and for her commerce to come here, and in that respect it is very different from Brazil. Brazil is the piece de resistance of our friends on the other side. There is an example of how it is that water will not run downhill, that people will not buy cheaper goods, and that a differential in favor of one country and against another is not an advantage to the one which gets it. All these propositions must be maintained in all their absurdity if this reciprocal scheme is abandoned and on a pretext of reason.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] a few minutes ago summarized a great many of the facts which show why we have been enabled to extend commerce to Brazil under the advantages we have obtained from her. At the time when these reciprocity conventions were authorized by the McKinley act Brazil bought from us only what she had to. I know that, because there was a very considerable, valuable, and interesting trade between Brazil and my own city.

Almost contemporaneously with the enactment of the McKinley act Brazil ceased to be an empire and became a republic. She was greeted into the family of nations by our Government, which with reasonable promptness acknowledged her independence and welcomed her into the family of the free. Up to that time her whole commerce had been with Europe, and all of its incidents and control had been European. I can not find this matter better stated than it is in the speech of the Senator from Minnesota, and I beg to read from it this very interesting statement of the condition of things:

> The reciprocity arrangement with Brazil for a mutual reduction of duties was the first negotiated and the first to go into effect, and although that country has been suffering almost continuously ever since from domestic political disturbances, our export trade has not diminished, and our imports have increased to a remarkable degree. The foreign commerce of Brazil is almost entirely controlled by Europeans. The large importing and commission houses are English; the banking capital is English, and the principal newspapers are owned or controlled by Englishmen, so that public sentiment, so far as it can be created or controlled by such influences, is prejudicial to the United States. When the treaty was proposed, and still more when it was promulgated, the British influence in official circles, in the Congress, and in the press was bitter and determined against it.
> An attempt was made to have it denounced as unconstitutional. Public meetings were called and addressed by Englishmen to bully the Government and excite the animosities of the people, and every pretext was seized upon to make trouble.

They did not stop there. All the instrumentalities which have been used by the European commercial powers, and by none more than by our cousins the English, were put into opposition:

> Then came a bitter and relentless war of rates, and the natural obstacles to an increased commerce were supplemented by unusual efforts on the part of European merchants to retain a trade that, under the reciprocity arrangements with this country, was seriously threatened. They reduced prices upon merchandise that might be bought in the United States and sold even at a loss, to prevent and frighten competition, and the steamship lines from Europe assisted them by cutting rates of transportation below the limit of profitable traffic. Writing on this subject the United States consul-general at Rio de Janeiro said:
> "The reduction of transportation rates from Europe seriously interferes with our shipping interests, and charterers can engage vessels on any terms; and they are often indifferent to risks and dispatch. Capt. Roy, of the sailing vessel Cora, is just in with a cargo of coal from Cardiff and was paid 16s. a ton only, while in 1888 for the same voyage and a similar cargo he received 24s., and so with many others."

Of course all that was on top of the grave disturbance of trade which grew out of the South American countries being upon the silver standard, the fall of silver, and the heavy fluctuations of exchange which were consequent upon it.

Mr. President, this arrangement of ours with Brazil played its part in her affairs, not merely so to speak commercially. It had its political result there. There was an insurrection fomented against the Brazilian Government.

That insurrection received support and countenance, possibly pecuniary support, from the European commercial influences which were prejudiced by the reciprocity arrangement between the United States and Brazil. If it had rested upon European influences and navies alone it is very questionable whether that insurrection would have been suppressed. If there had been no reciprocity treaty between the United States and Brazil, it is very questionable whether there ever would have been any insurrection fomented.

But our Democratic Administration did one good thing, and I am very glad to be able to give the expression of my hearty approval of and assent to their conduct in that behalf. Probably taking a lesson from their sorry experience in Hawaii, they put a formidable squadron at Rio Janeiro. They placed there an American who will ever hold a warm place in the hearts of his countrymen, and whose reply, on his return home when there were expressions of approval of his conduct in the harbor of Brazil in double shotting his guns and clearing his ship for action to secure the unloading and discharging of American commercial vessels, was a worthy one. "I only did my duty as an American sailor."

Mr. President, that is the most interesting political and historical fact on the southern portion of our continent, so far as respects the United States of America and our relations with them, since the last of them was recognized first by us and then by all the nations of the world. It was the completion of the application by us to South America of the Monroe doctrine in its fullness. Thank God that we had a fleet, which had guns and sailors, lying there in that harbor, and which, surrounded by the fleets of Europe, but having behind it the imperial power of this nation, said to them, "All hands off; you have no business here; the Republic of Brazil stands under the ægis of her sister Republic of the North."

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not know that the Senator from Delaware is aware of the fact; it may not have come to his knowledge, but in connection and as a very delightful supplement to that which he is saying, I will state that on the 4th day of July in Rio Janeiro there will be laid the corner stone of a monument, to be erected by popular subscription in that Republic, to Monroe, the author of the Monroe doctrine. I understand that $450,000 have been raised among the people throughout that Republic for the purpose of erecting the statue, and the corner stone will be laid on our national anniversary.

Mr. HIGGINS. I am obliged to the Senator from Nebraska for his reminder. I was about to refer to that interesting fact. It is a fact of profound interest to the people of Brazil, to the people of the United States, and to the citizens of every nation on the western hemisphere. It is a notice to all the world that at last it is America for Americans. We are making good the words and the doctrine and the message of Mr. Monroe.

Our brethren in Brazil recognize it, and they are recognizing it in an adequate manner. Not on their natal day, but on ours, on the Fourth of July, on a foreign soil, in the great city of Rio Janeiro, the people of the new Republic of Brazil will lay the cornerstone of a monument which shall stand as the perpetual memorial of the fact that under the ægis and protection of the United States of America the United States of Brazil is forever free from European domination.

Mr. President, that political freedom began in commercial freedom from European domination, given to it by section 3 of the McKinley act, and its policy initiated by the great statesman of our period, Mr. Blaine, welcomed by them, fought inch by inch by these European influences, which would have used any means, fomented revolution, in order that it might not be applied. They need not have gone so far; they need not have sought allies in Brazil, in citizens there who for one cause of discontent or another would undertake by violence to overthrow the established authority of the country and foment revolution.

They need not have resorted to lowering their rates of freight, selling their goods at lower prices, and putting on such pressure as was within their control from European sources. They did not know where their friends were. They did not know where the theater of action was. Their friends, the enemies of the interests of the United States, are the Democratic majority on this floor. Here they have friends who, with one sweep, will brush away this obstacle to European trade and throttle in its cradle this splendid promise of American foreign trade, and that done in the name of promoting American foreign trade.

I feel deeply on this question as a citizen of the United States. Mr. Blaine shook up the majority in this Chamber and the Committee on Finance in a right lively way, and he meant to do it. He came down to the Capitol. He did not get satisfaction. With his ability to press the button and to touch the public, he made that famous utterance: "Your bill," he said—a tariff bill to promote what he believed in—"does not add to the market of the American farmer for a single bushel of wheat or a single pound of pork."

Mr. HAWLEY. But that was not exactly true.

Mr. HIGGINS. I am coming to that; wait a moment. He had a purpose in it. At that time there was in the bill no provision by which the reciprocity system might be inaugurated. It had been proposed, but it had not been accepted; it had not been formulated. When it was his criticism was met, and the act was free from it.

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose the Senator from Delaware wants to be accurate respecting dates, etc. The observation which he has quoted from Mr. Blaine was before the Committee on Finance of the Senate dealt with the tariff bill at all.

Mr. HIGGINS. Yes; I accept that.

Mr. ALLISON. I understood the Senator to say that the distinguished gentleman who was then our Secretary of State shook up the Finance Committee. I merely wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the letter which Mr. Blaine wrote to one of our colleagues, was written before the Finance Committee dealt with the bill at all.

Mr. HIGGINS. I am glad to be corrected. I had not the opportunity at that time to secure accurate information. It has now been three or four years since the event, and I had more in mind the rather lively account which was attributed to the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] as to what took place at that time. I did not know exactly what the facts were.

It is enough to know that the criticism was met by the McKinley bill as it became law. It is not met by the Wilson bill as it now stands. On the contrary the pending bill as it stands to-day gives away our agricultural market to Canada, when she has products that are fit for our use, and in the same way it shuts us out from the market given to us by the reciprocity features of the McKinley act.

I say I am interested in it, and deeply, as a citizen of the United States. Every farmer growing wheat, or pork, or corn which makes pork, or any other product of the farm has found a market, and if this policy were to be steadily pursued by our Government our farmers would find a steadily widening market for all that they produce. We pried open as with a crowbar the doors of the German market for the much anathematized American hog; and so of France, so of Cuba, so of all the tropical countries which do not grow wheat and other products of the temperate zones.

But it does not stop there, Mr. President. The market for manufactures has been ours in all those countries. Take the case of Brazil. I read again from facts given by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] in his thoroughly considered speech. He says:

> The financial condition in Brazil during the last year has been worse than it can be remembered ever to have been in the past, and it is scarcely necessary to suggest that such conditions have not furnished a fair test of the value of reciprocity arrangements with that country. Yet there has been a notable increase in the exports from the United States.
> In 1889 they amounted to $9,351,081; in 1890, the first year of the treaty, they reached $14,120,246; in 1892 they were a little more, and in 1893, the year of the greatest depression and blockaded harbors, they were valued at $12,388,124.

So they steadily grew, in spite of silver depression, the fluctuations of exchange, revolts, insurrection, and blockades.

> Comparing these figures with the exports from Great Britain to Brazil, we find considerable cause for gratification. In 1889 they were valued at $30,161,500; in 1890, at $37,293,140; in 1891, at $41,550,195. In 1892, the first year after the treaty went into effect, they had fallen to $36,562,631.

This is the way the British suffered from the effect of this policy. Our trade increased; theirs decreased.

> The French suffered even more. There was very large gain in the trade between France and Brazil about the time of the overthrow of the empire, which was due to the establishment of a new line of steamers between Havre and the Brazilian ports, but since the reciprocity treaty with the United States was consummated all that was gained has been lost, and the goods that were bought in France are now purchased in the United States. In 1889 the exports from France to Brazil were 70,132,528 francs; in 1890 they increased to 81,010,705 francs; in 1891 they jumped to 102,934,876 francs; but in 1892 when the effect of the treaty was felt they fell 33,000,000, and were only 69,520,091 francs. The exports from France for 1893 are not yet reported.

That was its effect on our manufactures everywhere. I have letters from manufacturers in my city almost beseeching me that something may be done to preserve from destruction the trade which has come to them by reason of the reciprocity treaty. It has come to concerns in my own city who thereby have been able to keep their works going in these times of home depression, who have been able to keep their men employed and thus enable those men and their families to keep the wolf from the door. Mr. President, I do not want to see this policy struck down. I do not want to see it struck down in this time of agony through which this people is going.

Senators on the other side of the Chamber this morning profess themselves in favor of reciprocity. They undertake to repudiate the provision of the McKinley act under which these treaties have been negotiated and this policy established. They are going to substitute something else. They are going to put a duty on sugar, if they can have their way, and in addition to that duty, with the advantages given to the sugar trust, they are placing a direct imposition alike upon every farmer and manufacturer and farm laborer and manufactory employé in this country. They are putting that burden on them at a time when they are professing to be the apostles of a freer and larger trade. They are cutting us off from the great trade which has thus been opened to us. It needs no word of warning from me.

Let them see well to it that they do not touch this fabric. Let them see well to it that the markets thus gained abroad are not taken out of the mouths of our people; that our concerns at home are not shut up; that in the name of free trade, free trade is not sealed where we already have it.

This course is all the more extraordinary because of the action of foreign nations. The trick, if I may so call it, of the McKinley act, the idea of reciprocal trade, was altogether too smart for foreign nations not to emulate it and adopt it.

So we see that they are all making such arrangements with one another. Germany is making them with Austria, Russia, Roumania, and other countries. France is making them in the same way. England has actually made them with Old Spain. We take away the benefit of a market from our manufactures and farmers, with all the advantage we have thus given them, and the reciprocal treaties made by Germany, Austria, and France with other countries will thereby effectually shut out our people from their markets.

Mr. President, all we want to know is that that is the proposition. This bill is bad enough. It is bad enough for it to be killed. On many accounts I am sorry in any way to see it made better. What it deserves is to be cut up by the roots and thrown out into utter darkness. But if there is any one thing in respect to which an appeal might be made to at least the selfish discretion of the other side, it is that this party which plants itself on the broad doctrine of freer and larger trade shall wake up to the fact that foreign nations are accepting the policy in which we led off, and that we should not destroy the great weapon by which we do not ask, but compel, a nation to give us trade. When we reform we reform with a club.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I have but a few words to say. When the reciprocity system or plan was first proposed I confess that I was prejudiced against it partly by the reason assigned in the brilliant observation which somebody quoted here, that it gave the President power to make a treaty without the consent of the Senate and power to provide for revenue without the consent of the House of Representatives, and it might have been added that it gave the President power to put an end to means of revenue also.

I confess I am surprised that this system meets with opposition from Democrats who are free traders, because in its way and to a certain extent it ought to be considered the ideal free trade. But perhaps their objection to it may be that it is at the same time decidedly a protective measure. We make very easily reciprocity arrangements with the nation that desires to furnish us that which we do not produce or manufacture and to receive in return that which they do not produce or manufacture. It is an ideal exchange. The arrangements, especially with Spain, have eventuated very happily so far as my constituents are concerned.

I am perfectly well aware, however, especially after the phase has been so well presented here, that it is quite useless for me to occupy the time of the Senate. The reason why I rose is found in the following abstract from a letter from a very large manufacturing concern in my State:

> We most earnestly desire that you will do what you can to avert the repeal of existing tariff reciprocity laws.
> The commercial arrangements that have been effected by our Government under reciprocity have been very helpful to this company, and have increased our trade very much, especially with Cuba and Brazil.

They have always been large traders with South America, manufacturing a class of articles that sold by reason of the stamp placed upon them. No matter who made a similar article elsewhere, the buyers would have only that which bore this particular trade-mark. They proceed to say:

At considerable expense and trouble we have been able, through correspondents and travelers, to get trade turned to us which, before reciprocity, went to Europe on account of the lower prices, with which we could not compete.

This trade has only recently been secured, and we should deplore any legislation that defeated the opportunities existing under reciprocity.

This is not the only concern in my State that has been affected by these excellent arrangements; it is not the only one that will be severely affected by the passage of the pending tariff bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KYLE in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I wish to say a few words. I think we ought to understand clearly the effect of the amendment and the effect of the section when amended as proposed. The section without the amendment now offered by the Senator from Missouri takes away from the President of the United States the authority given to him by the third section of the McKinley law, so far as the power of exercising that authority in the future is concerned. I think there is no doubt about that. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri after repealing the third section, which gives this authority to the President, provides:

But nothing herein contained shall be held to abrogate or in any way affect such reciprocal commercial arrangements as have been heretofore made and now exist between the United States and foreign countries except where such arrangements are inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask whether there is any escape from the conclusion that the arrangements are "inconsistent with the provisions of this act" as to the duty on sugar?

Mr. ALLISON. I am coming to that in a few moments.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall listen to the Senator with pleasure.

Mr. ALLISON. The language is "But nothing herein contained." That, I take it, would mean nothing contained in this repealing provision, and it does not apply to the whole act.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH GERMANY, ETC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa will please suspend that the Chair may lay before the Senate a message from the President of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

Answering a resolution of your honorable body, dated the 13th instant, I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State, with an accompanying document, which contain all the information in my possession touching the matters embraced in said resolution.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 29, 1894.

Mr. MORGAN. What does the message relate to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is an answer to a resolution relating to reciprocal trade relations, the Chair understands.

Mr. ALLISON. It is an answer, I think, to the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] which inquired as to what protests, etc., are being made by foreign governments. I think it might be wise to have the accompanying report read. I have no objection to its being read, unless it is too long.

Mr. MORGAN. If it is not long I should like to hear it read. I want to see what it amounts to.

Mr. ALDRICH. It ought to be read, I think.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The accompanying report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the President:

On the 13th instant you referred to the undersigned a resolution of the Senate adopted on that day, in the following words:

"Resolved, That if not incompatible with the public interests, the President be requested to communicate to the Senate forthwith all representations, written or oral, that have been made to the Government of the United States, or the Department of State, by the representative of any foreign government in relation to the probable action of such governments by way of retaliation for the proposed imposition by the United States of a duty upon sugar, and especially as to the probable exclusion of the agricultural products of the United States by such governments from their territories; and especially whether any, and what, representations have been so received in relation to the probable action of Germany and of Guatemala, or either of them.

"Further, That the President be respectfully requested to furnish to the Senate any information which he has received as to any measure pending in the Cortes of Spain looking to retaliation upon the United States for the proposed abrogation of the reciprocity with that country, secured by the statute of 1890."

Mr. MORGAN. I supposed it referred to a matter of that kind. It ought to go to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALDRICH. It ought to be read.

Mr. CHANDLER. It seems to me it ought to be read before the speech of the Senator from Iowa, if it is not too long.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it would prove more valuable probably than anything I could say.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am in mortal fear of offending the Senator from Tennessee, but still I think I will call for the reading of the communication.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the report of the Secretary of State.

The Secretary continued the reading, as follows:

In response to that resolution, the undersigned has the honor to report that no representations, written or oral, have been made to the Department of State, by or on behalf of any foreign Government, and in particular by or on behalf of the Governments of Germany and Gautemala, touching any proposed action looking to the exclusion of agricultural products of the United States by way of retaliation for the proposed imposition by the United States of a duty upon sugar.

A dispatch from the United States embassy at Berlin, dated the 9th instant, of which a copy is subjoined, transmits an apparently authoritative denial by a semiofficial German newspaper, of the truth of an item printed in the London Times on the 8th instant, to the effect that the German Government had protested against the sugar schedule then before the Senate, and had given an intimation that if a duty against bounty-paying countries was imposed, Germany would retaliate against American products.

On the 17th of May last, in a personal conference, the Gautemalan minister at this capital represented to the undersigned that, under the reciprocity arrangement (by him called a treaty) of December 30, 1891, between the United States and Guatemala large sums had been invested by his countrymen in machinery for the production of sugar, with a view to and enjoying the benefits of the American markets; that this large outlay would not have been incurred had it been supposed the Government of the United States contemplated this early abandonment of the reciprocity arrangement and the imposition of a tax upon Guatemalan sugar; that the ability of Guatemala to produce sugar had already been demonstrated; that the bill before Congress involved a discrimination against Guatemala in that it provided for the free admission of Hawaiian sugar produced by cooly or contract labor, and that financial ruin would befall the Guatemalan sugar producers should the bill become a law and the sugar of that country be made dutiable.

The undersigned replied that the reciprocity arrangement was not a treaty; that it in no wise restricted the right or power of either government to modify its tariff laws; that the understanding was entered into to remain in force so long as it shall not be modified or revoked by the legislation of either government, or by the mutual agreement of the executive power of the two countries; and that without replying to his remarks as to the unfairness of the proposed admission of Hawaiian sugar free, while taxing that of other countries, our commercial treaty with Hawaii possibly suggested the proposed discrimination.

On the 14th of May last the Spanish minister addressed the undersigned referring to the probable necessity of raising larger revenues in Cuba and Puerto Rico by levying increased customs duties on peninsular and foreign products, and inquired whether, in the event of such increase, the Government of the United States would levy duties upon the productions of those islands, now free under the reciprocity arrangement. Mr. Muruaga's inquiry was answered to the effect that while increase in the duties imposed in Cuba and Puerto Rico upon Spanish productions imported from the peninsula would not effect the privilege granted to Spain by the reciprocity arrangement, any increase of duties upon the productions of the United States exported to those islands which now enjoyed favor under the reciprocity agreement would raise the question whether the measure of reciprocity remaining after such increase would justify further nonexercise of the power conferred upon the President by the third section of the act of October 1, 1890.

It is apparent, therefore, that the Spanish minister's inquiry covers no intimation of retaliation by Spain for the imposition of duties on sugar, or any other of the products, now free under said third section, and in virtue of the existing reciprocity agreement; but rather, suggested an apprehension lest the United States should retaliate were Spain to tax American products now free or favored by reduced rates in Cuba and Puerto Rico.

A bill was introduced in the Spanish Cortes on June 2, providing for a transitory duty of 24 per cent upon all American products now free in the Antilles under Schedule A of the reciprocity arrangement, and for increasing by 24 per cent the duties on articles now enjoying reduced rates under Schedule B, such changes to take effect July 20. The Department is not advised that this measure has become a law.

Respectfully submitted.

W. Q. GRESHAM.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 28, 1894.

Mr. ALDRICH. There are some inclosures to be read.

Mr. CHANDLER. Has the whole communication been read?

Mr. ALDRICH. The inclosures have not been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TURPIE in the chair). The Secretary will read the inclosures.

The Secretary read as follows:

No. 95.] EMBASSY OF THE UNITED STATES, Berlin, June 9, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy, with translation of a brief article taken from a number published to-day of the North German Gazette in which this semiofficial journal comments on a news item contained in the London Times of the 8th instant, which reports that Germany has protested against the proposal adopted as part of the sugar schedule by the Senate to place a differential duty of one-tenth of a cent per pound on sugars imported from countries which give bounties to growers, and that an intimation has been given that if such a duty is imposed Germany will retaliate against American imports.

The North German Gazette, as will be perceived, characterizes this intelligence as false, refers to the circumstance that it is for the present only a question of a resolution of the Senate committee, which, in order to become a law, requires the sanction not only of the Senate and House of Representatives, but also of the President, and is silent as to the view that would be taken in Germany of such a measure if it should be enacted. This silence on the part of the North German Gazette may perhaps be regarded as suggestive, since it publishes in a later edition of the same date a lengthier article on the same subject from a Hamburg journal, which it reproduces with no other comment than the introductory remark: "We read in the Hamburg Correspondent the following respecting a matter which closely concerns the German sugar industry."

This article is also inclosed herewith, accompanied by a translation, as it will, it is believed, be found interesting, discussing as it does the bearing upon the subject in question of agreement of February 1, 1892 (the commercial arrangement between the United States and Germany—concluded at Washington, January 30, 1892—proclaimed February 1, 1892) and of the treaty concluded between the United States and Prussia on May 1, 1828, under which Germany has conceded since a date long antecedent to that of the agreement referred to, the benefit of the most favored nation treaty clause to imports from the the United States.

I have, etc.,

CHAPMAN COLEMAN.

Hon. WALTER Q. GRESHAM,
Secretary of State.

Translation of Inclosure No. 1.

[Extract from the North German Gazette of June 9, 1894.]

The Times reports a dispatch from Philadelphia, pursuant to which the German Government protests against the imposition of an additional duty of one-tenth of a cent per pound on sugar from countries which pay bounties on sugar, and is said to have threatened retaliation. The news is false, and has probably originated with the American sugar interest, which desires by spreading this report to excite the national sensitiveness of their country-people and to arouse for the purpose of their greed the pronounced sense of independence of the Americans. The weakness of the entire assertion is evidenced by the circumstance that for the present it is a question only of a resolution of the Senate committee, which requires, in order to become a law, not only to pass the Senate, but also the House of Representatives, and to receive the assent of the President.

Translation of Inclosure No. 2.

[Extract from North German Gazette, June 9, 1894.]

We read in the Hamburg Correspondent the following respecting a matter which closely concerns the German sugar industry:

"The announcement that the Republicans in the Senate had abandoned their obstruction of the tariff bill has been followed with surprising rapidity by that of the adoption of the sugar schedule. With this resolution the treatment of sugar introduced by the McKinley bill has again been completely reversed. The system of sugar bounties will from the 1st of January, 1895, on, in case the bill becomes a law, be given up entirely; the proposal of the Wilson bill to diminish by one-eighth the bounty of 2 cents per pound is dropped. On the other hand, the free entry of raw sugar, which it was proposed should take effect from that date, is given up, and in place of the former duty of 2 cents per pound an ad valorem duty of 40 per cent is to be imposed.

"The provisions of the McKinley bill, pursuant to which sugar No. 16 Dutch standard, or lighter, pays an additional duty of 3½ cents per pound, is amended so that the additional duty is reduced to one-eighth cent. The McKinley bill itself contained the provision that this duty shall be increased by one-tenth of a cent when the sugar is imported from a country which pays a higher export bounty on refined than on raw sugar. This increase of duty—and this is the matter of chief importance in these resolutions—is to be levied from the 1st of January, 1895, on all sugar, therefore also on raw sugar imported from countries which accord an export bounty. While the earlier provision could not apply to German sugar for the reason that, pursuant to our laws since August 1, 1892, export bounties are paid only on raw sugar, the additional duty would, as we recently stated, now apply to all sugars, raw and refined alike. That this blow would fall on the French, Austrian, and Russian exportation as well as on the German is but poor consolation."

In case these resolutions are adhered to, the reciprocity clause of the McKinley bill would it seems become inoperative, at least as regards the importation of sugar. This clause, as is well known, authorized the President to levy the duties designated in that section upon the sugar, coffee, etc., of those nations which impose unequal and unreasonable duties upon the agricultural and other products of the United States. On the basis of an exchange of notes between Washington and Berlin, the President by proclamation made known that German sugar should be entitled to free entry upon the ground that the duty rates of the treaty tariff of February 1, 1892, should apply to American importations into Germany. How this agreement is to be harmonized with the recent Senate resolutions can not be perceived.

The mere reintroduction of sugar duties would not affect this agreement, but the imposition of the additional duty on sugar from countries which accord an export bounty complicates the matter for the reason that the German sugar interest accomplished in the year 1891, in opposition to the proposal of the Federal Council, its purpose of securing a prolongation beyond the 1st of August, 1895, of the period during which the payment of export bounties in the form of fixed contributions for the sugar exported should take place. As is well known, the Federal Council (Bundesrath), acting on the assumption that the Prussian-American treaty of May 1, 1828, was still in force, conceded at a time antecedent to 1892 to American imports the benefit of the most favored nation clause. The duty will now devolve upon the American Government of considering whether the Senate resolution is in harmony with the treaty of 1828.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The message and accompanying papers will lie on the table and be printed.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is entitled to the floor on the pending question, which is the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. CHANDLER. Before the Senator from Iowa proceeds, I wish to call his attention to the statements in the communication which has just been read in reference to the proposed measure in the Spanish Cortes. I suppose it is well known that the home government of Spain has not been in favor of the reciprocity arrangements with Cuba and Puerto Rico, because under those arrangements large quantities of flour and other American products were sent to those islands, which would otherwise have been furnished from Spain.

Therefore I suppose, if I am not incorrectly informed, that this measure in the Spanish Cortes is a hasty effort to take advantage of the proposals of the bill. Spain herself, whatever may be the views of Cuba and Puerto Rico, would rather have these arrangements annihilated and resume that trade with Cuba which we now get. If I am wrong in that I should like to have the Senator from Iowa show me in the course of his remarks that I am wrong.

Mr. ALLISON. In the one or two observations which I shall make I shall have occasion to allude to the suggestions made by the Senator from New Hampshire, as also to some suggestions made in the papers just laid before the Senate.

What I desire to do now is to show that the third section of the McKinley act, so called, is to be repealed, and consequently under the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Missouri no benefit will result to the United States unless when the bill passes it shall contain a provision for free sugar. It is useless for us on either side of this Chamber to disguise the fact that these reciprocal arrangements depend wholly upon the sugar question. The articles named in section 3 of the act of 1890 are sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides. I believe I have named all of them. Coffee has been on the free list for many years; tea and hides are on the free list, and they all remain on the free list under the proposed law. Therefore there is nothing involved in this section except the question of sugar. I think I need not argue here that if we impose a duty upon sugar all these reciprocal arrangements will fall to the ground.

I have before me a summary of all the reciprocal arrangements and treaties, found in Executive Document No. 149, Fifty-second Congress, first session, wherein it is shown that all the arrangements rest upon the articles referred to, namely tea, coffee, sugar, molasses, and hides. We have no reciprocal arrangement with any country, so far as I know, which does not involve the element of the sugar duty. It can not be gainsaid that Spain has entered into this reciprocal arrangement with us—I care not what you call it; I use the term reciprocal arrangement for convenience—for the purpose of making sure of the market of the United States for the products of her colonies which raise sugar.

Brazil has just recently entered upon the production of sugar, and has adopted the same policy that we adopted respecting the production of sugar, namely, to give a bounty to the producers of sugar. Under that stimulation it has vastly increased her production of sugar. Whilst coffee is included in the arrangement with Brazil, it can not be gainsaid that the stimulation of of the production and exportation of sugar was the chief motive that entered into the arrangement we have made with that country. It is shown by the papers just laid upon our table that the motive which actuated Guatemala was that she would stimulate the production of sugar and find a market for it in the United States.

So the object of this section is to destroy absolutely the provisions of section 3 of the McKinley act. No country will retain these arrangements because of the benefits they receive as to tea or coffee or hides. Although we included hides in section 3 of the act of 1890, we have never made a treaty arrangement with the Argentine Republic, and I do not know even that a serious attempt has been made to enter into such an arrangement which exports to our country large quantities of hides every year. It may not be suitable and perhaps it is not suitable to a great section of the United States that we shall avail ourselves of the reciprocal provision as respects hides. Therefore we are not likely to have any reciprocal arrangements based upon hides alone.

So the object (and that object will be attained) is to destroy the provisions of the third section of the act of 1890, by repealing it as to the future and by making nugatory its provisions as to the past.

Both the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] have stated that they are in favor of reciprocal arrangements and reciprocal trade, and the Senator from Delaware went so far as to say that he would be willing to substitute wool for sugar, and when pressed by the Senator from Oregon as to whether he was willing to substitute a wool provision here which would authorize the President of the United States to impose a duty upon wool, the Senator from Delaware frankly said he would not.

It is an easy thing to be in favor of reciprocal trade between our country and foreign countries if we have no regard for our own domestic trade. That was the reason why Mr. Evarts, who was a member of this body and who participated in the debate in 1890, made the quotation which is found at the head of his speech as read here by the Senator from Delaware. It was in substance that we were pursuing wills-o'-the-wisp by securing reciprocal trade if that reciprocal trade was not to be to the advantage of the producers of the United States, whether they be agricultural producers or manufacturers of wares and merchandise.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me a moment? As I recollect the argument of Mr. Evarts against the provision it was divided into two parts; first, that we had no constitutional power to authorize the President to enter into these arrangements and to make these proclamations. The Supreme Court of the United States has since disposed of that question, and decided that we had the constitutional power.

The second contention of the then Senator from New York was that if we made an arrangement, for instance with Brazil, by which they gave us certain concessions, Brazil would be obliged under their treaty arrangements with Great Britain to give to Great Britain and to all competing nations the same concessions and the same differential duties, and that therefore the proposition would be rendered nugatory. Those are the points which the Senator from New York made and pressed with great force. I do not think that he made any other suggestion which he considered important than those two.

Mr. ALLISON. I have not read his speech since that time. I listened to it, and my recollection is that in the course of the debate, perhaps it may have been in response to the suggestion in the first amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine, he warned the country against these reciprocal arrangements whereby we should lose our own market for the sake of securing a foreign market.

We have had a great many illustrations of the impossibility of securing reciprocal trade by means of treaty arrangements. We have tried that over and over again, and it was because of that difficulty chiefly that the third section of the law of 1890 was passed.

The Senator from Missouri alluded to the view of Mr. Jefferson as favoring reciprocal treaties. In the very first tariff act which was debated in the Congress of the United States it was urged over and over again by Mr. Madison and by other men who agreed with him that that was the proper way under our Constitution to secure favorable arrangements and friendly arrangements with foreign countries.

Mr. HIGGINS. If the Senator from Iowa will allow me, I will call his attention and that of the Senate to a matter which I overlooked in the remarks I submitted this morning, which is brought out very clearly in Mr. Henry Adams's history of Jefferson's Administration.

Mr. Jefferson's idea was that we need not participate in the Napoleonic wars, either on the side of England or on the side of France, because we could compel the action of either or both by the overwhelming influence of our markets and their necessity to trade with us. That was his idea, and on that he advocated having a small Navy and a small Army, and making no warlike provision, because our market was the great controlling factor, and that with it as a weapon we could bring them all to our terms. It is that idea which underlies our reciprocity treaties.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Madison undertook to levy discriminating duties against Great Britain in the tariff act of 1789 on the express ground that Great Britain had been unfavorable in her arrangements as respects trade with the United States. In some instances that was done in the first tariff act which was passed.

Now, the trouble as respects these treaties is that unless you make them in pursuance of a statute you never can secure their adoption under our form and system of Government. We have tried that over and over again.

It is true that in 1854, when both Houses practically belonged to the same party, with a President of the same party, we did make a reciprocal treaty with Lower Canada, which was a jug-handled arrangement, one entirely in favor of Canada and entirely against the United States. As soon as that treaty could be abrogated it was abrogated, and we have never made any such arrangement with Canada from that time to this.

It is true that Mr. Blaine was in favor substantially, I suppose, of the original amendment which was offered by the senior Senator from Maine and which was referred to the Finance Committee in 1890.

I wish to state, for the information of the Senator from Delaware and other Senators, that Mr. Blaine did not appear before the Finance Committee during the entire period of the consideration in the committee of the McKinley act so-called. So far as I know he never made any suggestion to the Finance Committee respecting the bill, unless the suggestion which appeared through the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine was a suggestion to the committee.

As is perfectly well known, and it is a historical fact, the Republicans were divided on the original proposition of the Secretary of State relating to these reciprocal arrangements. Mr. Blaine believed that the McKinley bill as it passed the other House, making sugar free, thus giving him no opportunity to make arrangements with the South American Republics as to sugar, increasing largely the duty on wool, thereby preventing him from making arrangements as to wool with the Argentine Confederation, and afterwards immensely increasing the duty upon tobacco, would have the effect, perhaps, of making it impossible for him to deal with Cuba or Spain as respects the production of the Spanish Antilles.

It was those things, as I understand, which were unsatisfactory to the Secretary of State, because he had hoped that he could use those articles to make suitable treaties favorable to the United States and secure the trade of the countries which lie south of us. But that he pressed this view upon any committee I am not aware, certainly not upon the Finance Committee of the Senate.

So, when this question came before the Finance Committee there was in the committee, I believe, no difference of opinion as to the propriety of it. The only difference of opinion existing there was as to the articles which should be embraced within it. The view of the Republican party then, as I believe it to be the view of the Republican party now, was that in making reciprocal agreements with foreign countries we should make arrangements with them as to such articles as we do not produce at all or such articles as we can not produce in sufficient quantities for our own consumption.

Therefore, upon that general view, there were very few articles which could be enumerated in the statute, and they were limited to articles of tropical production, except sugar, which of course is produced in Germany and in all Europe. But the object was to include only those articles which were produced in foreign countries and not produced here at all, or if produced here produced in small quantities.

The Senator from Missouri says he is in favor of reciprocal trade. How? How do the countries of Europe secure reciprocal trade? They secure it by having maximum rates and minimum rates, and they apply the latter to countries which they desire to favor. Therefore it is that all Europe to-day has differential rates upon importations. We can not, perhaps, have such rates under our system.

But when the papers which were just laid upon our desk discloses that Germany will probably make the repeal of section 3 of the act of 1890 an excuse for the reorganization and readjustment of the treaty of 1828, which contains the favored nation clause, it shows the difficulties which surround us in an international sense in the repeal of these provisions.

I should like to have the Senator from Missouri or the Senator from Delaware tell us how they expect to enlarge our trade by means of reciprocal treaties. They have given away in the bill practically everything which could be the foundation of reciprocal treaties with the countries on this continent and practically with the countries of Europe. They certainly have done so with Canada. If the Dominion of Canada had sent a commission here to negotiate a treaty, and if we had offered them what is offered in the pending bill to-day, they would have given us concessions as to our manufactured products which they will not give us at all now, because we have given these things gratuitously.

What could we have done with the Argentine Republic if we had been able to say to that Republic in December, 1893, "We will put wool on the free list if you will make us certain concessions?" Would they not have made almost any concession as concerns our trade with them and as to our manufactured products if we had agreed to put wool upon the free list? The same is true of Australia and of every other wool-producing country in the world. We have given away in the bill everything which would enable us to make reciprocal arrangements with other countries whereby we could enlarge our own trade.

So when the Senator from Delaware tells us that he favors reciprocal arrangements, he favors them without giving us any method whereby he proposes to carry them out. We have had experience with the Democratic party on that question over and over again. Under Mr. Frelinghuysen, during President Arthur's Administration, we made a treaty with Mexico most favorable to our people, and I have no doubt reciprocally so to Mexico. We made a favorable treaty with Spain, covering as it did, I agree, the question of sugar, admitting free sugar under No. 16 Dutch standard in color, but giving the people of the United States large concessions in consideration of that provision.

The treaty with Spain failed in this body. That is not a secret at this time. It certainly was not ratified, although it was well known that it was made. The legislation necessary to carry into effect the treaty with Mexico, as I have already had occasion to say, passed this body and went to the House of Representatives, and it was in the other House four years; I am not sure but that it was there six years.

During all that period the Democrats had a majority in the other House, and they refused to pass the necessary legislation in order to execute the treaty. So to say now that we are in favor of reciprocal trade with other countries, without some provisions in the nature of those in the third section of the law of 1890, which it is proposed to repeal, is to hold out an idle and vain hope to the people of the United States.

Mr. President, I favor the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri in contrast with the provision as it originally stood in the Senate amendment, but when the vote shall have been taken on it I shall move to strike out the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to strike out section 104, as amended.

Mr. ALLISON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I desire to announce for the day my pair with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PLATT. Has the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. PLATT. The junior Senator from Virginia was called away yesterday afternoon by illness in his family. I am paired with him. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCLAURIN. Has the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. MCLAURIN. I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CALL. I announce my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Allison,	Gallinger,	Manderson,	Proctor,
Chandler,	Hale,	Mitchell, Oregon	Quay,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Patton,	Sherman,
Davis,	Higgins,	Peffer,	Shoup,
Dolph,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Teller,
Frye,	McMillan,	Pettigrew,	Washburn.

NAYS—34.

Allen,	Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Roach,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Kyle,	Turpie,
Berry,	George,	Lindsay,	Vest,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Mills,	Vilas,
Blanchard,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Brice,	Gray,	Murphy,	Walsh,
Camden,	Harris,	Pasco,	White.
Cockrell,	Irby,	Pugh,
Coke,	Jarvis,	Ransom,

NOT VOTING—27.

Aldrich,	Dubois,	McLaurin,	Power,
Butler,	Gordon,	McPherson,	Smith,
Caffery,	Hansbrough,	Martin,	Squire,
Call,	Hill,	Mitchell, Wis.	Stewart,
Cameron,	Hunton,	Morrill,	Wilson,
Carey,	Jones, Nev.	Palmer,	Wolcott.
Dixon,	Lodge,	Platt,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PEFFER. I propose an amendment to be inserted on page 229 as a new section, following section 103. After the amendment is read I wish to explain it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert after section 103:

SEC. 103½. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of $50 for each and every passenger not a citizen of the United States who shall come by steam or sail vessel from a foreign port to any port within the United States. The said duty shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port to which such passenger shall come, or if there be no collector at such port, then to the collector of customs nearest thereto, by the master, owner, agent, or consignee of every such vessel, within twenty-four hours after the entry thereof into such port. The money thus collected shall be paid into the United States Treasury. The duty imposed by this section shall be a lien upon the vessels which shall bring such passengers into the United States, and shall be a debt in favor of the United States against the owner or owners of such vessels; and the payment of such duty may be enforced by any legal or equitable remedy. And a like duty shall be levied upon and paid, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, by every alien immigrant crossing the border line between the United States and contiguous nations.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Kansas to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. PEFFER. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I notice that the Senator proposes to exact the payment of $50 upon every immigrant coming into the United States. As the Senator is to speak upon the amendment which he has proposed, I wish to ask him in the first place whether he proposes to impose $50 tax or head money upon every foreigner who sets foot upon our soil, whether he comes to stay or whether he comes as a visitor, or to impose the tax only upon persons who come to remain with us and eventually to become citizens. If he proposes to impose the tax only upon persons who come to stay, will he kindly inform the Senate how he proposes to discriminate between those who come to stay and those who come only for a temporary sojourn.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to detain the Senate with an elaborate discussion of the subject which is brought to our notice by the amendment. I concede that there is an idea in it which is worth thinking about and worth incorporating in the bill. If the idea is received favorably by the members of the Senate we can in a very few minutes so amend it as to cover the object that is sought.

In the first place, we are trying and have been trying a long time with very indifferent success, indeed, to protect American labor by statute. One fatal mistake which we made was in 1864, when we authorized some of our citizens to go to other countries and there to contract for labor and to import that labor into this country to take the place of Americans who were then at work. From that time to the present, notwithstanding the fact that a few years ago we repealed that law, there has been a constant influx of a class of immigrants who are not congenial to the American people, who have no sympathy with our institutions, who have no friendship for our habits and our customs, and who in no respect are of any benefit to us or to themselves while they are here.

We have seen within the last few years how deficient our legislation is upon this point. Within the last sixty days fourteen States of the Union have been more or less under military law, and the persons precipitating this conflict upon the country were largely of the class who would be prohibited from coming by the adoption of this amendment.

We propose in our tariff legislation to protect American labor, and we have heard that statement made, I think I may safely say, one thousand times during the three months' debate in this Chamber upon the tariff bill now under discussion, whereas it appears that as a matter of fact we have begun the system of protection at the wrong end, or, at least, we are not conducting our legislation in a successful way.

It occurred to me, as I took occasion to state to the Senate a few days ago, that it would be well for us to adopt what is commonly known as the consular system, which has been debated a good deal, but the more I talk with my fellow-Senators and my fellow-men upon the subject the more I am satisfied that that system will not be effective. I have finally come to the conclusion (I do not know how long it will be a conclusion) that we could reach what we want probably more in accord with the common sentiment of mankind and more in accord with what we desire to accomplish by some measure of levying a tax upon certain classes of immigrants.

I have information, and so have all of us, that a great many immigrants come here in the spring of the year, take American wages during the summer and fall months, then go to their homes again across the Atlantic and spend the winter there, taking away from our shores just so much money as ought to have been given to our people. So there is another class who come. They are skilled mechanics, skilled laborers, who come early in the spring, like stonecutters, gasfitters, plumbers, men of that kind, who will come and work during the summer at high wages—wages that have been secured by our American workmen—and go back again in the fall.

It costs them twenty-two or twenty-three dollars to come over here, and it costs them about the same amount to return home. A six or eight months' stay, working in the United States at the wages current here, will afford a margin for crossing the Atlantic twice and idling three months in the old country every year and still yield to them a large profit.

Mr. HOAR. I have every sympathy with the object and motive of the Senator from Kansas, and I have hoped that from him, or some other Senator, there would come a proposition that would commend itself to the friends of suitable legislation, but I want to make a suggestion to the Senator in regard to the amendment he has now offered.

We have a continuous line with the British provinces alone of over 4,000 miles. Is it proposed that every time a man who dwells over the border shall come to this country for an hour, or a day, or a week, and then go back—for instance, a person residing in Victoria, in British Columbia, he shall pay $50 for coming in? Of course I assume that that is not proposed; but would it not be well to add to this provision something which would provide for temporary visits from respectable neighbors?

Mr. PEFFER. I suggested in the beginning that h the idea incorporated in the amendment meets with favor in the Senate we shall have no difficulty in framing it as it ought to be. I am now coming to the point raised by the Senator from Massachusetts and suggested first by the Senator from New Hampshire, that the object of this amendment is to try to do in fact what we have been professing to do in our speeches for a long time. We say we are trying to protect American labor, and yet we are constantly inviting competition upon our own soil with American labor.

We are constantly inviting and constantly receiving a class of immigrants who come here and work, who procure the best wages that they can, no matter whether they are lower than or upon the same level with wages that have been established by American workmen, and whenever difficulty arises between our own citizens and the aliens upon the matter of wages, then comes in the doctrine which was taught by the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], whose seat is in front of me, and I am sorry to know that it is vacant, and particularly by reason of the cause of its vacancy, the Senator being absent on account of ill health.

The Senator from Colorado, in one of his eloquent outbursts, for which he is noted, said that it is time it shall be understood here and elsewhere that every man has the right to work in this country whenever and wherever he pleases if it takes the whole power of the Government to protect him. When it comes to a time that a thousand citizens are marched out of a great establishment, while a thousand aliens are marched into the same establishment who will work at lower wages, are our laws to be so construed as that the alien taking the place of the citizen shall have the protection of our law, while the citizen may be imprisoned if he resists? I am trying to suggest to the Senate and to the country a means by which we can at least begin to avoid that result.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. PEFFER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to suggest two amendments to the Senator, and I wish to see whether they will not be accepted by him. In line 4 of his amendment I propose to insert the words "to engage in any industrial occupation;" so as to read:

That there shall be levied, collected and paid a duty for each and every passenger not a citizen of the United States who shall come by steam or sail vessel from a foreign port to any port within the United States to engage in any industrial occupation.

And at the end of the amendment the same words, "to engage in any industrial occupation," and add also the words:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe rules and regulations for the collection of the duties hereby imposed.

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator's idea is exactly right and exactly in accord with mine, as he will see before I conclude, and I have nearly concluded.

A great many of our past troubles, a large measure of our present troubles, and a still larger measure of the future troubles which are coming upon us, and which are close to us, arise by reason of the presence and the working for lower wages of a class of people who are utterly at variance with our institutions and the habits of our people. It is not my object to prevent the coming to this country of any person as a tourist, as a professional person, as a person in search of knowledge, a relic hunter, or a person of that class, nor one who comes here on a business errand, nor one who comes in an official capacity, nor anyone who does not intend to come here to engage in manual-labor pursuits in competition with American labor.

It is the last class of people I am aiming at, and I think it would be better to reach the subject, or at least to begin reaching it in this way, rather than one in which the law would bear a prohibitory feature. I should like if I could to make a distinction between those who come here to remain with us permanently, who are in love with our institutions and who would immediately assimilate with our people, and the other classes who have no such laudable ambition. But it would be well enough to begin by levying a duty of say $50 upon every person who comes into the country expecting to engage in our manual-labor pursuits in competition with American labor.

It will have two or three beneficial effects. In the first place, it will show to our working people that we are at last adopting some practical method to protect America labor in fact as well as in mere theory. A political speaker now takes the platform and talks to his fellow-citizens about protecting American labor, and perhaps within 20 miles there is a conflict between aliens and American citizens about the matter of labor. Our pretended protection of American labor has been a stupendous failure, until to-day we are practically at the mercy of aliens. It is time, Mr. President, that the American citizen shall get on top on American soil. That is the object of this amendment.

Now, I will most cheerfully accept any suggestion of Senators by way of perfecting the framework.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I recognize the importance of the subject which the Senator from Kansas has brought to the attention of the Senate, but I am not inclined to deal with the question of immigration in connection with a tariff bill. The reason why I am not willing to deal with the question in connection with a bill imposing duties upon imported merchandise is because the one concerns property alone, and the other concerns men, women, and children; it concerns citizenship.

I think the Senator from Kansas will agree with me, when he comes to consider the subject, that we do not wish to deal with questions concerning citizenship in a bill of this kind. Merchandise, inanimate objects, arouse no sentiments of any kind, but the question who shall be received into this country as an immigrant, who shall be allowed to partake of our citizenship, who shall be allowed to become members of this great family of ours, this Western hemisphere Republic, is a question far above any question that concerns merchandise, or manufactures, or anything that is inanimate. The Senator, upon reflection, will see the distinction. I am as unwilling as is the Senator from Tennessee to deal with the question of immigration in connection with the tariff bill.

In the next place, while I recognize the importance of further laws for the restriction of immigration, I do not believe that the next step in the direction of restriction should be a high head tax. The Senator from Kansas, who, I believe, agrees with me in the main upon the question of immigration, and who served with me for a time upon the Committee on Immigration, and aided that committee in making important investigations, with his keen sensibility, will also agree with me that, while it may be advisable for us to lessen immigration, if there is an immigrant fitted to come here and enter into lawful employment, which is the language of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, that if such a person alone, or with his family, is entitled to come here and become a part of our civilization and of our citizenship, he needs the $50 the Senator proposes to exact from him as a tax far more than the Government of the United States needs the $50.

Here, Mr. President, is the fundamental objection that I have found to a large head tax. If you consider it solely in the light of an exclusion, it does no harm in the cases where it keeps the immigrants out, but take the case of immigrants who come here, there will be a large class of worthy, honest, industrious men who come here, either alone, or with their families, to become citizens of the United States. They will not be wealthy as a general rule. We have not undertaken and we shall not undertake to require that immigrants shall bring large sums of money with them. We shall probably continue to welcome the honest poor man with good character who comes here to partake of our civilization and to become a citizen of this Republic. Take the case of an honest man who comes here, I ask the Senator from Kansas if that immigrant coming here with $50 in his pocket does not need the $50 more than the Treasury of the United States needs it?

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from New Hampshire yields to me to make a motion. I move to indefinitely postpone the pending bill.

Mr. HARRIS. The motion is in order. Let the yeas and nays be called.

Mr. CHANDLER. I did not know what motion the Senator from Massachusetts proposed to make.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Tennessee will not insist on the yeas and nays, because I may withdraw the motion to save time.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator would withdraw the motion he would save time, but as his intent is to kill time let him not withdraw it.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator is mistaken. I want to preserve the right to debate the amendment reasonably and for a few minutes without having it laid on the table. I therefore make the parliamentary motion which gives me that right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Now let the Senator from New Hampshire proceed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I did not know what the motion was which the Senator from Massachusetts intended to make. I suppose perhaps he thought that discussion upon the amendment ought not to be cut off by a motion from the Senator from Tennessee to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HARRIS. Which motion the Senator from Tennessee will make at the earliest moment he has the power.

Mr. CHANDLER. But, Mr. President, I welcome the advent of the Senator from Tennessee to this side of the Chamber. I had hoped that he came over here to spend quite a while with us and to assimilate something of the courtesy and generosity in debate which always prevails on this side of the Chamber, and certainly with no one any more than with the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. President, I have stated the principal reasons why I am unwilling to act upon this amendment in connection with the pending bill, why I am unwilling to vote for a large head tax upon immigrants. I think the Senator from Kansas had better withdraw his amendment and propose it as a separate bill, for, as I repeat, it is very offensive to me to undertake to deal with questions of citizenship, of immigration, and of human rights in connection with a bill the main and only purpose of which is to deal with duties upon imported merchandise.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], whom I do not now see in his seat, has taken occasion during the present debate to frequently ask this side of the Chamber whether we are not willing to protect American labor by excluding immigrants as well as by imposing high duties upon imported merchandise. I hold it to be the duty of this country to take into serious consideration the question of immigration; I believe that we should go on in the direction of limiting immigration into this country; but I call attention to the fact that there are certain natural obstructions to immigration which do not exist in the case of imported goods. Take a bale of woolen cloths made in one of the manufacturing towns of England. That bale of goods has no sensibility; it is a thing inanimate; it is taken as freight and carried to the water's edge; it is put in the hold of a ship; it is brought here at a low rate of freight, and the rates of freight are becoming lower and lower every year with increased facilities for transportation.

Mr. PEFFER. At this point I should like to ask the Senator a question, if it will not interrupt him. If I am not mistaken, the Senator in discussing this subject heretofore has asserted substantially that in his opinion the passenger traffic to which he has just alluded, under the direction of certain steamship lines, has become so important, the business so enlarged, and the powers of the managers of those lines so great as that practically they have the whole subject of immigration under their control and they are masters of the situation. How does the Senator feel upon that point now, and is he influenced by a consideration of that kind? I dread the power of immigration agencies.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am similarly affected. I believe we should pass laws requiring that immigrants shall have better accommodations upon the passenger steamers. I believe that we should restrict immigration by humanitarian legislation; that we should improve the condition of the steerages of our immigrant steamers; and that we should require better accommodations for men, women, and children upon the transatlantic immigrant steamers than are now afforded. The bale of goods requires nothing but so many cubic feet of space. It goes down in the hold; it requires no air to breathe. The expense of bringing merchandise is nothing, but the expense of bringing an immigrant with his family is considerable. The difference in expense between bringing property and persons is of itself a considerable protection against enlarged immigration.

But, Mr. President, there is a more important reason than that why immigration is restricted, and that is that immigrants are obliged to sunder home ties in order to come here. They have attachments abroad. Their surroundings may be poor, they may be humble, but still there is no place like home. Almost no immigrant, almost no immigrant's family, is desirous of coming to this country.

They come here because they believe they can better their condition, and it is with great reluctance that they part from home scenes, from kindred, from friends, from familiar surroundings, and go to a new country in order that they may make a new home there, and attain to a higher prosperity than that which attends them in their native land. Therefore, here is a serious obstruction to immigration. So before we reach the question of new restrictive measures to be applied to immigrants as we impose duties upon foreign manufactures, we shall be able to make allowances for these natural obstructions to immigration.

Notwithstanding all these considerations, I believe this nation ought to devise new and additional measures for restricting immigration. The two administrative acts of March 3, 1891, and March 3, 1893, have done much to lessen immigration. There is a falling off in immigration under the operation of those laws and under the operation of hard times in this country.

That falling off in immigration will, I hope, continue. If it does not continue, then I believe it is the serious duty of the American Congress to take the subject of further restrictions into consideration and to enact further laws limiting immigration and tending to secure the benefits and the prosperity of this country to those who are now its citizens and to exclude that prosperity and those benefits from those who are not now its citizens.

Various amendments have been suggested for the purpose of further restricting immigration. A large head tax, such as has been moved by the Senator from Kansas, has been one of those methods. The requirement of a consular certificate and proof of good character has been another method. An educational qualification has been more discussed than any other. I believe we ought to require immigrants not to read and write the English language, but to be able to read and write their own language. I believe that a certain measure of intelligence may well be demanded of those members of a family coming to this country of suitable age, and they should be required to read and write their own language before they come here.

All these questions will I doubt not come in review before Congress during the next session. I believe the subject of immigration to be a cognate subject to that of the tariff, but I do not believe it to be a part of the tariff question, and therefore I should be unwilling to vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, even if I were in favor of a head tax. If the Senator from Massachusetts had not moved to indefinitely postpone this bill, I should conclude my remarks by moving to lay the amendment of the Senator from Kansas upon the table.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I suppose the Senator from Kansas in introducing this amendment did not mean to be bound by it as a complete and a perfect solution of this question. Indeed, I think he said so, but whether he did or not, I take that for granted.

Mr. PEFFER. I so said.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose he is only laying the keel of the boat or ship, and it will require a great deal to be added to it before it will make a successful voyage into port. I so understood the Senator in substance.

Mr. President, I wish to say that, like the Senator from New Hampshire, I am desirous of having Congress establish some policy which will be effective and vigorous in regard to this most important subject. I do not intend to enter upon the discussion of it now, because I understand it is expected by the members of the Senate that the bill will be ready to be reported from the Committee of the Whole before long, and I do not mean to interfere with that desire. But I do not agree with the Senator from New Hampshire in thinking that the subject is out of place upon a tariff bill. However, I do not think we ought to add to a tariff bill a provision on this subject unless it has been carefully and thoroughly considered. For that reason I do not suppose it is likely we shall add to this particular bill such a provision; but if any committee of the Senate had completed its labors, and was ready with its report, I should be very willing to add it to the pending bill.

I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment which I should like to add to his amendment. I am not sure that it will quite meet his views, from what he said. I will read it:

> Unless such immigrant shall present to the collector of the port which he enters the certificate of some consul of the United States of the country of which he is a citizen, to be designated by the President of the United States for the purpose of making such certificate, that he is a person of good moral character, and that he has property enough for the reasonable support of himself and his family, or that he has sufficient skill in some trade or profession to earn in this country a competent livelihood for himself and his family.

That might be an original amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas. It is stated merely to suggest the idea rather than as being perfect in expression. I think also there should be added possibly what the Senator from New Hampshire has suggested, some educational qualification; and further, that there should be added some provision which would secure the right of visitors of all classes, whether from Europe, or who living on the border line come in for a few days.

Now, I should like to give notice of what I have read as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas and have it printed. Will the Chair ask the consent of the Senate to have it printed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HOAR. This is all I desire to say.

Mr. PEFFER rose.

Mr. HOAR. It is my purpose, unless the Senator from Kansas desires to go on, to withdraw my motion.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I do not, however, withdraw it yet.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRIS. The motion of the Senator from Massachusetts being withdrawn——

Mr. HOAR. I have not yet withdrawn it.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator do so at any reasonable time in the future?

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that some person has got into this Chamber, perhaps, the doors being open, through the carelessness of some official (though I would not impute to the officials carelessness) who does not precisely understand the rules of the Senate or the methods of proceeding. I do not understand that the person from whom that question came has been recognized as having the floor.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, am I entitled to the floor?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts had not yielded the floor.

Mr. HARRIS. I thought when the Senator had sat down he had yielded the floor.

Mr. HOAR. I have not now yielded the floor.

Mr. HARRIS. I obtained the floor after the Senator had sat down.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Tennessee is disorderly every time he opens his mouth. We have submitted to this past endurance. I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas if he wishes to speak further on the amendment?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. PEFFER. I wanted to reply to a single suggestion of the Senator, that was all.

Mr. HOAR. Then I will yield the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee has been recognized.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to lay on the table the pending amendment, or the pending motion, if the Senator from Massachusetts has not withdrawn his motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the Senator from Massachusetts has withdrawn his motion.

Mr. HOAR. I have not withdrawn the motion.

Mr. HARRIS. I then move——

Mr. HOAR. I said I propose to withdraw it unless the Senator from Kansas desires to be heard.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator to make that statement.

Mr. HOAR. No, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. What was the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Massachusetts was to indefinitely postpone the bill. The Chair understood the Senator to withdraw the motion.

Mr. HOAR. I said that I would withdraw it unless the Senator from Kansas desires to proceed. If he does, I do not withdraw it.

Mr. PEFFER. I did not intend to occupy any further time of the Senate, except to reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts. But time is so precious that I shall not avail myself of the opportunity.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was unable to hear the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PEFFER. I said that, while I desired to make a very brief reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, time is so precious that I will not avail myself of the opportunity at this time.

Mr. HOAR. I will then withdraw the motion. Before doing so, the Chair will permit me to say that it is not in order to move to lay on the table a motion to indefinitely postpone the bill, unless it carries the whole bill with it.

Mr. HARRIS. I am not sure but that the Senator from Massachusetts is right. He is sometimes right, but rarely. Am I now entitled to the floor?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is withdrawn, and the Chair recognizes the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to lay the Senator from Kansas on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee moves to lay the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas on the table.

Mr. PEFFER. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for a division.

The Senate proceeded to divide, and the ayes were 7.

Mr. CHANDLER. If there be no objection, I withdraw the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. There is no objection to the withdrawal of the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to lay on the table the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, upon which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHANDLER (when his name was called). I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the Senator from Kansas may be read before the roll call proceeds.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be read.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that my amendment to the amendment, which has been read, may without reading it again be considered as moved as an amendment. The motion to lay on the table will apply to both. Otherwise I shall have to move it separately, and that will take up twice as much time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. There is not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert after section 103, as an additional section:

SEC. 103½. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of $50 for each and every passenger not a citizen of the United States who shall come by steam or sail vessel from a foreign port to any port within the United States. The said duty shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port to which such passenger shall come, or if there be no collector at such port, then to the collector of customs nearest thereto, by the master, owner, agent, or consignee of every such vessel, within twenty-four hours after the entry thereof into such port. The money thus collected shall be paid into the United States Treasury. The duty imposed by this section shall be a lien upon the vessels which shall bring such passengers into the United States, and shall be a debt in favor of the United States against the owner or owners of such vessels; and the payment of such duty may be enforced by any legal or equitable remedy. And a like duty shall be levied upon and paid, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, by every alien immigrant crossing the border line between the United States and contiguous nations.

Mr. MILLS. Regular order!

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll call will be proceeded with on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to lay the amendment of the Senator from Kansas on the table.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. RANSOM).

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. MCPHERSON), and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER].

Mr. HOAR. My colleague [Mr. LODGE] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. My colleague is absent to fulfill an important public engagement. I do not know how he would vote on this particular measure, though I know he is in sympathy with the general object of restricting immigration.

Mr. GEORGE (after having voted in the affirmative). The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] is absent, and being paired with him I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—46.

Allison,	Dixon,	Jones, Ark.	Ransom,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Berry,	Frye,	McLaurin,	Sherman,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	McMillan,	Teller,

NAYS—12.

Gallinger,	Mitchell, Oregon	Perkins,	Proctor,
Higgins,	Patton,	Pettigrew,	Shoup,
Hoar.	Peffer,	Platt,	Squire.

NOT VOTING—33.

Aldrich,	Cameron,	Jones, Nev.	Quay,
Allen,	Dolph,	Kyle,	Smith,
Brice,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Stewart,
Butler,	George,	McPherson,	Washburn,
Caffery,	Gordon,	Morrill,	Wilson,
Call,	Hale,	Palmer,	Wolcott.
Camden,	Hansbrough,	Power,

So the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have an amendment to the pending bill, which I desire to have read, and on which I desire very briefly to be heard.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I voted against laying the amendment of the Senator from Kansas on the table. I was not satisfied with that amendment, and I desire to introduce an amendment which I should be willing to vote for. I shall not take the time of the Senate. I merely ask for a viva voce vote upon it. I suppose it will follow the fate of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add after section 103 the following as an additional section:

SEC. 103½. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of $25 for each and every passenger not a citizen of the United States who shall come by steam or sail vessel from a foreign port to any port within the United States for the purpose of engaging in any industrial occupation therein. The said duty shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port to which such passenger shall come, or if there be no collector at such port, then to the collector of customs nearest thereto, by the master, owner, agent, or consignee of every such vessel, within twenty-four hours after the entry thereof into such port. The money thus collected shall be paid into the United States Treasury. The duty imposed by this section shall be a lien upon the vessels which shall bring such passengers into the United States, and shall be a debt in favor of the United States against the owner or owners of such vessels; and the payment of such duty may be enforced by any legal or equitable remedy. And a like duty shall be levied upon and paid by every alien immigrant crossing the border line between the United States and contiguous nations for the purpose of engaging in any industrial occupation therein. The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe rules and regulations for the purpose of ascertaining what persons shall be liable for the payment of said duty and the collection of the same.

Mr. PLATT. I ask for a vote upon my amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I am in favor of a judicious system of restricting immigration. I am in favor of such laws as shall prevent bad men from coming to this country. I am not in favor of putting a general tax upon everyone who comes to this country; and therefore I intend to vote "nay."

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to state substantially the same as the Senator from Colorado has stated. I am decidedly in favor of a careful revision of our immigration laws. I am in favor of restrictive provisions to prevent anarchists and all bad men from coming to this country. But I think it is a subject that ought to be treated by itself, not to be connected at all with the tariff bill.

The tariff bill deals with property and only property. An immigration bill deals with a much higher question, something more than property, that which affects the dignity, the interest, and the prosperity of the United States. Whenever a committee of this body shall take up that subject and give it full consideration, I shall go a considerable extent beyond our present laws in restraining immigration, but I will not seek to connect that subject with another measure entirely different.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to repeat upon this amendment what I said in reference to the former amendment. I am opposed to a heavy head tax as a means of restricting immigration for the simple reason that, while it works no harm as to the immigrants whom it keeps out, it is a great injustice to the immigrants who come here. If any man who is fit to come here has $50 or $25 he needs that money a great deal more than the Treasury of the United States needs it.

Therefore I am opposed to this method of restricting immigration. I have radical notions upon the subject. I believe that our immigration laws should be revised, and that we should adopt more rigid methods of excluding undesirable immigrants than are now to be found on the statute book. I shall not be behind any Senator or any citizen in advocating suitable measures of restricting undesirable immigration.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire, who I believe was chairman of the committee on Immigration in the last Congress, and I suppose he is a member of it now, whether that committee has prepared or is going to prepare any revision of the immigration laws, so that we may be able, as the Senator from Ohio has stated, to legislate upon that question in a separate bill, and not undertake to tack on a great tariff measure a provision regulating the question of immigration.

I wish to say one word further while I am upon the floor. It seems to me a very novel proceeding to levy a duty upon passengers coming to this country.

Mr. CHANDLER. I answer the Senator from Illinois by saying that there is now pending before the Committee on Immigration an important measure of additional restriction. The chairman of that committee is the senior Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], who has been very busy during the present session of Congress and has not given that attention which I hope he will be able to give between now and the fourth of next March to the legitimate work of the committee. Whenever that bill is taken up and considered, I have little doubt that a nonpartisan measure can be reported to the Senate which will adequately express the views of Senators and which will operate beneficially in the restriction of the immigration which we do not want to come into this country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. I now submit my amendment and ask that it be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert after section 104 the following as an additional section:

SEC. 104½. This act shall become operative, so far as it concerns importations from the Dominion of Canada or Newfoundland, only by a proclamation of the President of the United States. The said proclamation shall be issued under the following conditions: When it is duly certified to the President of the United States that the Government of the Dominion of Canada or of Newfoundland has declared a desire to enter into such commercial arrangements with the United States as will result in a material reduction of the duties now existing against the admission into Canada or Newfoundland of the products and manufactures of the United States he shall appoint three commissioners to meet those who may be designated to represent the Government of Canada or Newfoundland to consider the most desirable manner in which to accomplish a larger exchange of the products and manufactures of the two countries.

If the result of the deliberations of the joint commission shall be an agreement and a report, satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury, that by a material reduction of the duties, or by the putting upon the free list of the Canadian or Newfoundland tariff a list of manufactures and products of the United States which in his opinion will afford an equal advantage to the United States as the operation of this bill will afford to Canada or Newfoundland, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall so report to the President, the President, on being notified by the Canadian Government or the Government of Newfoundland that these recommendations will be presented to the Parliament of Canada or the Parliament of Newfoundland for enactment, shall then issue his proclamation making this act operative as regards the Dominion of Canada or Newfoundland immediately upon the enactment into law by either of those governments of the recommendations of said joint commission.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. GALLINGER. It is proper that I should say concerning the vote taken a moment ago on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas, that I supposed he had accepted the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and that it had become a part of his amendment.

Mr. PEFFER. If the Senator will permit me a moment, I will state that I was expecting the Senator from Connecticut would present the amendment. It was so understood between him and me; but the motion of the Senator from Tennessee came in before we could get the ear of the Chair.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state that on the matter of immigration I have very pronounced opinions which I have no disposition to hide from any citizen of the Republic. Something has been said about the humanitarian idea in connection with immigration. It has been suggested that this is a proposed tariff law dealing with inanimate things, and that the subject of immigration deals with animate things—men, women, and children. So far as I am concerned I believe in applying the humanitarian idea to our own people.

A bale of goods is unloaded from a European vessel upon which we exact a duty, but the same men under existing law who made that bale of goods can come into our own country without paying anything for the privilege of coming here. A man engaged in that same manufacture can find employment at lower wages than are being given to American mechanics and workmen and can manufacture those goods and put them upon the market in competition with the products of American artisans. Therefore, I am prepared now and at any time to vote any proper qualification or exemption so far as foreign immigrants are concerned with a view of protecting our own people, not only from goods manufactured abroad, but from goods manufactured on our own soil by aliens seeking a shelter under the laws of our Republic.

So far as the amendment I have just submitted is concerned I have but a few words to say. The Canadian question has been very fully discussed during this long and interesting debate. The question of reciprocity has engaged the attention of the Senate to-day, and Senators much better qualified than myself to discuss that great question have occupied the time of the Senate in enlightening us on the subject. But we are dealing with one foreign country in some respects different from all others. The Dominion of Canada stretches along our Northern borders, a country greater in area than our own, a country inhabited by men of energy and enterprise, who are competing with our people in the products of the farm, the workshop, and the mill.

I take it we are about to pass a tariff bill. I have hoped all through this great debate that in some way, by some means, either by a majority vote or otherwise, our country would be saved from the disasters which, in my judgment, will necessarily come upon it by the enactment of the pending bill; but I take it for granted that the bill is to pass, that it is to become the law of the land, and is to remain on our statute books for many years to come. For that reason I desire to save our people from the disastrous competition which will come to us under this law when enacted from the people of the neighboring Dominion of Canada.

Mr. President, the pending bill does everything for Canada that Canada could have asked. Canada has all the advantages in the pending bill and the Republic of the United States is the sufferer in the legislation. We have placed, for the benefit of Canada, lumber and wool upon the free list. We have greatly reduced, for the benefit of Canada, the tariff rates upon granite, upon wood pulp, upon live stock, upon agricultural products, upon manufactures of cotton and manufactures of wool; and in the bill we have done many other things that are to the advantage of Canada and to the disadvantage of the country for which we are presumably legislating.

I shall not detain the Senate by reading the great variety of expressions I have gathered from Canadian papers during this debate. I will take the time of the Senate only to read an extract which I clipped from one of the great Canadian papers, a paper that reflects the sentiment of that great Dominion, perhaps to a greater extent than any other journal published on Canadian soil. A few weeks ago that great paper said:

> The Wilson bill will give Canada a great boom and kill annexation. If that is not so, and the bill did not benefit Canada, what are we rejoicing over? Would we rejoice if the United States got the benefit? This bill is worth millions to Canada.

And now, Mr. President, believing as I do that that newspaper spoke the exact truth; that this legislation will be worth millions to Canada; that we have discriminated in this bill against our own country so far as Canada is concerned, I simply ask the Senate of the United States to incorporate in the bill a section that will protect our country from the aggressions of Canada in a commercial sense, and that we shall so arrange matters that we will get some degree of reciprocity in dealing with the Dominion of Canada.

This is all I care to say. I might discuss many other points in this connection. I see the Senator from Tennessee rise, doubtless to move to lay my amendment upon the table.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator is quite right.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Tennessee will kindly take his seat, when I get through possibly he may have an opportunity to make the motion. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that I have no disposition to discuss this matter any further. My judgment is that not another single word will be uttered in favor of the amendment or against it, and that we can come to a direct vote upon it and in that way dispose of it quite as soon as shall be done by a motion to lay it upon the table.

As I said a moment ago, this is all I care to say on the subject. It is a business proposition. I think it is worthy of the consideration of the Senate. I appeal to the Senator from Tennessee that it is one worthy of a vote at least, and I am willing to have it submitted now to a yea-and-nay vote of the Senate and in that way dispose of it.

Mr. HARRIS. If we can come to a vote right now upon the amendment——

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall not move to lay it on the table, though I rose for that purpose. I am quite ready to vote on the amendment without the motion.

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be read. Some of us do not know what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTIN in the chair). The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. CAFFERY. I announce my pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER].

Mr. HARRIS (after having voted in the negative). I desire to ask if the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the senior Senator from Rhode Island has not voted.

Mr. HARRIS. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore I must withdraw my vote.

Mr. CALL. I announce my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. HARRIS. I am informed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] would vote "nay" if he were here, and he suggests that I transfer my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island to that Senator. I will do so, and vote "nay."

Mr. MANDERSON. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], and abstain from voting.

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—21.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 105. Acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed, but the repeal of existing laws or modifications thereof embraced in this act shall not affect any act done, or any right accruing or accrued, or any suit or proceeding had or commenced in any civil cause before the said repeal or modifications; but all rights and liabilities under said laws shall continue and may be enforced in the same manner as if said repeal or modifications had not been made. Any offenses committed and all penalties or forfeitures or liabilities incurred prior to the passage of this act under any statute embraced in or changed, modified, or repealed by this act may be prosecuted or punished in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed. All acts of limitation, whether applicable to civil causes and proceedings or to the prosecution of offenses or for the recovery of penalties or forfeitures embraced in or modified, changed, or repealed by this act shall not be affected thereby; and all suits, proceedings, or prosecutions, whether civil or criminal, for causes arising or acts done or committed prior to the passage of this act, may be commenced and prosecuted within the same time and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal the provisions of section 3058 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act approved February 23, 1887, in respect to the abandonment of merchandise to underwriters or the salvors of property, and the ascertainment of duties thereon.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend the section by inserting before the first word "acts" the word "all;" so as to read:

> All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill has been concluded. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. Q. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 171) granting to the State of North Dakota certain lands heretofore set apart as a wood reservation for Fort Totten military reservation for the use of the militia of North Dakota, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 38) relating to the pay and retirement of mates in the United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. 353) to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States;

A bill (H. R. 6320) to provide for the creation of the office of assistant to the Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, Navy Department; and

A bill (H. R. 7506) authorizing the county of Coconino, Territory of Arizona, to issue bonds for the construction of a county building at the county seat thereof.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 1954) to amend section 1371, chapter 1, Title XV, Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to appointments of assistant paymasters in the Navy;

A bill (S. 2000) granting the Brainerd and Northern Minnesota Railway Company a right of way through the Leech Lake Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota; and

A bill (S. 2135) to provide that a term of the circuit and district court of the United States for the district of Vermont may be held at Montpelier.

MEMORIAL SERVICE AT ST. MATTHEW'S CHURCH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communication from the Secretary of State, which was read:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 28, 1894.

SIR: At the instance of the French ambassador, I have the honor to advise you, for the information of the Senate, that a religious service in memory of the late President of the French Republic will be held at St. Matthew's Church, corner Fifteenth and H streets, on Sunday next, the 1st proximo, at 12 o'clock m.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

W. Q. GRESHAM.

To the Hon. A. E. STEVENSON, United States Senate, Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate attend the religious service of which notice has just been given.

Mr. GRAY. I second the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was—

Ordered, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, under the direction of the Vice-President, be authorized to make all suitable arrangements for the attendance of the Senate upon the religious service, in memory of the late President of the French Republic, to be held at St. Matthew's Church.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 38) relating to the pay and retirement of mates in the United States Navy; and

A bill (H. R. 6320) to provide for the creation of the office of assistant to the Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, Navy Department.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Territories:

A bill (H. R. 353) to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and

A bill (H. R. 7056) authorizing the county of Coconino, Territory of Arizona, to issue bonds for the construction of a county building at the county seat thereof.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to move in a single amendment to amend several clauses, beginning on page 212. The effect of my amendment is to limit the bonded period, so called, to four years, instead of eight, as the provisions now stand.

On page 212, line 14, I move to strike out "eight" and insert "four;" the same in line 1, page 213; the same in line 22, page 213; on page 216, beginning at line 3, to strike out all to and including the word "gauge" in line 11, and on page 219 to strike out "eight" and insert "four."

I will say to the Senator from Missouri that I have looked over all these sections, and if the amendments which I have suggested are adopted it will leave the provisions intact, except that four years will be substituted for eight years as the length of the bonded period.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 14, page 212, strike out the word "eight" and insert "four;" in line 1, page 213, strike out "eight" and insert "four;" in line 22, strike out "eight" and insert "four;" on page 216, strike out all that part of the section beginning with line 3, down to and including the word "gauge," in line 11; as follows:

And provided further, That in case such spirits shall remain in warehouse after the same have been regauged, the packages containing the spirits shall, at the time of withdrawal from warehouse and at such other times as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may direct, be again regauged or inspected; and if found to contain a larger quantity than shown by the first regauge, the tax shall be collected and paid on the quantity contained in each such package as shown by the original gauge.

And on page 219, line 2, strike out the word "eight" and insert "four."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. On that question, Mr. President, without debate, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], on which he asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER].

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], but by arrangement that pair has been transferred to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], so that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], who is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island, and I can vote.

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN.] If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and I feel constrained to withdraw my vote in his absence.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will allow me, I have already announced the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], with whom the Senator from Tennessee is paired. That enables the Senator from Tennessee and me to vote.

Mr. HARRIS. I am quite content, but I agreed to take care of the Senator from Rhode Island. Under the announcement made by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] my vote can stand.

Mr. KYLE. I wish to state that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] if present would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Allison,	Dolph,	Hawley,	Peffer,
Berry,	Frye,	Higgins,	Platt,
Carey,	Gallinger,	Hoar,	Proctor,
Cullom,	George,	Irby,	Sherman,
Davis,	Hale,	McMillan,	Washburn.
Dixon,	Hansbrough,	Patton,

NAYS—36.

Bate,	Hunton,	Mitchell, Wis.	Squire,
Blanchard,	Jarvis,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Murphy,	Teller,
Coke,	Kyle,	Palmer,	Turpie,
Daniel,	Lindsay,	Pasco,	Vest,
Faulkner,	McLaurin,	Pugh,	Vilas,
Gibson,	Martin,	Quay,	Voorhees,
Gorman,	Mills,	Ransom,	Walsh,
Harris,	Mitchell, Oregon	Shoup,	White.

NOT VOTING—26.

Aldrich,	Camden,	Jones, Nev.	Power,
Allen,	Cameron,	Lodge,	Roach
Blackburn,	Chandler,	McPherson,	Smith,
Brice,	Dubois,	Manderson,	Wilson,
Butler,	Gordon,	Morrill,	Wolcott.
Caffery,	Gray,	Perkins,
Call,	Hill,	Pettigrew.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer an amendment on page 40, line 12, after the word "rates," to strike out, beginning with the word "Provided," and ending with the word "same," in line 17, and insert what I shall send to the desk.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I inquire of the Senator if that was a reserved paragraph? There were certain paragraphs that were reserved when we were going over the bill to be taken up subsequently.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think this paragraph was not reserved. It relates to the treaty with the Hawaiian Islands, admitting their sugar free of duty.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I hope the Senator will not insist on offering the amendment now. It seems to me it would be a violation of the unanimous-consent agreement we had to go back and amend paragraphs that have been passed upon. Of course the Senator can offer the amendment after the bill has been reported to the Senate, but not while we are acting as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Very well. If that is the agreement, I certainly do not insist upon offering the amendment at this time, but I shall offer it when the bill comes into the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That will be entirely regular.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to interfere with this question, but I think it is quite as regular to offer the amendment now as after the bill is reported to the Senate. I did not understand the agreement to extend so far as the Senator from Arkansas understands. However, it is not a practical question now.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We do not want anything except what is regular, and it has been understood—at least my understanding was—that there was an agreement that the bill should be read through, except where certain paragraphs were passed over as reserved whilst the bill was being read and acted upon, and as the various paragraphs and sections were read they were disposed of so far as the Committee of the Whole was concerned, but of course they will be open to amendment in the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. My recollection is that I put the question that if any Senator should have forgotton an amendment that he desired to move, or if an amendment should be suggested to him, would he be permitted to offer it, and the answer was "of course."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am perfectly willing where a Senator has omitted something that unanimous consent be given to going back and permitting him to offer an amendment, but I object to going back to paragraphs which were not reserved and submitting amendments to them whilst the bill is still in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I understand the amendment intended to be proposed by me will be entirely in order when the bill is reported to the Senate?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then I shall not offer the amendment now, but shall ask to have it printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order to print will be made, in the absence of objection.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be added as additional sections.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the following as additional sections to the bill:

SEC. —. That a commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the customs commission, to be composed of five disinterested persons to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The commissioners appointed under this act shall continue in office six years, respectively, from the date of their respective appointments and until their successors, respectively, are appointed and qualified by the President for terms of six years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he shall succeed. Any commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. No more than three of the commissioners shall be appointed from the same political party. No vacancy in the commission shall impair the right of the remaining commissioners to exercise all the powers of the commission. The salary of such commissioners shall be at the rate of $7,000 per annum. They shall be entitled, in addition, to compensation for actual traveling and other necessary expenses in the discharge of their duties. They shall choose one of their own number to be president of the commission. They shall have power to employ a clerk, a stenographer, and a messenger, and, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, such other clerical assistants as shall be necessary to the performance of their duties, and at such rates of compensation as they may establish, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Their salaries, expenses, and the compensation of the clerk, stenographer, messenger, and such additional clerical force as may thus be employed shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon the auditing of the same, according to the usual course in the Treasury Department.

SEC. —. That the commission shall establish its permanent office at the city of Washington, where it shall be at all times in the usual course of business, ready to hear or receive oral or written testimony upon all the specific subjects mentioned in this act, and generally upon everything relating directly or indirectly to customs duties and revenue.

SEC. —. That it shall be the duty of the said commission to examine into and ascertain the average price of commodities imported into the United States, both at wholesale and retail in the United States, and both in the United States and in the foreign places of production, sale, or shipment, for the period of twelve months preceding and twelve months following any change in the rate of customs duties imposed upon such commodities, and this inquiry shall be carried back for a period of twenty-five years, and more, if deemed advisable by such commission, and shall extend to all facts relating to demand and supply, domestic and foreign, which tend to influence prices of such commodities, foreign and domestic, and to aid in determining the true effect of the import duty, or of the change therein in the several cases upon domestic and foreign prices, and upon productions of the same or of other commodities, upon revenue, upon immigration, upon profits of capital, rates of wages, and the general welfare.

Second. To ascertain the amounts in quantity and value of the importation of the principal commodities during each of said periods of twelve months preceding and succeeding any such change in customs duties.

Third. To ascertain, as far as practicable, the quantity and value of the same or similar commodities produced in the United States during the same respective periods.

Fourth. To ascertain whether in any and what instances the particular rates of customs duties have operated to increase or diminish production in the United States, and to cause a reduction of the first cost of articles produced for consumption, and what other causes, if any, have operated similarly.

Fifth. To ascertain in what particular rates of customs duties existing from time to time operate injuriously or favorably to the development and increase of American manufactures and productions, or operate injuriously or favorably to the consumers of such manufactured articles and productions in respect of causing or contributing to the payment of unreasonable prices by consumers, or the removal or reduction of the same.

Sixth. To ascertain the effect of the customs duties upon the price of agricultural productions of the country and their sale in United States markets and their consumption in the United States.

Seventh. To ascertain the effect of such customs duties, both actual and relative, in respect of the employment and the payment of remunerative wages, both actual and relative, to labor in the United States, and a comparison of the same with the labor and wages in other countries.

Eighth. To consider the effect of customs duties, or the absence of them, upon the agricultural, commercial, manufacturing, mining, and other industrial interests of the people of the United States.

Ninth. To ascertain and compare the actual cost and the selling price, both at wholesale and retail, of similar manufactured commodities reduced to American weights, measures, and money in the United States and elsewhere.

Tenth. To ascertain the growth and development of the principal manufacturing industries affected by the tariff schedules in England, France, Germany, Belgium, and the United States for the last twenty-five years; and to ascertain the relative cost of transportation in those countries and the United States.

Eleventh. To ascertain the trade relations of the United States with other nations and ascertain the countries where advantageous treaties can be made to advance the commercial interests of the people of the United States.

SEC. —. That for the purpose of such inquiries and investigations the commission may visit any part of the United States, and by public notice or otherwise invite testimony and information from all persons interested. They may from time to time also delegate one of their number to visit foreign countries to make investigation respecting the labor and industries of those countries whenever such investigation may be necessary to promote the objects of the commission, and they may require information concerning the labor and industries of foreign countries from consular or other agents of the United States in those countries, and such agents shall furnish the information so required promptly and without charge.

SEC. —. That the commission shall report its proceedings in respect of the matters hereinbefore in this act mentioned, together with the statistics and evidence upon which its report is based, together with recommendations for changes in customs dues which they may deem advisable and necessary, and the ground upon which its conclusions concerning such changes have been reached, to Congress, in the month of December in each year, and at all times furnish such information as may be required to the Department of State. It shall cause the testimony and statistics taken and obtained in respect of the matters in this act mentioned to be printed from time to time and distributed to members of Congress by the Public Printer, and also shall cause to be printed for the use of Congress 2,000 copies of its annual report, together with statistics and testimony hereinbefore mentioned. It is hereby made the duty of the Public Printer to execute the printing provided for in this act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. SHERMAN. If that amendment is to be pressed now, I desire to offer one or two very important amendments to it.

I am in favor of the appointment of a permanent commission on the tariff. I presume this amendment has been prepared for some time, but I have not seen it. The number of persons to be appointed on the commission is totally inadequate.

No five men in the United States or in the world could be trusted to take charge of a great question of this kind, which requires a variety of knowledge upon almost every article which enters into the consumption of human life. Therefore, not less that fifteen ought to compose the commission.

The Oliver commission, as it was called, which I believe reported to Congress the best tariff law that I know of, at least for many years, was composed of thirteen members, of which Mr. Oliver, of Pittsburg, was chairman.

Unless such a commission should be composed of a considerable number, it would be impossible to secure upon it representatives from every section of the country who are familiar with all the industries in their localities, as well as familiar with the general industries of the country.

If this amendment is seriously to be pressed at this time, I shall move to insert "fifteen" instead of "five," for a commission composed of but five members would be totally inadequate to deal with this great question. Five would be about the most dangerous number that could be selected, because then one man might control the commission.

There should also be a provision that not more than a certain number of members of the commission should be of the same political party. It should be entirely and purely national in the broad sense, and it should be nonpartisan.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator let me make a suggestion in view of what he was saying? The Senator from South Dakota offers this amendment, which is a very important one. We have had no time to examine it. Will it not serve the Senator's purpose of offering the amendment just as well to let it go over, so that it can be presented in the Senate; and in the mean time we can examine it and see what amendments, if any, ought to be offered to it?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not know that I have any objection to its going over and being offered in the Senate. I will say, however, that it is almost the same as the amendment adopted by the Senate to the McKinley law in 1890. There are some changes from that act, but they are very slight.

Mr. HALE. Its going over will give us an opportunity of examining it and seeing what amendments are needed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota whether the proposed commission is given any power except to report?

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is all; to investigate and report. It is to have no power of legislation.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator also how far this plan of a tariff commission differs from that proposed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], who I see in his seat. Is it the same or different? If it differs, how does it differ from the proposition of that Senator?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Perhaps the Senator from Illinois can inform the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. PETTIGREW. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. I have a proposed amendment to the pending bill, which I now hold in my hand. On conference with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], in charge of the bill so far as its management on the floor is concerned, he expressed a preference that I should offer the amendment in the Senate. Some days ago it occurred to me that perhaps it would be in the interest of economy of time that I should adopt that course, and I determined to do so.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator, in view of the amendment already offered, that he offer it now.

Mr. CULLOM. I was going to say the difference, as I remember it, in the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota and the one which I propose is that the amendment proposed by him is a general amendment providing for a general investigation without requiring the commission to confine itself to any specific line of investigation and report.

The amendment which I propose is that the commission, if it shall be provided for and appointed, shall investigate and report to Congress the exact difference in the cost of wages in this and in foreign countries, and report a bill for the consideration of Congress, the measure of duties being based upon the difference in wages in the United States and wages in foreign countries.

My idea has been that the great struggle in this country is to protect the American laborer. In protecting the American laborer we shall be doing substantial justice to the American producer or manufacturer, as the case may be. I have therefore tried to confine the investigation of such a commission to that work, so that when they report we shall know to a certainty the exact difference between the wages in this country and in foreign countries, and if we make rates of duty equivalent to the difference in wages we are sure to protect American laborers.

It has seemed to me that if we confined the investigation in that way we should have something before us which would make it certain in our minds what we were doing when we put a duty of 20 per cent, of 30 per cent, or of 75 per cent on any given article.

That is the character of my amendment. I am willing to offer it now, so that it may be printed, with the understandin that it go over and be considered during the consideration of the bill in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois will be printed.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. And it goes over, I understand?

Mr. CULLOM. It goes over to be considered in the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I now ask the Senate to consider certain paragraphs which were passed over in reading the bill. Before doing that, I ask unanimous consent to dispose of a number of immaterial amendments which the committee propose, most of which are corrections. To that I presume there will be no objection. If there be no objection, I have prepared and shall offer these before the others are taken up.

Mr. PLATT. That is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair inquires of the Senator from South Dakota as to what action he desires taken upon his amendment?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask that it be printed and go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 19, page 4, line 14, I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 19, line 14, it is proposed to restore the word "prepared," and after "prepared" to insert the words "fish-bladders, or;" so as to read:

19. Gelatine, glue, isinglass, or fish glue, and prepared fish bladders or fish sounds, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. CHANDLER. Has the Senator from Arkansas made all the explanation he intends to make?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, it seems to me that the committee ought to proceed with great circumspection in the closing paragraphs of this bill. It is probable that within two or three days this bill will be reported to the Senate and voted upon in the Senate, and I have noticed that there is always great danger of little things which slip in at the close of a great measure of this kind and pass unobserved. Like "chops and tomato sauce;" there is always some danger that something will lurk under an apparently harmless amendment; and I am afraid that possibly these fish bladders or fish sounds may contain something which ought not to be hastily adopted.

I do not wish to be captious; but it seems to me that the Senator from Arkansas, when he moves these amendments which come from the committee and which carry with them the weight which all committee amendments carry, should accompany each by a brief explanation of the reason why this measure, supposed to be reasonably perfect and which has occupied so much time of the Senate, ought to be adopted. If that statement can be made, of course I shall interpose no objection to any amendment; but I do not think that Senators on this side of the Chamber ought to accept these amendments without some explanation concerning them.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I understand that there are several committee amendments which it is designed to present while the bill is in Committee of the Whole. Of course, it is well understood that the bill will be subject to amendment when it shall come into the Senate. We have been here day after day and week after week until we have run into months; and for some time past the sessions have been running from 10 o'clock in the morning until 6 or 7 o'clock at night, and in a heat which is phenomenal and exceedingly oppressive.

I suggest to those in charge of the bill—and I think all on this side of the Chamber will agree to it—that the amendments proposed by the committee shall be acted upon without debate in Committee of the Whole; that any amendments designed to be proposed to the bill, other than those which are in the hands of the committee in charge of the bill, shall make their appearance when the bill comes to the Senate, and that at the close of action upon the committee amendments the bill shall be reported to the Senate.

It then would be an absolute necessity for the intelligent consideration of the bill that it should be printed, and that time shall be afforded to Senators to consider the bill as it has been amended as in Committee of the Whole. It is true it might be printed in a few hours; but a very few hours will not suffice, after the printed copy comes into the hands of Senators, for them to see the changes which have been made and take whatever action they may desire to take in the Senate.

I ask unanimous consent that after these amendments of the committee shall be adopted, the bill shall, before the adjournment this evening, be reported to the Senate, and that the Senate shall then adjourn until Monday next at 10 o'clock. That will give that temporary relief from these constant sessions which has become to many members of this body an absolute necessity, and it will give that opportunity to examine the bill which I suggest. I ask that that may be done.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The purpose I had in view in asking unanimous consent that these amendments should be acted upon and the bill reported to the Senate was that they might be printed, so that Senators may see what is proposed. The amendments which I propose to offer are not material. I have submitted them to Senators on the other side of the Chamber who are members of the Committee on Finance, and I think they meet the approval of everybody. There can be no controversy about them. Nevertheless I am anxious that they shall be printed with the bill, so that they may be seen, and if there is any objection to them, whatever action the Senate chooses to take in the Senate can be taken without difficulty. I think there will be no difficulty in following out the line suggested by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HOAR. I represent, I suppose, one of the largest fishing communities, and I do not know what the effect of the amendment substituting for "fish sounds" the words "prepared fish sounds."

Mr. PLATT. That is not what it does. The Senator from Massachusetts misunderstands the amendment. It is to restore in paragraph 19 the word "prepared," which has been stricken out, and after the word "prepared" to add "fish bladders or;" so as to read "fish bladders or fish sounds."

Mr. HOAR. I understand that, but I did not know how the restoration of the word "prepared" will operate. Does my friend from Connecticut?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The word "prepared" was restored to the paragraph, if the Senator will permit me, so that it reads now:

Prepared fish bladders or fish sounds.

And in the free list in paragraph 403 he will find:

Bladders, and all integuments of animals, crude, salted for preservation, and unmanufactured, not specially provided for in this act.

So the prepared articles go on the taxed list and the raw materials on the free list.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose I could not find anybody here, unless it be the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], who knows almost everything, who understood that particular thing. Therefore I am glad to understand it is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit to the Senate the request of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest that we finish the amendments before there is any agreement made as to what we shall do on that question. I do not understand the Senator from Nebraska to submit his request now.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think the Senator from Arkansas and I perfectly understand each other. Let consideration of the amendments proceed. I think it is pretty well understood we can arrange for an adjournment until Monday after they are adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that the Senator from Nebraska desired that the request should be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Was the amendment suggested just now adopted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 47, on page 8, after the word "zinc" I move to strike out the words "paint or pigment," and before the word "zinc," to insert the words "paint or pigment containing;" so as to read:

Zinc, oxide of, and white paint or pigment, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move as a new paragraph what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new paragraph the following:

59½. Paris green and London purple, 12½ per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 97, after the word "unsilvered," I move to strike out "lookingglass plates;" and after the word "when," in line 24, to insert the word "bent."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 97, after the word "unsilvered," it is proposed to strike out "lookingglass plates," and in line 24, after the word "when," to insert the word "bent;" so as to read:

97. Cast polished plate glass, silvered or unsilvered, and cylinder, crown, or common window glass, when bent, ground, obscured, frosted, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out the proviso at the end of paragraph 102.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 102, after the words "ad valorem," in line 22, it is proposed to strike out:

Provided, That bent glass shall pay the same rates of duty as the like glass when flat.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 123, line 24, a comma should be inserted after the word "rods."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that correction will be made.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 134, line 1, the words "and irons" should be "andirons."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That verbal change will be made, in the absence of objection.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In the subhead before paragraph 162 I move to strike out the words "manufactures of," so as to read as it did when the bill came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. PLATT. Was that amended?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It was amended, and the effect of this amendment is to increase the rate in this paragraph, for the reason that the raw materials out of which these manufactures are made are taxable at 25 per cent, and this allows them to go into the basket clause at 35 per cent. There should be a difference between the raw material and the manufactured article.

Mr. FRYE and Mr. PLATT. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. Then paragraph 162 will begin: "Bullions and metal thread of gold," etc.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes. I move to amend paragraph 174 so as to make it read:

174. Zinc in blocks or pigs, 1 cent per pound.

Mr. HOAR. I inquire of the Senator from Arkansas how much 1 cent a pound specific would be ad valorem?

Mr. FRYE. It is seven-eighths of 1 cent, and the committee have increased it to 1 cent.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is an increase of one-eighth of a cent in the rate adopted by the Senate over that in the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. HOAR. But how much ad valorem duty would that be?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I can not state, but I suppose somewhere in the neighborhood of 20 per cent.

Mr. ALLISON. About that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to amend paragraph 175, so as to read:

Zinc in sheets, not polished nor further advanced than rolled, 1¼ cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 176, I move to strike out the rate now in the bill and insert "three-fourths of 1 cent per pound."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 176, line 16, it is proposed to strike out "five-eighths" and insert "three-fourths;" so as to read:

Zinc, old and worn out, fit only to be remanufactured, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator what he does with the polished?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It goes in the basket clause at 35 per cent.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I offer to paragraph 218 the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 218, line 2, after the word "sirup," it is proposed to insert "or," and in the same line, after the word "molassess," to strike out "or spirits;" and in line 3, after the word "act," to insert "prepared or dessicated cocoanut or copra;" so as to read:

Comfits, sweetmeats, and fruits preserved in sugar, sirup, or molasses, not specially provided for in this act, prepared or dessicated cocoanut or copra, and jellies of all kinds, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I offer an amendment to paragraph 224 which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 224, line 24, after the word "kinds," it is proposed to insert "including cocoanuts;" so as to read:

Nuts of all kinds, including cocoanuts, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I offer to paragraph 234 the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 234, line 23, after the word "ground," it is proposed to strike out "or;" in the same line, after the word "preserved," to insert "or prepared;" and in line 25 to strike out "10 cents per pound" and insert "25 per cent ad valorem;" so as to make the paragraph read:

234. Mustard, ground, preserved, or prepared in bottles or otherwise, 25 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to insert as paragraph 273½ what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new paragraph:

273½. Linen hydraulic hose, made in whole or in part of flax and hemp or jute, 40 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to insert as paragraph 275½ what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following as a new paragraph:

275½. Tapes, composed of flax, woven with or without metal thread on reels or spools, designed expressly for use in the manufacture of measuring tape, 25 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator whether he proposes to make any amendment increasing the rate in paragraph 275, on collars and cuffs? [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I shall not offer any amendment to that paragraph this afternoon.

In paragraph 282, line 25, I move to strike out the words "and felts for paper-makers' use."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 286, line 20, after the word "laces," I move to strike out the word "and," and after the word "nets" to insert "netting and veilings."

Mr. ALLISON. With a comma inserted after the word "laces."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes; with a comma after "laces."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 20, after the word "laces," it is proposed to strike out the word "and" and insert a comma, and after the word "nets" to insert "nettings and veilings."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Does not the Senator propose to amend paragraph 284 in relation to ready-made clothing by striking out "plushes and other pile fabrics?"

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have an amendment to paragraph 284, but I do not intend to ask the Senate to consider it this afternoon. I intend to offer that in the Senate. I merely ask now to consider amendments to which there can be no objection.

Mr. FRYE. Very well.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 301, line 17, before the words "and veilings," I move to strike out the word "veils" and insert "nettings;" so as to read "nettings and veilings."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. Paragraph 298 was passed over. Does the Senator wish to go to that now, or does he wish to reserve it until the bill is reported to the Senate?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not propose to take that up just now.

I offer the amendment to paragraph 311 which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 311, line 25, after the word "maps," it is proposed to insert "music;" so as to read:

Maps, music, charts, and all printed matter, not specially provided for, etc.

Mr. ALLISON. And insert a comma after the word "music."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes; let that be included.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I ask if the word "music" is necessary there, whether there should not be a corresponding change in the free list, in paragraphs 410, 412, 413?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not see any conflict between the different sections.

Mr. HOAR. The question which I put to the Senator is, if a special duty is put on music in the paragraph which has just been amended, whether the provision for importing free of duty certain articles and books for public libraries should not also apply to music. There are a great many persons collecting musical libraries now in this country, and it seems to me the same rate, whatever it may be, which is applied to books, engravings, and other prints should be applied to music.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Paragraph 385 provides that all "articles imported by the United States" shall be admitted free.

Mr. HOAR. But that applies only to the United States. I am speaking of public libraries; and old music should be admitted the same as compositions twenty years old.

Mr. VEST. That is, by authority of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. That is another point altogether. Let me repeat my statement. The same reasons which require you to exempt public libraries and old compositions in the matter of books is applicable to musical compositions, and you should make a corresponding exception in the free list to that which you make in regard to books. That is my point.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I imagine that old music would not be an article to be dealt in much, and that it would amount to very little.

Mr. HOAR. It is a very important matter to musical libraries, which are growing up all over the country.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I shall look into it, and if I find the point he makes is good. I shall not object to his amendment when the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I think in paragraph 410, on page 94, after the word "etchings," the word "music" should be inserted; and also in paragraph 413. It should be inserted in both those paragraphs.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no objection to the word being inserted now. Where would the Senator suggest that it be inserted?

Mr. HOAR. In line 25, paragraph 410, after the word "etchings," I move to insert the word "music," to be followed by a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. In paragraph 413, line 13, after the word "maps," I move to insert "music," to be followed by a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 333, after the word "cloth," in line 16, I move to strike out "30 per cent ad valorem" and insert "6 cents per square yard."

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Arkansas how much is the ad valorem equivalent of that duty according to his best information?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The present rate on this article is 8 cents per square yard, and this is a reduction to 6 cents.

Mr. PLATT. Have not paragraphs 333 and 334 been consolidated in some way? Were they not passed over?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] asked that they be passed over, and he knows of the amendment I now offer.

Mr. HOAR. I shall not press the question now, but may at some other time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 333, line 16, after the word "cloth," it is proposed to strike out "30 per cent ad valorem" and insert "6 cents per square yard;" so as to read:

333. Haircloth, known as "crinoline cloth," 6 cents per square yard.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 334 I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 334, line 18, after the words "hair seating," it is proposed to strike out "25 per cent ad valorem" and insert "20 cents per square yard."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. Does the word "and" remain connecting paragraphs 333 and 334? The word "and" was inserted there.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let the paragraphs be consolidated, then.

Mr. PLATT. No; I do not ask that.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then I move to strike out the word "and" connecting the paragraphs.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 403, line 12, I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 403, line 12, after the word "animals," it is proposed to insert "and fish sounds or bladders."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 413, line 19, I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 413, line 19, after the word "States," it is proposed to insert "or any State or public library."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 611, line 6, I move to strike out the word "bulbous" and insert "roots;" so as to read, "bulbs and roots."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out paragraph 637, on page 114.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 637, as follows:

637. Straw.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 667, I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of paragraph 667, line 16, it is proposed to add "and not edible;" so as to read:

667. Wafers, unmedicated, and not edible.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. On page 125, line 2, I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Treasury," in line 2, on page 125, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That the manufacture of distilled spirits from grain, starch, molasses, or sugar, including all dilutions or mixtures of them, or either of them, shall not be permitted in such manufacturing warehouses.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The intention of that is to exclude the manufacturing of liquors from bonded warehouses.

Mr. HALE. All kinds of liquors?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In section 9, line 23, on page 124, after the word "class," I move to strike out "two" and insert "six;" so as to read:

Manufactured in bonded warehouses similar to those known and designated in Treasury regulations as bonded warehouses, class 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Of the paragraphs passed over, the first, I believe, was paragraph 84.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paragraph will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

84. China, porcelain, parian, bisque, earthen, stone, and crockery ware, including plaques, ornaments, toys, charms, vases, and statuettes, plain white, and not decorated in any manner, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 3 of the paragraph, before the word "white," I move to strike out "plain."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 4, I move to strike out the words "and not decorated in any manner" and insert "not changed in condition by superadded ornamentation or decoration."

Mr. HALE. Does that change the meaning of the phrase?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The change was suggested by the Treasury Department. I think there was some difficulty of administration found by the words in the text of the bill.

Mr. HALE. To the ordinary comprehension it would seem to be the same.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It seems so to me.

Mr. HALE. I do not object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 4, before the words "per cent," I move to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to make a single inquiry. The words "not decorated in any manner" mean, of course, not painted. Do the words "not changed in condition by superadded ornamentation or decoration" mean not painted?

Mr. HALE. Yes; anything that is put on white porcelain is decoration or ornamentation.

Mr. PLATT. I suppose so.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest that in paragraph 84 the words "superadded ornamentation or" should be omitted. That is a fearful and wonderful phrase from the Treasury Department. "Ornamentation" is the same as "decoration," and "superadded" is entirely unnecessary. We do not care anything about the decoration of anything else. We do not decorate white china. If it said "not changed in condition by decoration" the amendment will then correspond to the simplicity and beauty of this act in other respects; but if this is retained, there will be a sort of literary character given to this bill which will attract notice and attention the world over. So I suggest that the Senator accomplishes his whole purpose by saying "not changed in condition by decoration."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I prefer that the bill should not be too simple, and therefore prefer to retain the language suggested by the Treasury Department.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let the next reserved paragraph be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved paragraph will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

85. China, porcelain, parian, bisque, earthen, stone, and crockery ware, including plaques, ornaments, toys, charms, vases, and statuettes, painted, tinted, stained, enameled, printed, gilded, or otherwise decorated in any manner, 40 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment in line 10, before the words "per cent," to strike out "forty" and insert "forty-five."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw the committee amendment to that paragraph; and in line 9, before the word "enameled," I move to strike out the word "stained;" and in line 10, before the words "per cent," I move to strike out "forty" and insert "thirty-five."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Paragraph 86 is the next reserved paragraph.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

86. All other china, porcelain, parian, bisque, earthen, stone, and crockery ware, including lava tips for burners, not specially provided for in this act, if decorated in any manner, 40 per cent ad valorem; if not decorated, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 12, after the word "all," it is proposed to strike out "other china, porcelain, parian, bisque, earthen, stone, and crockery ware" and insert "articles composed of earthen or mineral substances;" and in line 17, before the words "per centum," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The next reserved paragraph is 298.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paragraph will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

298. Silk partially manufactured from cocoons or from waste silk, and not further advanced or manufactured than carded or combed silk, 25 cents per pound. Thrown silk, not more advanced than singles, tram, organzine, sewing silk, twist, floss, and silk threads or yarns of every description, except spun silk, 20 per cent ad valorem; spun silk in skeins, cops, warps, or on beams, 20 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend the paragraph in line 25, on page 75, after the words "combed silk," to strike out "25 cents per pound" and insert "20 per cent ad valorem;" in line 3, on page 76, after the word "description," to strike out "except spun silk, 20 per cent ad valorem" and insert the word "and;" in line 5, after the word "beam," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-five."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw the portion of the committee amendment in line 5, striking out "twenty" and inserting "twenty-five;" and I move to make the rate "30 per cent."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I now ask the Secretary to read section 299, which was reserved.

The Secretary read as follows:

299. Velvets, plushes, chenilles, or other pile fabrics, 45 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move as a substitute for the paragraph which has just been read what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 299 and insert:

299. Velvets, chenilles, or other pile fabrics, $1.50 per pound; plushes, $1 per pound; but in no case shall the foregoing articles pay a less rate of duty than 50 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to pass over for the present paragraphs 338 and 467, relating to diamonds and precious stones, until two or three other paragraphs can be disposed of, when we can return to those.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask the Senate to consider now paragraph 455, on page 94.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paragraph will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

455. Copperas, or sulphate of iron.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. This paragraph was passed over at the request, I think, of the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who proposed to offer an amendment putting it on the taxable list. Of course his right to offer the amendment will be reserved to him in the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator from Vermont would be content if the clause should be stricken from the free list.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I presume he would.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the paragraph will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I now ask that paragraph 568 be considered.

Mr. PLATT. Has not that paragraph heretofore been arranged down to the proviso, beginning in line 11, on page 107?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The paragraph was passed, but I want to move an amendment, to strike out the comma before the word "grease," in line 1, on page 107, so as to read "enfleurage grease."

Mr. PLATT. I thought that had been done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That has been done, the Chair is informed.

Mr. PLATT. I think the paragraph has been perfected down to the proviso.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move what I send to the desk as a substitute for the proviso.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the proviso at the end of the paragraph and insert:

Provided, That if there be imported into the United States crude petroleum, or the product of crude petroleum, produced in any country which imposes a duty on petroleum or its products exported from the United States, there shall be levied, paid, and collected upon such crude petroleum, or its products, so imported, 40 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Now, I ask that paragraph 622, which was passed over, may be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

622. Sodium, sulphate of soda, or salt cake, or niter cake.

Mr. ALLISON. Was that passed over?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Some Senator asked that that should be passed over. I do not remember who made the request; but it is marked as having been passed over.

Mr. ALLISON. I think I made the request that it might be passed over, in order that it might be stricken from the free list. I am told it is a manufactured product.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I see no reason why it should be stricken out, and I can not consent to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the paragraph will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Paragraphs 338 and 467, I suppose, may now be taken up together.

The Secretary read paragraph 338, as follows:

338. Precious stones of all kinds, cut but not set, 30 per cent ad valorem; if set, and not specially provided for in this act, including pearls set or strung, 35 per cent ad valorem. And on uncut precious stones of all kinds, 15 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend the paragraph in line 7, after the word "set," by striking out "thirty" and inserting "fifteen:" in line 10, after the word "strung," by striking out "thirty-five" and inserting "thirty;" in line 11, after the words "ad valorem," by inserting "imitations of precious stones composed of paste or glass, not exceeding an inch in dimensions, and not set, 10 per cent ad valorem;" and after the words "ad valorem," in line 13, by striking out "and on uncut precious stones of all kinds, 15 per cent ad valorem;" so as to make the paragraph read:

338. Precious stones of all kinds, cut but not set, 15 per cent ad valorem; if set, and not specially provided for in this act, including pearls set or strung, 30 per cent ad valorem; imitations of precious stones, composed of paste or glass, not exceeding an inch in dimensions, not set, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. TELLER. I gave notice that I should offer an amendment, to place a duty of 30 per cent on diamonds. That can be accomplished as well by voting down the amendment of the committee, where they have stricken out "thirty" and inserted "fifteen." I suppose, without my offering an amendment, the question will come up directly in that shape. I do not know whether the committee propose to adhere to their amendment or not.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Before taking that up, I ask unanimous consent, in paragraph 337, after the word "pearls," to insert "including pearls strung, but not set;" so as to read:

Pearls, including pearls strung, but not set, 10 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Returning to paragraph 338, in order to conform to the amendment just made in paragraph 337, I move, in line 10, to strike out the words "or strung," after the words "pearls set."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether the committee adheres to its amendment of 15 per cent on diamonds? If so, I desire to say a word or two on that subject.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. No, sir. I am instructed by the committee to consent to an increase in that paragraph, and also to agree to a tax on rough diamonds, which are now on the free list.

Mr. TELLER. Then I shall wait until the committee amendments are acted upon, and it may be that there will be no necessity for my offering an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know much about diamonds; I never had any myself; but why should rough, uncut diamonds have a duty imposed on them? Perhaps the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] can inform me. As I understand, they have been on the free list. I believe that diamonds are cut in this country, and I suppose they were put on the free list to encourage the cutting of diamonds here. I am asking purely for information.

Mr. TELLER. I will say that there are not a great many diamonds cut in this country. I have no doubt, if the committee would put a large duty upon cut diamonds and a reasonable duty upon uncut diamonds, the cutting of diamonds would increase; but up to this time diamonds have usually been cut abroad, and the tariff upon them has been nominal.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest that the tariff on cut precious stones of all kinds shall be 25 per cent, and on uncut of all kinds 10 per cent.

Mr. TELLER. If that is the wish of the committee I do not desire to offer any amendment, except I may possibly desire to offer an amendment to facilitate the collection of the revenue from diamonds.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7 it is proposed to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read:

Precious stones of all kinds, cut but not set, 25 per cent ad valorem; if set, and not specially provided for in this act, including pearls not set, 35 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. In line 10, before the words "per centum," it is proposed to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "thirty."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. In line 11, after the words "ad valorem" it is proposed to insert:

Imitations of precious stones, composed of paste or glass, not exceeding an inch in diameter, not set, 10 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw the committee amendment proposing to strike out "and of uncut precious stones of all kinds, 15 per cent ad valorem;" and I move to strike out "fifteen," before the words "per centum," and insert "ten."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask for information why the words "composed of paste or glass" are contained in that committee amendment?

Are there not many imitations of precious stones which are not composed of paste or glass which come under the same principle? There are certainly many imitation diamonds. There are cheap and worthless stones, which are fashioned into the fashion of diamonds, composed of inferior materials.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am willing to strike out the words "composed of paste or glass;" and I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to offer an amendment for the purpose of facilitating the collection of the revenue.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to perfect this amendment first?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator.

Mr. PLATT. I do not desire to make any observations about this matter to-night, when we are endeavoring to get through with the bill; but I doubt very much the propriety of putting a duty upon uncut precious stones. Perhaps when the bill comes into the Senate I shall have something to say on the subject.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask now to take up paragraph 467.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paragraph will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

467. Glaziers' and engravers' diamonds not set, and diamond dust or bort, and jewels to be used in the manufacture of watches or clocks.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to the paragraph in line 14, to strike out "glaziers'" and insert "diamonds and other precious stones, rough or uncut, incluning miners', glaziers';" so as to read:

Diamonds and other precious stones, rough or uncut, including miners', glaziers', and engravers' diamonds not set, and diamond dust or bort, and jewels to be used in the manufacture of watches or clocks.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this seems to be emphatically the "era of good feeling," and I ask the Senator from Arkansas whether he will now object to an amendment restoring lumber to the dutiable list? [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I regret to say that I shall be compelled to object to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. HALE. Of course I can not at this late hour raise this issue, but I give notice that in the Senate I shall again appeal to the Senator's good nature.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Perhaps the Senator might consent to an increase of the duty on wool.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to offer an amendment to the bill to follow paragraph 362.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add the following proviso:

Provided, That all surplus revenue derived by the Government under the provisions of this act shall be held as a sacred fund with which to pay the national indebtedness as rapidly as it matures.

So as to make the paragraph read:

362. Waste, not specially provided for in this act, 10 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That all surplus revenues derived by the Government under the provisions of this act shall be held as a sacred fund with which to pay the national indebtedness as rapidly as it matures.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. ALLEN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish to make an appeal to the Senator from New Hampshire. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment, as other amendments have been, be printed and lie over and come up in the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no objection to that course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire to call the attention of my colleague to an evident mistake made in the amendment. It was read by the Secretary as being a part of paragraph 362, which, of course, makes it nonsensical.

Mr. ALLEN. It ought to be a separate paragraph.

Mr. MANDERSON. It should come in as paragraph 362½.

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. MANDERSON. It was read by the Secretary as part of paragraph 362, which made it read:

Waste, not specially provided for in this act, 10 per cent ad valorem.

And then follows the amendment of my colleague.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is debate in order?

Mr. MANDERSON. It evidently should be a new paragraph.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is debate in order on the motion to lay the amendment on the table?

Mr. ALLISON. It is intended that it shall not be a part of the "waste." [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN. It is intended as a proviso to the entire bill, and of course in numbering it it should be numbered as a separate paragraph.

Mr. MANDERSON. Of course.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not notice how the Secretary read it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the request? I suppose I shall have to consent to it whether I know what it is or not, but I should like to know what the request is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair asks the Senator from Arkansas to again state his request.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I asked the Senator to withdraw the motion to lay the amendment on the table, and that there be unanimous consent that the amendment be printed and lie over and be considered in the Senate as other amendments have been.

Mr. CHANDLER. Without debate this evening?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Without debate this evening.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object, but unanimous consent is not necessary. If the Senator from New Hampshire will withdraw his motion and the Senator from Nebraska will consent, that covers the case; it is unnecessary to have unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is immaterial to me how you arrive at it.

Mr. ALLISON. I merely make the suggestion because other Senators may wish to offer amendments and the same course may be proposed.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest that unless the Senator from New Hampshire consents we can not adopt that course.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understood the Senator to consent to it.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the point of the Senator from Iowa is correct and my withdrawal is not necessary, then I will not withdraw the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ALLISON. I regret that the Senator from New Hampshire misunderstood my statement. It was that if the Senator from New Hampshire will kindly withdraw his motion to lay the amendment on the table, and if the Senator from Nebraska is willing to offer the amendment in the Senate, it can be done without unanimous consent.

Mr. MANDERSON. That is correct.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire understands my meaning now.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is a clearness and force about the Senator's present statement which I can not resist. Therefore I withdraw the motion to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. ALLEN. I am perfectly willing that the amendment shall be printed and go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to call the attention of the committee once more, with the hope of having their assent, to what is a very small matter compared with almost everything in the bill, but it is an important matter to a few very worthy persons indeed, meritorious and hard-working men. I wish the committee would be willing to consent to amend paragraph 69, on page 11, where it says "sponges 10 per cent ad valorem," by inserting after the word "sponges" the words "sea moss or Iceland moss."

I shall not detain the Senate or the committee except to assure the gentlemen that what I say may be absolutely depended upon. It is a little industry, mainly prosecuted near Cohasset, Mass. It is a very dangerous industry indeed, prosecuted by men who go out in boats in all kinds of weather on the rocky Alantic-beaten shore to gather this moss. It is precisely the same thing as the gathering of sponges in the way it is done. The sponges are used for cleanliness, and the moss is used as a food for persons who are sick or in feeble health, or as a luxury. There is something in the luxurious living that is coming from the increase of wealth which creates these industries. They induce men to be familiar with boats and the sea and are like the fisheries in that respect.

The men become expert boatmen. They become absolutely indifferent to sea dangers, and they are at home when they are afloat on the water. They are enterprising and hardy, making the most valuable possible seamen in case of war. I suppose that half the men engaged in this industry, if we had a maritime war, would enlist, and they would not have to be trained.

I have not been able to think, since the matter came up before, of any distinction in principle why the small duty of 10 per cent ad valorem should not be put upon moss when such a duty is imposed upon sponges.

I understood when the matter was before the Senate on a previous occasion that the Senators having the bill in charge did not absolutely commit themselves against it, but only opposed it because they had not full information. It is a matter which has been left in my hands by my colleague, and I appeal to the Senate, in this era of good nature, to allow the amendment to be made, so that moss will get a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HARRIS. In view of the appeal of the Senator from Massachusetts, to which the Senate owes as little as to any other appeal, I hope the Senator from Arkansas will accede to his request.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I can not resist the combined appeal of the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Tennessee. Let the amendment be agreed to. I ask that the bill be reported to the Senate and that it be printed.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment as to sea moss be considered as agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 69, page 11, after the word "sponges," in line 22, insert "sea moss or Iceland moss."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let the bill be reported to the Senate, and then I should like to have an order to have the bill printed.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will withhold for a moment. A week or possibly ten days ago all kinds of fence wire was stricken from the taxable list. I have waited up to this time to see whether the committee intend to report to place fence wire upon the free list. I have heard nothing from the committee upon the subject, and I rise to ask them why that amendment is not proposed.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. When I asked the Senate to consider the paragraphs which had been passed over, I stated to the Senate that there were a number of amendments which were immaterial in themselves, about which there could be no division, and I asked unanimous consent that the amendments might be considered by the Senate now. That amendment would not be in order regularly and fairly——

Mr. ALLEN. Is the fence wire amendment among the number?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That amendment I hold in my hand in connection with other amendments which I propose to present in the Senate. It is not proper to present them as in Committee of the Whole; it would have been a violation of what I asked of the Senate to have presented an important amendment for the consideration of the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. I move that the bill be reported to the Senate.

Mr. HILL. I trust the Senator from Arkansas will allow me to make a motion and dispose of it now while I have it in mind.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. I move to add at the end of section 59 what I will read:

All State, county, municipal, and town taxes and all necessary sums of insurance paid by corporations, companies, or associations shall be excluded or deducted in estimating the net profits or income of such corporations, companies, or associations.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator will allow the amendment to go over and be printed, it will be considered in the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. We can dispose of it now.

Mr. HILL. It is a matter we discussed the other day, the question of allowing corporations to deduct their taxes. That has not been provided for. Then it was suggested by some one that the insurance had not been provided for. So I add that. I can not see the slightest objection to taking it up now.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the amendment be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. HILL. Let it go over.

Mr. HARRIS. No; let it be reported and acted upon.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The mover of the amendment proposes that it be printed and go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection it will be so ordered. The question is on agreeing to motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. MANDERSON. I suggest that that motion is not necessary, and it would be establishing a new and dangerous precedent.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. So the bill is reported to the Senate I do not care what course is adopted.

Mr. MANDERSON. It needs no motion. When there is no further amendment to be made to a bill as in Committee of the Whole it is reported to the Senate as a matter of course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is as in Committee of the Whole. If there be no further amendment proposed it will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. Is the amendment of the Senator from New York to be offered as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HILL. It has been offered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARRIS. Then let it be disposed of as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from New York has agreed to let it go over until the bill gets into the Senate. We want to examine it.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to letting it go over if other Senators prefer it.

Mr. HILL. Let it go over.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understand that is agreed to unanimously.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the Senator from New York merely gives notice of the amendment, and does not offer it at the present time?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is the case.

Mr. HILL. It would have that effect.

Mr. MANDERSON. Let the bill be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move that the bill with the amendments which have been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole be printed.

Mr. MANDERSON. I suggest that the amendments adopted as in Committee of the Whole should be printed in italics.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course they will appear as amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Arkansas to couple with his motion that the consideration of the bill be postponed until Monday at half past 10 o'clock.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I will agree to that.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit the motion of the Senator from Arkansas if desired, but it will be so ordered without objection.

Mr. HARRIS. The motion of the Senator from Arkansas is that the bill shall be printed with the amendments. Now, as to the adjournment, as I understood the Senator from Iowa to suggest——

Mr. ALLISON. I made no request respecting adjournment, but it is well known that there are a great number of amendments to the bill, and to print it carefully will certainly require until some time during the day to-morrow. Then Senators will desire to make such preparation and examination of the amendments as will facilitate their adoption or rejection in the Senate. So my suggestion was that the bill be printed and its consideration be postponed until Monday at half past 10. That is the usual hour when the bill is taken up.

Mr. HARRIS. That is what I understood to be the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa. I wish to say to him that the bill as amended will be on the desk of every Senator to-morrow morning printed.

Mr. PLATT. I doubt that.

Mr. HARRIS. After three months of consideration I should be glad to have to-morrow as a day of rest. But the country is waiting with anxiety to know what we are going to do with this measure. I shall not consent that the bill shall go over a single day or a single hour while it is pending.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the suggestion I made.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next at 10 o'clock.

Mr. HARRIS. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOAR. Has the order to print the bill been made?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order has been made.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have included in the order a direction to the Secretary of the Senate to send a copy of the bill to each Senator. Of course, if the Senate is in session to-morrow the bill will be laid on our tables in the ordinary way, but if the Senate is not in session I ask for that order, so that Senators may have copies of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nebraska, that when the Senate adjourn it be to meet on Monday next at 10 o'clock.

Mr. HARRIS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. My pair has been transferred to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], whom I do not see in his seat. I therefore withold my vote.

Mr. GORMAN. I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. CALL. I announce my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CAREY (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to ask whether the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. CAREY. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HARRIS (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who is necessarily called from the sessions of the Senate. I should vote "nay" on this motion as I have done, but I must withdraw my vote.

Mr. CULLOM. By arrangement I paired the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and voted, which gives the Senator from Tennessee the right to vote.

Mr. HARRIS. I vote "nay." Let the vote of the Senator from Illinois stand.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 32; as follows.

YEAS—25.

Allen,	Hale,	Mills,	Shoup,
Allison,	Hawley,	Mitchell, Oregon	Squire,
Chandler,	Higgins,	Morgan,	Stewart,

So the motion was not agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. There is some executive business which it is absolutely necessary to have attended to at once.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. PEFFER was, on his own request, excused from attendance at the sessions of the Senate from the 2d to the 5th of July, inclusive.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.), the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being until Monday, July 2, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 29, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

IN MEMORY OF PRESIDENT CARNOT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following letter, which was read:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 28, 1894.

SIR: At the instance of the French ambassador, I have the honor to advise you, for the information of the House of Representatives, that a religious service in memory of the late President of the French Republic will be held at St. Matthew's Church, corner of Fifteenth and H streets, on Sunday next, the 1st proximo, at 12 o'clock m.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant.

W. Q. GRESHAM.

The honorable CHARLES F. CRISP,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

DENNIS MURPHY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 1963) for the relief of the sureties of Dennis Murphy.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill. It has already passed the Senate, and the same bill has been favorably reported to the House by the Committee on Claims.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sureties of Dennis Murphy, who was formerly paymaster and military storekeeper at the National Armory at Harpers Ferry, Va., upon his official bond to the United States as such paymaster and military storekeeper, executed on the 28th day of April, 1858, be, and the same are hereby relieved and released from any and all liabilities by reason of such suretyship.

Mr. DOCKERY. I trust the gentleman from Texas will explain this bill and state the amount covered by it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Murphy was appointed paymaster and storekeeper of the National Armory, then located at Harpers Ferry, Va., in 1858. On the 28th of April, 1858, he executed his bond, with Allen C. Hammond, George Siebert, William Megary, and Charles J. Faulkner as sureties for the faithful performance of his duties.

From the time he qualified to the quarter ending on the 31st day of December, 1860, his accounts were kept as accurately and rendered as promptly as those of any other person in the employ of the Government, This fact is set forth in the report. For the quarter ending with the 31st day of March, 1861, his accounts were properly made out, as appears from the statement of his clerk, to be transmitted to Washington. They were not so transmitted, for the reason that Mr. Barbour, the superintendent of the arsenal, whose signature was necessary, was absent attending the Virginia convention.

Before Mr. Barbour s return Virginia had passed an ordinance of secession and Harpers Ferry was occupied by a force of Confederate troops. During that occupancy they took possession of the official residence of Mr. Murphy, and just before the evacuation of Harpers Ferry a subordinate officer, contrary to the instructions of Gen. Johnston, opened the vault which contained the papers and vouchers of Mr. Murphy, and these were scattered all over the room and indeed all about the village of Harpers Ferry. Immediately after the evacuation by the Confederates the Federal soldiers took possession of the place, and between the evacuation by the one army and the occupancy of the other the papers were destroyed, except a single pay roll for February, 1861, which was picked up on the streets and sent to the Ordnance Department here.

The Department failed or refused to settle with Mr. Murphy because of the fact that his vouchers had not been filed and could not be for the reason that they had been destroyed. When Mr. Murphy was dismissed in July, 1861, there stood against him a debit of $57,518.52, but the monthly statements that had been rendered, and properly rendered, for January, February, and March reduced that to $10,153.06. That balance was divided, a part of it being in the hands of the assistant treasurer in New York, amounting to $8,272.38, and the rest of it in the Government depository at Baltimore, $1,879.68, making the total of $10,153.06, as stated.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the facts in connection with this case. This bill has been reported favorably by the committees of the Senate and the House. Indeed, it was passed by the Senate on one occasion, and only failed to become a law by reason of the fact that it did not reach the House in time to be acted upon. Its passage has been recommended by the Department. In my own judgment it is reasonably certain that Dr. Murphy does not owe the Government anything at this time.

The purpose of the bill, as its title decrees, is to relieve his sureties, or rather to relieve their estates, for all of them are dead, some having died insolvent.

It may be proper for me to state that the immediate purpose of this bill is to enable a settlement of the estate of the late Charles J. Faulkner, father of the present Senator from West Virginia, and no settlement of the estate can be effected as long as this claim stands upon the books of the Treasury Department.

Mr. COX. Was Mr. Faulkner one of the sureties?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I was unwilling to consent to the passage of this bill when its consideration was first requested, but I have had occasion since to examine the report accompanying it, and especially the communication from William A. Day, the Second Auditor of the Treasury, from which it appears, as this officer says, that:

On final settlement a balance of $57,518.82 was declared to be due from said Murphy and still stands against him on the books of this office, though there is reason to believe that if his accounts had been promptly rendered it would have been found that he had expended nearly all the public money for which he is held accountable in defraying the current expenses of the armory.

And further on he says:

Assuming that it was impossible to force a settlement with Murphy or his sureties during the war, the following facts remain:

1. Although eight years elapsed between the close of the war and Murphy's death, no attempt was made to obtain a settlement with him. He was not even notified of the condition of his accounts.

2. The sureties were not notified that their principal was in default until more than seventeen years after the date of the bond and more than ten years after the close of the war—he, in the meantime, having died insolvent. Altogether, more than twenty-five years have been suffered to pass since the principal became in default without decisive action on the part of the Government.

Again this officer says:

In view of these facts I am of opinion that the sureties on the official bond of Dennis Murphy may justly be released from all liability by reason of such suretyship.

As I have already said, I had occasion to examine the report, and it seems to me an equitable bill and one that ought to pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. BAILEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 196) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government; when the Speaker signed the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolutions and a bill of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 193) to appoint three members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Joint resolution (H. Res. 196) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.

A bill (H. R. 7449) authorizing the Minneapolis Gas Light Company, of Minneapolis, Minn., to lay submerged gas pipes across the Mississippi River at Minneapolis.

GRANT OF CERTAIN LANDS TO NORTH DAKOTA.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 171) granting to the State of North Dakota certain lands heretofore set apart as a wood reservation for Fort Totten military reservation, for the use of the militia of North Dakota, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent to consider a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to set apart all that part of the wooded reservations set apart for the use and benefit of Fort Totten military reservation by Executive order dated February 10, 1881, described as follows, namely: "That portion of the tract known as Rock Island, bounded on the north by an east and west line, 2 miles back or north of the southeasternmost point of said island or peninsula;" said tract being the southernmost point of the peninsu laon the north side of Devils Lake in North Dakota, known as Rock Island, for the use of the State of North Dakota, to be used as a park for the use of the militia of said State, and for other public purposes not inconsistent with such use.

SEC. 2. That the lands so set apart are hereby granted to the State of North Dakota: Provided, That if the said State shall at any time permit the said lands hereby granted to be used for any purpose not contemplated in this act the said lands shall revert to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will ask the gentleman if this bill is favorably reported by a committee of the House?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Yes; it is unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands. It has twice passed the Senate. It only involves 800 acres of an abandoned military reservation, and the purpose is to use it for the militia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

P. W. MITCHELL AND OTHERS.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CRAWFORD] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

(A bill (H. R. 6656) for the relief of P. W. Mitchell, M. C. Felmet, T. C. Bowen, and others.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury belonging to the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, to the following persons, to wit: P. W. Mitchell, $129; M. C. Felmet, $150; T. C. Bowen, $77; David Blythe, $30; Jesse Reed, $7; William Locust, $17, and George French, $5.

The Committee on Indian Affairs recommended the following amendment:

Insert in line 8, after the word "dollars," the words "and 50 cents."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I should like to have the report read, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the report will be read.

The report (by Mr. BOWER of North Carolina) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred House bill 6656, report the same with recommendation that the same as amended do pass.

The bill provides for the payment out of funds in United States Treasury to the credit of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians certain sums to P. W. Mitchell, M. C. Felmet, T. C. Bowen, David Blythe, Jesse Reed, William Locust, and George French, the total of said sums being $415.

It appears that, by order of the Secretary of the Interior, P. W. Mitchell and M. C. Felmet, timber experts, made an extensive and minute examination and estimate of the kind and quality of timber upon the lands belonging to said Cherokee Indians. This estimate was made for the purpose and with the view of selling said timber under the direction and supervision of the General Government for the benefit of these Indians.

These experts rendered their accounts for their services which were acceptable to the Indians and duly indorsed by them at one of their councils. The sums due to each on this account are designated in bill. The sums allowed to David Blythe, Jesse Reed, William Locust, and George French, are for services as axmen in attendance upon and assisting said experts. T. C. Bowen is allowed the sum of $77 for services as surveyor in locating and defining the lands of these Indians. In Jackson and Swain Counties, N. C., survey was deemed necessary in order to ascertain what quantity of land was properly assessable for taxation.

This survey was made in the year 1892 by the sanction of T. J. Morgan, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and Acting Secretary of the Interior, Hon. George Chandler. Estimates of the costs of survey were submitted in due form. The sum admitted to be due the surveyor, T. C. Bowen, is $77.50.

The committee recommend that bill be amended by inserting after the word "dollars" and before the name "David Blythe," in line 8, the words "and fifty cents," and as thus amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CRAWFORD].

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the words "T. C. Bowen," in lines 7 and 8, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "George H. Smathers."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I will say that George H. Smathers is special assistant district attorney for the Government, and has been looking after the interests of these Indians, and he advanced to the surveyor the amount due him. I will ask to have read the affidavit of Mr. Bowen, making assignment to Mr. Smathers, for the purpose of having this money paid to him.

Mr. DOCKERY. How much is the amount involved in this amendment?

Mr. CRAWFORD. About $77. I ask to have read the document which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, in account with T. C. Bowen, of Waynesville, N. C., Dr.

To six and a half days, services rendered in computing the number of acres of land from Temple field notes within Cathcart tract of Qualla boundary of land in Jackson Country, N. C., at $5 per day, $32.50.

The services were rendered one-half day March 31, 1892, and April 1, 2, 4, 6, and 7, 1892.

Computations made by latitude and departures.

Respectfully submitted.

T. C. BOWEN.

Received of George H. Smathers $32.50, in full payment of the above account.

T. C. BOWEN.

STATE OF OHIO, Marion County:

I, John A. Wolford, a notary public for the county and State aforesaid, hereby certify that T. C. Bowen this day personally appeared before me and acknowledged the due execution of the assignment to George H. Smathers of the foregoing account in the sum of $32.50, and the said T. C. Bowen stated that the time charged in the foregoing account is correct, and that his services were well worth the sum charged, and that he has long since received full pay for the same from the said George H. Smathers.

JOHN A. WOLFORD.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 20th day of September, A. D. 1893.

[SEAL.] JOHN A. WOLFORD,
Notary Public, Marion County, Ohio.

Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, in account with T. C. Bowen, of Waynesville, N. C., Dr.

To nine days' services rendered in computing the number of acres of land from Temple field notes inside of Qualla boundary of land in Swain County,

N. C., and for other services said Indians, as per report report made to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs September 19, 1892, at $5 per day, $45.
Respectfully submitted.

T. C. BOWEN.

Received of George H. Smathers $45 in full payment of the above account.
T. C. BOWEN.

STATE OF OHIO, Marion County:

I, John A. Wolford, a notary public for the county and State aforesaid, hereby certify that T. C. Bowen this day personally appeared before me and acknowledged the due execution of the assignment to George H. Smathers of the foregoing account in the sum of $45, and the said T. C. Bowen states that the time charged in the foregoing account is correct, and that his services were well worth the sum charged, and that he has long since received full pay for the same from the said George H. Smathers.

JOHN A. WOLFORD.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 20th day of September, A. D. 1893.
[SEAL.] JOHN A. WOLFORD,
Notary Public, Marion County, Ohio.

The amendment offered by Mr. CRAWFORD was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended to conform to the amendment to the text of the bill.

On motion of Mr. CRAWFORD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MILITARY ROAD FROM EL PASO TO FORT BLISS, TEX.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7419) for the construction of a military road from the city of El Paso to Fort Bliss, Tex.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when the military reservation known as "Old Fort Bliss" shall have been sold by virtue of an act approved March 1, 1890, so much of the receipts therefrom as may be necessary, not to exceed $4,000, are hereby appropriated to the construction of a military road between the city of El Paso, Tex., and New Fort Bliss, Tex., said money to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report will be read.

The report (by Mr. GORMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6920) "for the construction of a military road," having had the same under consideration, recommend the following substitute:

"A bill for the construction of a military road from the city of El Paso to Fort Bliss, Tex.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That when the military reservation known as "Old Fort Bliss" shall have been sold, by virtue of an act approved March 1, 1890, so much of the receipts therefrom as may be necessary, not to exceed $4,000, are hereby appropriated to the construction of a military road between the city of El Paso, Tex., and New Fort Bliss, Tex., said money to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War."

And when substituted for said bill (H. R. 6920) recommend its passage.

The following approval of the War Department is herewith made a part of this report:

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 15, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith letter of the Hon. J. V. COCKRELL, M. C., inclosing, with request for favorable consideration, H. R. 6920, a bill providing that when the military reservation known as Old Fort Bliss shall have been sold, the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of the proceeds of said sale, be appropriated to build a military road between the city of El Paso, Tex., and New Fort Bliss; and to report that from a recent appraisement by a board the value of the land at Old Fort Bliss, with the buildings and improvements thereon, is placed at $15,412. The public sale thereof was advertised to take place March 5, 1894, but at the request of the Texas delegation it has been suspended, pending action on H. R. 5690, and the property is now in charge of a quartermaster's agent.

It is recommended that in line 5, after the word "ninety," strike out "four thousand" and insert "so much of;" in line 6 strike out "dollars or so much thereof" and insert "the receipts therefrom;" in same line, after "necessary," strike out "is" and insert "are;" in line 7, after the word "appropriated," strike out "out of the proceeds of said sale" and insert, after the word "the," "construction of a."

With these changes the bill will read, as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., * * * That when the military reservation known as "Old Fort Bliss" shall have been sold, by virtue of an act approved March 1, 1890, so much of the receipts therefrom as may be necessary are hereby appropriated to the construction of a military road between the city of El Paso, Tex., and New Fort Bliss, Tex., said money to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War."

With these amendments no objection is known to the passage of the bill.

Very respectfully,

R. N. BATCHELDER,
Quartermaster-General, United States Army.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the consideration of this bill?

Mr. BUNN. Mr. Speaker, until I can examine that bill and see why a bill of similar import introduced by me has been adversely reported, I shall have to object.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If the gentleman will listen for a moment I will give him an explanation as to this bill. I do not know anything about his bill.

Mr. BUNN. I wish to know why my bill was adversely reported.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I can explain this bill.

Mr. BUNN. I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the consideration of the bill.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 1954) to amend section 1379, chapter 1, Title XV, Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to appointments of assistant paymasters in the Navy;

A bill (S. 2000) granting the Brainerd and Northern Minnesota Railway Company a right of way through the Leech Lake Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota; and

A bill (S. 2135) to provide that a term of the circuit and district court of the United States for the district of Vermont may be held at Montpelier.

WIDOW OF JAMES R. FISHER.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland, from the Committee on Accounts, presents a privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to the widow of James R. Fisher, deceased, late assistant librarian of the House of Representatives, under the Clerk, a sum equal to his salary for one year, and that the Clerk be further directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House the expenses of the late illness and funeral of said James R. Fisher, said expenses not to exceed the sum of $500.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. RUSK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the following resolution relative to paying the widow of James R. Fisher, deceased, late assistant librarian of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to one year's salary and funeral expenses have had the same under consideration and beg to offer the following substitute in lieu thereof, and recommend the passage of the same:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to the widow of James R. Fisher, deceased, late assistant librarian of the House of Representatives, under the Clerk, a sum equal to his salary for six months, and that the Clerk be further directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House the expenses of the late illness and funeral of said James R. Fisher, said expenses not to exceed the sum of $250.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. Speaker, the amendment proposed by the Committee on Accounts puts this resolution on a footing with the practice of the House in such cases. It has been customary for many years to allow six months' salary and funeral expenses to the families or representatives of deceased employés. The resolution as introduced called for a year's salary and $500 for funeral expenses. The amendment cuts it down in accordance with the precedent. Mr. Fisher was the assistant librarian of the House, and had previously occupied other positions, at one time being the assistant postmaster. I ask that the resolution be put on its passage.

The substitute recommended by the committee was agreed to, and the original resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. RUSK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, was laid on the table.

WIDOW OF HARRY W. COCKERILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland submits another report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House, to the widow of Harry W. Cockerill, deceased, late an employé of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months of the salary being paid to said Cockerill at the time of his death, and the Clerk be further directed to pay out of the contingent fund to the said widow of Harry W. Cockerill the expenses attending the last illness and funeral of the deceased, said expenses not to exceed in amount the sum of $250.

The report (by Mr. RUSK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the accompanying resolution, offered by Mr. HEARD, relative to the payment of six months' salary and funeral expenses to the widow of Harry W. Cockerill, deceased, late an employé of the House of Representatives, beg to report that after due investigation, they respectfully recommend the passage of the same.

Mr. RUSK. I ask for the passage of the resolution.

Mr. DOCKERY. What amount is covered by that resolution?

Mr. RUSK. Six months' salary and $250 for funeral expenses.

Mr. COX. How much does that amount to?

Mr. RUSK. It amounts in all to about $900.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Is there any question whether this conforms to the practice?

Mr. RUSK. It has been the practice of this House for about thirty years at least to pass such resolutions.

Mr. WISE. I would state to the gentleman that I have all the precedents here; and it has been done in this present House.

Mr. RUSK. I will state that the present House of Representatives is just repeating the practice of previous Houses. At the beginning of this session we passed a resolution of this kind in favor of the widow of the Chaplain without even referring it to the Committee on Accounts, and there have been one or two accounts since then. This is in strict accordance with the precedents established by this and other Houses.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RUSK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

WIDOW OF EDWARD J. M'CRISTAL.

Mr. RUSK. I present another report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House, to Mrs. Ella C. McCristal, widow of Edward J. McCristal, deceased, late an employé of the House, a sum equal to six months of the salary being paid to said Edward J. McCristal at the time of his death, and the Clerk be further directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to said Mrs. Ella C. McCristal, the sum of $250 to cover the expenses of the last illness and funeral of the deceased.

The report (by Mr. RUSK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the accompanying resolution, offered by Mr. BOWERS, relative to the payment of six months' salary and funeral expenses to Mrs. Ella C. McCristal, widow of Edward J. McCristal, deceased, late an employé of the House of Representatives, beg to report that, after due investigation, they respectfully recommend the passage of the same.

The question was taken on the passage of the resolution, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 77, noes 11.

So the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RUSK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

WIDOW OF JAMES P. HICKMAN.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on Accounts, also reported back the following resolution:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 28, 1894.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana submitted the following, which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to the widow of James P. Hickman, deceased, late an employé of the House, a sum equal to six months of the salary being paid said Hickman at the time of his death; and that the Clerk be further directed to pay said widow a sum not exceeding $350 to cover the expenses of the late illness and funeral of James P. Hickman, deceased.

The report of the committee, which was read, states that after due investigation the committee respectfully recommends the passage of the resolution.

Mr. LANE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is a privileged report.

Mr. RUSK. I ask the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. COOMBS. I wish to inquire whether it has been the custom to allow, in the case of deceased committee clerks, six months' salary just the same as to regular annual employés of the House.

Mr. RUSK. There has never been any distinction made in the case of clerks, as to whether they were annual employés or committee clerks. This resolution is in accordance with precedent.

Mr. COOMBS. Was this employé a session clerk or an annual clerk?

Mr. RUSK. He was an annual clerk—clerk to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. COOMBS. Of course I do not wish to make any objection in a matter of this kind.

Mr. DOCKERY. Was this man an employé of this Congress?

Mr. RUSK. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. I want to say in reference to these resolutions that I shall vote against them, and without criticism of the committee; but I think the committee is following a vicious precedent in submitting these reports.

The question being taken; there were on a division (called for by Mr. HOLMAN)—ayes 95, noes 25.

So the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RUSK a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FAMILY OF THOMAS M'KAIG.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on Accounts, also reported back the following resolution:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 19, 1893.

Mr. DUNPHY submitted the following, which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to the widow of Thomas McKaig, deceased, late a fireman under the engineer of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to his salary for six months; and that the Clerk be further directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House the expenses of the last illness and funeral expenses of said Thomas McKaig, said expenses not to exceed the sum of $250.

The report of the committee, which was read, states that after due investigation the committee recommends the passage of the resolution with an amendment striking out, in line 4, the word "widow" and inserting the word "children."

Mr. RUSK. The amendment reported by the committee is made necessary in consequence of the fact that since the decease of this employé his widow has also died, leaving two or three small children. The amendment has been adopted so that they may get the benefit of this allowance.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

On motion of Mr. RUSK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SARAH E. EVANS.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on Accounts, also reported back the following resolution:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 8, 1894.

Mr. WILLIAM J. STONE submitted the following, which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to Sarah E. Evans, sister of Linton S. Carey, deceased, late an employé of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months' salary, as a laborer in the cloakroom of the House of Representatives; and that the Clerk be further directed to pay out of the contingent fund the expenses of the last illness and funeral of said Linton S. Carey, such expenses not to exceed $250.

The report of the committee, which was read, recommended as a substitute for the resolution referred, the following:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House the expenses of the last illness and funeral of Linton S. Carey, late an employé of the House of Representatives, such expenses not to exceed $250.

Mr. RUSK. I will explain this matter.

Mr. BRETZ. I wish to ask the gentleman from Maryland why it is proposed to make this allowance to the sister of this deceased employé? Where are these precedents going to lead to?

Mr. RUSK. If the gentleman had listened to the reading of the report he would have observed that we have recommended a substitute. We found upon inquiry that this man has left no dependent relatives, but that his sister paid his funeral expenses; and the resolution which we report as a substitute proposes only reimbursement for the expense thus incurred by the sister.

Mr. BRETZ. Then there is no allowance for salary?

Mr. RUSK. There was such an allowance in the original resolution, but we have struck it out.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. How many Congresses do these resolutions cover?

Mr. RUSK. All the resolutions which have been submitted refer to employés of the present Congress. The committee during the present session has made no report upon cases of this kind. The only action of this sort taken during the present Congress was in a case in the early part of the session, where the House acted without referring the subject to the committee.

The SPEAKER. The question will be taken on the resolution reported by the committee in lieu of the original resolution.

The substitute resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. RUSK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MRS. ANNIE B. WHITE.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on Accounts, reported also the following resolution:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, October 10, 1893.

Mr. HINGHAM submitted the following, which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to Mrs. Annie B. White, wife of Alexander H. White, deceased, late an employé in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to his salary for six months; and that the Clerk be further directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House for the expenses of the last illness and funeral of said Alexander H. White, such expenses not to exceed $250.

The report of the committee, which was read, states that, after due investigation, the committee respectfully recommend the passage of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. RUSK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

JOHN W. MAUNEY.

Mr. RUSK. I ask the Clerk to read the remaining resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to the widow of John W. Mauney, deceased, late clerk of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months of the salary being paid to said Mauney at the time of his death; and that the Clerk be further directed to pay to the widow of said Mauney the expenses of the last illness and funeral of the deceased, said expenses not to exceed the sum of $250.

Mr. RUSK. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. RUSK) was read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the foregoing resolution, offered by Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina, beg to report that after due investigation they respectfully recommend the passage of the same.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RUSK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid upon the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence for ten days was granted to Mr. WILSON of Washington, on account of sickness; and to Mr. HUTCHESON, for this day, on account of sickness in his family.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT 1894.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a report from the Committee on Printing to print the Agricultural Report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 198) to print Agricultural Report for 1894.

Resolved, etc., That the Annual Report of the Secretary of Agriculture for the year 1894 be printed. Said report shall hereafter be submitted and printed in two parts, as follows: Part one, which shall contain purely business and executive matter which it is necessary for the Secretary to submit to the President and Congress; part two, which shall contain such reports from the different Bureaus and divisions, and such papers prepared by their special agents, accompanied by suitable illustrations as shall, in the opinion of the Secretary, be specially suited to interest and instruct the farmers of the country, and to include a general report of the operations of the Department for their information. There shall be printed of part one, 1,000 copies for the Senate, 2,000 copies for the House, and 3,000 copies for the Department of Agriculture; and of part two, 110,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 360,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 30,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture, the illustrations for the same to be executed under the supervision of the Public Printer, in accordance with directions of the Joint Committee on Printing, said illustrations to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee as to the necessity for dividing the report into two volumes. Does it not necessarily increase the expenditure?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask the reading of the report first, and will then furnish such additional information as may be required.

The report was read as follows:

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following report:

The Committee have considered House Joint Resolution 198 to print Agricultural Report for 1894, and direct me to report same with the recommendation that it do pass. The committee are of the opinion that it is wise to print said report in two parts, as provided in the resolution, with contents divided as suggested. The proposed change has been submitted to the Department of Agriculture, and has the approval of the Secretary, as shown by the letter from him herewith submitted.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I now ask that the letter from the Secretary of Agriculture be read, and it will in part answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., June 21, 1894.

SIR: I believe that the annual report of the Department of Agriculture, distributed to the farmers of the country in such large numbers, could be greatly improved by publishing it in two separate parts, as follows:

Part 1 to contain purely business and executive matter, which it is necessary for the Secretary to submit to the President and Congress.

Part 2 to include such carefully prepared and selected matter, with proper illustrations, as will especially interest and benefit the farmers of the country, excluding everything that belongs to Part I and including a general report on the work of the Department, written with special reference to the needs of the farming public.

The advantages of such a division of the report are so apparent that no argument is needed to support them. The plan will give this Department the opportunity to prepare a report which will interest and benefit the farming classes more than anything which has hitherto been issued from it.

If this division is to be made, it will be necessary that this Department be notified so that it can give early instructions to the chiefs of Bureaus and divisions, who will soon begin the preparation of the annual report to be submitted on the 1st of December. I would respectfully suggest, therefore, the incorporation of some provision like that inclosed in the printing bill now under consideration by your committee.

Respectfully, yours,

J. STERLING MORTON, Secretary.

HON. JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Chairman Committee on Printing,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, I will make a statement which I think will be satisfactory in connection with this matter.

The resolution provides that the report shall hereafter be printed in two parts the object being, as shown by this letter, to separate so much of the report as would be of interest and benefit to the farmers and agriculturists of the country from that which is purely formal and business, and necessary only to the business of the Department—purely executive matters, necessary for the President and Congress. Much of the matter now published in these reports is of no practical interest or benefit to the farmer or to the agricultural community generally.

Now, it is thought by dividing it in this way that we can eliminate possibly one-third of the matter that goes into the report. As it now is we print 500,000 copies of this official information and executive matters purely, with which the farmers have no concern. We circulate 500,000 copies of this uninteresting matter as well as that which is of interest to them. We now provide that under the law the Secretary shall separate the report and only print 3,000 copies of this first part, that will be of use to the members and to the Executive Departments, the same as we now have printed of the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury and some other Executive Departments; but when you come to print the interesting matter, such as the reports of these Bureaus, containing information for the people, obtained by the Department of Agriculture, and that will be of consequence to the farmer, the resolution provides for printing a half million copies as usual.

Mr. PICKLER. Just as many as we had last year?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Just the same.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Giving the same number to each member and saving about half the expense.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have an amendment in my hand relating to the distribution of a number of these reports after they come to us, among the members. I wanted to read it to the gentleman from Tennessee and ask if he would be willing to accept it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman to allow the amendment to be read for information.

Mr. HEPBURN. My amendment is to insert at the proper place this proviso:

And that the whole number of part 2 that shall be printed for the use of the House of Representatives, shall be distributed to members of this House in proportion to the number of persons engaged in agriculture, horticulture, or stock-raising in their respective districts.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Personally I would not object to that amendment, but I hardly think it would be practicable. I do not see how the distribution could be made by the Doorkeeper in any such way. He has no such statistics as are called for in that amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. If you will permit me to suggest, he can easily get that information. The census gives it. There are a great number of members of this House who place no value whatever upon this particular document, while in other districts it is the most valuable of all Government publications. In the district in which I live there are more than 18,000 voters who are engaged in agriculture. There are districts that I could name where not a single voter is engaged in agriculture.

Why would it not be better to distribute these publications where they would be most useful, and could be best applied? We have the power to control the matter here. If my suggestion is not adopted, then the number ought to be very largely increased. The number that would come to me, under the resolution as reported by the gentleman; would not be one-tenth the number that ought to be distributed in my district.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It will be the same number you are now getting, nearly 1,000 copies.

Mr. HEPBURN. But the number I now get is simply an aggravation.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. And there are districts in New York, Philadelphia, and other large cities, where there is not a single farmer.

Mr. HEPBURN. The present number does not give one man in twenty-five the report that, of all others, he wants. I will ask the gentleman to let the House take action on this amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The resolution, as I have offered it, provides for the same distribution that has been made from time immemorial. Notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman, I do not believe that it would be at all practicable for the Doorkeeper to consult the census and make an apportionment based upon the statistics that he might get in reference to the farmers in the different districts. I do not think we ought to depart from the original method of distribution. Gentlemen who have farmer constituents have no difficulty in exchanging with city members whose constituents have no particular desire for these books. I therefore move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment? Would the gentleman have any objection to an amendment adding the words:

Provided, That the title of each of said parts shall be such as to show that each part is complete in itself.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have no objection to that, although the resolution does not provide that these volumes shall be designated as parts, but simply provides that they shall be printed separately, leaving that to the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to get my amendment in?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not think the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] is practicable at all.

Mr. HEPBURN. Let the House determine that.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield for the amendment of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER] submits the following amendment; which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the title of each of the said parts shall be such as to show that each part is complete in itself.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I agree to that.

Mr. HEPBURN. I wish to offer my amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I move the previous question upon the resolution and the amendment of the gentleman from New Hampshire.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] demands the previous question upon the resolution and the pending amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I can not do that. I do not think the amendment would be at all practicable.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the resolution and the pending amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HEPBURN demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 58.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. HEPBURN and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee.

The House again divided; and tellers reported—ayes 123; noes 57.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the third reading of the joint resolution as amended.

Mr. HEPBURN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it now in order to move to recommit with instructions?

The SPEAKER. It will be after the third reading.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to recommit to the committee, with instructions to report the resolution with the language which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to recommit with instructions, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

And that the whole number of part 2 that shall be printed for the use of the House of Representatives shall be distributed to members of the House in proportion to the number of persons engaged in agriculture, horticulture, and stock-raising in their respective districts.

The question was taken on the motion to recommit, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Division.

The House divided: and there were—ayes 47, noes 95.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The joint resolution was then agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RUSSELL of Georgia, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. STEVENS, on account of sickness.

To Mr. BROSIUS, for two days, on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees for reports.

SCHOONER BARGE ASTORIA.

Mr. PIGOTT, from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7197) to provide a register for the schooner barge Astoria; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TO RECLASSIFY AND PRESCRIBE SALARIES OF RAILWAY POSTAL CLERKS.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported favorably the bill (S. 544) to reclassify and prescribe the salaries of railway postal clerks; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF COPYRIGHT LAW.

Mr. COVERT, from the Committee on Patents, reported with amendments, the bill (H. R. 6835) to amend Title LX, charpter 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to copyrights; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the minority may have leave to present their views.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the minority will have leave to present their views, and when presented they will be printed.

This completes the call of committees for reports.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF WATSON AGAINST BLACK.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. PENCE. I rise to offer a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send it up.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the contested-election case of Thomas E. Watson vs. James C. C. Black be made the special order for the 17th day of July, 1894, and from day to day until the same is disposed of.

Mr. BROWN. I raise the point of order that that is not privileged.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Colorado that as to reports from the Committee on Elections it has been held that it is privileged to call them up for consideration at any time. This is a resolution that looks to fixing a time. The Chair does not see how this gives it privilege. It is privileged to call up the matter, and the gentleman may accomplish his purpose by giving notice that he will call up the matter, or something of that sort.

Mr. REED. I would suggest that the motion could be made to call this up, and then move that it be postponed to a particular day.

The SPEAKER. It could be done in that way.

Mr. PENCE. I will make that motion.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman must first call it up.

Mr. PENCE. I will call it up, if I may do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado calls up for consideration the contested-election case of Watson against Black.

Mr. BROWN. I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The title will be read, and then the Chair will recognize the gentleman. The gentleman from Colorado calls up the following resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved 1. That Thomas E. Watson was not elected a member of the Fifty-third Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Georgia and is not entitled to a seat in said Congress.

Resolved 2. That James C. C. Black was elected a member of the Fifty-third Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Georgia and is entitled to a seat in said Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWN] raises the question of consideration on these resolutions.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable. The question is, Will the House proceed to the consideration of the resolutions just read?

The question being taken, there were on a division (called for by Mr. PENCE)—ayes 49, noes 92.

Mr. PENCE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PENCE and Mr. BROWN were appointed as tellers to act during the call of the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 220, nays 0, answered "present" 1, not voting 131; as follows:

So the House decided to consider the resolutions.

Before the result of the vote was announced——

Mr. QUIGG. I voted inadvertently. I desire to withdraw my vote, being paired with my colleague from New York [Mr. STRAUS].

Mr. HARTMAN. I desire to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAINES].

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. CULBERSON with Mr. GROUT.

Mr. HATCH with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. MORSE.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky with Mr. DINGLEY.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia with Mr. GROW.

Mr. LAWSON with Mr. WILSON of Washington.

Mr. RUSSELL of Georgia with Mr. SWEET.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois with Mr. CURTIS of New York.

Mr. HUTCHESON with Mr. KIEFER.

For this day:

Mr. SPRINGER with Mr. THOMAS.

Mr. MEREDITH with Mr. BROSIUS.

Mr. RICHARDS with Mr. WADSWORTH.

Mr. SAYERS with Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. DENSON with Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, the report in this case is a unanimous one, joined in, as I understand, by both the Democratic and Republican members of the committee. Notwithstanding this fact, however, there is a serious belief on the part of the members of this House—many of the members—that the contestant, Mr. Watson, was duly elected.

I do not care to go into any discussion of the facts of the case, for I am not capable of doing so, having had no opportunity of becoming informed, as a member of the committee can become informed, relative to the merits of the controversy.

The Populist party, whose candidate Mr. Watson was, has no membership on the Elections Committee. For reasons that were, I suppose, entirely satisfactory to the Speaker's mind, we were denied any membership on that committee, notwithstanding a formal written request for the appointment of one of the members of our party upon the committee. It will do no good to complain of that now, so I make no complaint.

We felt from the beginning, however, that inasmuch as a Populist, Mr. Goode, was contesting the seat of a Democrat, Mr. Epes, from the State of Virginia, and that Mr. O'Ferrall, a Democrat from Virginia, was chairman of the Committee on Elections, and after his resignation another Democrat, Mr. JONES, from Virginia, became a member of the committee in his place; inasmuch as a Populist, Mr. Watson, from Georgia, was contesting the seat of Mr. BLACK, a Democrat, and Mr. LAWSON, a Democratic member from Georgia, was put on that committee; notwithstanding the further fact that there was a Populist, Mr. Whatley, contesting the seat of a Democrat, Mr. COBB, from Alabama, and Mr. DENSON, a Democrat from Alabama, was put upon the committee, and for other reasons like these we felt, I repeat, that it was but a fair and reasonable request to have one member of the Populist party on that committee.

Prompted by that idea at the time, and feeling entirely satisfied that we were entitled to the place, we supplemented a previous formal verbal request with a written one for recognition, which was denied to us; and of course we had no remedy, and perhaps it is a useless thing to complain. I am not mentioning it as a complaint now, but only citing the facts as a reason for the request that I desire and intend presently to submit a request, which we hope and expect will be granted (and I do not doubt it will be granted, inasmuch as it is in accordance with the usual and uniform practice of the House of Representatives with reference to contested-election cases), and that the same practice will be followed in the case of Mr. Watson.

That request, Mr. Speaker, is that the contestant, Mr. Watson, be granted leave to address the House on this case in his own behalf for an hour or an hour and a half—I would suggest an hour and a half—and in presenting that request I wish to suggest that in view of the fact that like many new members here who have no recollection of course of the precedents I made inquiry of the older members on both sides of the House, and am informed that it has been the universal practice to grant this privilege to contestants ever since the organization of the House of Representatives. It has never been denied. The chance for the contestant to speak for himself has always been granted.

I started to look into the RECORD to ascertain for myself what had been the practice in such cases, and I find instances where the present Speaker of the House had himself made a similar request in more than one case. I remember particularly the contest of Thoebe against Carlisle, when the present Speaker of the House [Mr. CRISP] was chairman of the Committee on Elections, and presented that request as in conformity with the universal practice of the House. I copied the language in that instance, which appears in the RECORD, volume 88, page 601, Fiftieth Congress, first session, from which it appears that the following language was used:

Mr. CRISP. I now ask unanimous consent that the contestant be allowed to address the House if he desires to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore.—

I do not know who the Speaker pro tempore was, Mr. Carlisle, the Speaker, having left the chair—stated—

It is customary to grant such requests by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

I think it will not be denied, Mr. Speaker, that that is the universal practice of the House; and I hope the same privilege will be granted to Mr. Watson.

I now move that this case be postponed until next Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock; and pending that, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the proposition of the gentleman.

Mr. PENCE. My motion was that the case be postponed until next Monday at 2 o'clock; and pending that, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be until next Monday at 12 o'clock. The purpose and the sole purpose is to enable Mr. Watson to arrive in the city to have the opportunity, which has never been denied to a contestant here, to be heard in his own behalf.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Colorado, that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. REED. If the Chair will permit me, I would like to suggest that I understand from the gentleman that Mr. Watson is not here, but can be here on Monday.

Mr. PENCE. That is correct.

Mr. BROWN. Before putting the question, I would like to ask the gentleman from Colorado what his object is in moving to have the House adjourn until Monday?

Mr. PENCE. Simply this, I will answer: that before this matter came up a number of gentlemen asked that the motion be made that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday. There is no object in presenting the question except that, and if there is objection to it——

Mr. BURROWS. It seems to be a general desire to adjourn over to-morrow.

The question being taken, on motion of Mr. PENCE, the House divided: and there were—ayes 65, noes 96.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Colorado to postpone the further consideration of the contested-election case until Monday next at 2 o'clock.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, I have no response to make to what the gentleman from Colorado has said upon the subject of the appointment of the Committee on Elections. If I were to say anything, I would say that I hardly consider it delicate to approach the Speaker upon the subject of appointing certain persons upon any of the committees. The Speaker is well equipped to perform that duty without advice from anyone.

This case, Mr. Speaker, is here with a unanimous report. It proceeded before the Committee on Elections according to the wish and desire both of the contestant and contestee. There has not been the slightest complaint upon the part of either of the parties to this record, respecting the conduct of the Committee on Elections.

The report was adopted by the committee less than one week ago, and it seems to me remarkable that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. PENCE] should come into the House this morning and make this most extraordinary motion which he has made. Especially is this so in view of the fact which I have stated, that the case has progressed, on the part of Mr. Watson, according to his desires all the way through. Mr. Speaker, all the members of the Committee on Elections, Republicans as well as Democrats, have not only concurred in the result arrived at, as stated in the committee's report, but have concurred in the reasons so ably stated in the report by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Georgia, Judge LAWSON.

This, Mr. Speaker, is all I desire to say, either for the contestant, the committee, or the House. I therefore move the previous question upon the motion made by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. PENCE].

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion to postpone the further consideration of this case until 2 o'clock on Monday next.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. This is not——

Mr. PENCE. Is it in order, pending that, to have the Chair present the request to the House for unanimous consent that the contestant, Mr. Watson, be permitted to address the House for one hour on the case? That request, which I made, has not yet been presented to the House.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. It will be time for that when the case comes up for consideration.

The SPEAKER. Of course, that is not in order now, because the question is whether the House will proceed to consider the case or postpone it to a later period. The question now is on the motion to postpone the consideration of this case until Monday at 2 o'clock.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PENCE demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 102.

Mr. PENCE. Yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. PENCE and Mr. BROWN.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 77, nays 126, answered "present" 4, not voting 145; as follows:

So the motion was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

For this day:

Mr. ENLOE with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. SIPE with Mr. POST.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. SNODGRASS, is detained in his room by illness.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BROWN and Mr. PENCE addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, the question now is on the consideration and disposition of the report, is it not?

The SPEAKER. Certainly, it is before the House.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, as I said before, this case has progressed so far, on the part of the House, as well as on the part of the committee, so as to afford Mr. Watson every opportunity that he has desired to be heard, and in view of the fact that the report of the committee, as I said before, is unanimous, neither its conclusions nor any statement that it contains being objected to by anyone, and in view of the unprecedented course taken by a third party in this case, it seems to me that the House should dispose of this case at once.

The record shows, uncontradictedly shows, that Judge BLACK, the sitting member, has a majority of at least 5,000 votes. By giving the contestant every possible doubt that could occur in the examination of the case, the majority of the sitting member is at least that much. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that no useful purpose can be served by a discussion of this question further. I therefore move the previous question.

Mr. PENCE. Inasmuch as the gentleman has just made an allusion to me——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana demands the previous question.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to withdraw it, inasmuch as he has made allusion to my own action in the matter. I wish to make——

Mr. BROWN. I can not yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I think if you will shut off all——

Mr. BROWN. Or to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, in fairness, the gentleman ought to be a little in favor of free speech, even if the gentleman has no case.

A MEMBER. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. PENCE. I move that the House adjourn.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PENCE. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 75.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. PENCE. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Tuesday next at 2 o'clock.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PENCE. Division.

The House divided: and there were—ayes 14, noes 68.

Mr. PENCE. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee). The gentleman from Colorado makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWN] and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. PENCE].

The House again divided; and tellers reported—ayes 2; noes 118.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum has voted. Gentlemen desiring to vote will please come forward.

Mr. BROWN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 54, nays 142, answered "present" 8, not voting 148; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.
The SPEAKER. The question is now upon agreeing to the resolution reported from the Committee on Rules.
Mr. BURROWS. I suppose this is open to debate.
The SPEAKER. If the gentleman desires to be recognized the Chair will recognize him.
Mr. BURROWS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].
Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this contested-election case comes up in a different form perhaps from any other case that has ever come before this House. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. PENCE] gave notice that he would call the case up, simply for the purpose of setting a day in the future when the contestant, Mr. Watson, could appear and make his argument upon the floor of the House. There has never been, I believe, a refusal to allow a contestant to be heard in his own behalf in a contest on this floor.
The Election Committee was made up in a way that can not be held to be otherwise than at least disadvantageous to Mr. Watson, the contestant. He represents a political party that has ten members in this body. There was no duty on the part of the Speaker of the House to put any one of those gentlemen on the Committee on Elections; but there were contested cases in which members of that political party were interested. They claimed the right to be represented upon that committee, and that right was denied them. This being the case, is it not highly important and entirely fair to allow the contestant himself to have a hearing in the House?
Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. LACEY. In a moment.
But instead of giving the contestant the right to be heard the previous question has been moved; and there is not even to be given the opportunity to a member of his party to be heard in his behalf.
Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.
Mr. OUTHWAITE. I was about to ask the gentleman whether he did not use a stronger term than the facts justify when he said that representation on the committee was denied to the Populist members of the House? Representation on this committee in its original organization was never denied to the Populists.
Mr. LACEY. I understand that an application was made to the Speaker in writing, requesting that they be represented on that committee——
Mr. OUTHWAITE. Not in the original organization of the committee.
Mr. LACEY. But a vacancy occurred on the committee, and they then asked the privilege of representation.
Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes.
Mr. LACEY. Now, I am not criticising the Chair with reference to this matter. But this contestant is in a peculiarly awkward and inconvenient position. He had no friend upon that committee—no one to represent his interest; and he is now asking for permission to be heard on the floor of the House. The House has not gone so far but that it can still give him the privilege of being heard. The majority can vote down this proposed rule and allow Mr. Watson to be heard in his own behalf.
I desire as a member of the minority side to vote intelligently and right on this question. I am not at all sure whether Thomas Watson has a good case or not; but as a member of the minority I must feel constrained to vote against a proposition which allows the sitting member to retain the seat and refuses the contestant at the same time even a chance to be heard, especially when I find the spectacle presented here of a proposition coming from the Committee on Rules refusing to permit any argument or explanation in the House, and directing that we shall vote on a proposition involving a great constitutional question, the right of a member to his seat here, without a word of discussion to show the right of either party to the place.

We are not permitted, whether we believe that Mr. Black was elected to the seat he now holds, or whether we believe that Mr. Watson, the contestant, was elected, to so declare by our vote; but we are compelled to vote for both propositions at the time without a division, as this rule prescribes, and you must vote "aye" or "no" on two separate and distinct constitutional propositions involved in this contest. No division of the two propositions involved is to be allowed under the proposed rule.

Now, it seems to me that in all fairness, and as a matter of right to a party represented by a small number of persons on this floor, you can not afford to shut off debate and adopt this rule to prevent a division of the question, or to forbid a statement of the character of the claims of these respective parties.

I assume that the claim to the seat was made in good faith on the part of Mr. Watson. I have a right to assume that to begin with; and I have a right to assume also that the committee believed they were right in reporting against Mr. Watson. But when they refuse to give him and his party a hearing, refuse to allow debate as to his right to a seat, and refuse to permit a word of the evidence taken to be introduced or discussed in support of his claim, I can not help feeling that the committee do not believe in their own case, but, on the contrary, believe that the seat is properly due to the contestant. That I say is a presumption arising necessarily, by implication, from the fact that the committee refuses to hear the matter discussed.

Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the House again to the form of the proposition which is presented by the Committee on Rules. The Constitution provides that each House shall be the judge of the elections and qualifications of its own members, and it is the right of each House to vote upon such question when it is presented. I ask if that provision of the Constitution is not higher than any rule of this House? Again, the right to vote on two separate and distinct propositions is involved, first, was Mr. Black, the sitting member, elected to the seat he occupies; and, second, was Mr. Thomas Watson, the contesting member, elected to the seat which he does not hold—on these two propositions the Constitution unquestionably gives the right to this House to vote separately; and I ask if that right can be taken away by a rule of the House? It seems to me not.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURROWS. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to occupy any part of his time?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Let the gentleman continue and occupy such time as he may desire, and I will then close the debate.

Mr. BURROWS. I yield so much time as the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. PENCE] may desire.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I prefer that the usual custom should be followed, and that the other side, if they have anything to say, would occupy at least a portion of their time now. Is that your desire (referring to Mr. OUTHWAITE)?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I would have the right to close the discussion, and if I do I shall not occupy more than two or three minutes.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, the resolution now brought in by the Committee on Rules reads as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this order, the previous question shall be considered as ordered on pending resolution in the contested-election case of Watson against Black; that, without intervening motion the vote shall be taken on said resolution without division, and then on the motion to reconsider and lay on the table.

I am informed, and it is evident that it is true, that upon the adoption of this resolution no opportunity whatever remains for anyone to discuss the contested-election case between Mr. Watson and Mr. Black at all; that the majority of this House now propose, in adopting this rule reported from the Committee on Rules, to immediately, without opportunity for debate upon either side, without opportunity to suggest an amendment reciting that Mr. Watson should be seated, or without an opportunity to recite the facts in the case, require a vote to be at once taken on the report of the Committee on Elections.

I may be mistaken that such an amendment as I speak of would be in order, but it is patent that the majority now propose that there shall be no discussion upon this floor on the facts in this case. If that is not the purpose of the resolution I am very much mistaken, but I think that will not be disputed, and I think we will find in the course of a few minutes, if the majority succeed in adopting the resolution, that all debate is cut off.

As I have already stated to the House this afternoon, no opportunity has been given to any member of the party to which Mr. Watson belongs to make that kind of investigation which would enable a member to present the case fully and properly to the House. We all know from observation and experience that the discussion of a contested-election case falls naturally to the members of the Elections Committee, who have had an opportunity to investigate the facts, to study the record and hear the arguments of counsel when that case was before them.

I wish to correct the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE]. He seems to believe that no formal request was ever made to the Speaker of the House by the Populists that a member of that party should be appointed on that committee.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. My statement was, at the original organization of the House.

Mr. PENCE. And in that you are right.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I know that subsequently when a vacancy on the committee occurred, you wanted to take possession of it, and such an application was made; but the Speaker had other reasons than simply to consider the wishes of any little group of men.

Mr. PENCE. The gentleman is partly right and partly wrong. No formal request was made in the beginning for the appointment of a Populist on this committee; but when Mr. O'Ferrall, being elected governor of Virginia, retired from this House, it made a vacancy upon that committee; and now that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWN] has seemed to criticize our action in requesting the appointment of a Populist on that committee, I feel free to state the facts.

The Populist members at once met together. We had by that time become acquainted with the fact that there were at least three cases in which Populists were contesting the seats of Democrats here, and it so happened, as we discovered, that each of the Democratic contestees had a colleague of his own political party and from his own State upon the committee, whether put there purposely to protect him or not is left for every man to guess for himself; but they were there. The vacancy came when Mr. O'Ferrall retired, and at that time we prepared a formal writing, reciting the facts, stating to the Speaker, in a communication addressed to him, the existence of these contested election cases, giving the names of the cases, the States in which they arose, and respectfully suggesting to him that as our party had three contests and no membership upon that committee, we ought certainly to have one member, as there was a vacancy.

And what was the outcome of it? Mr. O'Ferrall being gone, and the contest of Goode vs. EPES from Virginia still being before the committee, the Speaker, for reasons prompted from the highest and most patriotic purposes, I have no doubt, substituted for Mr. O'Ferrall another Democrat from Virginia (Mr. JONES). We got no member of the committee. Now, every man here knows that a case can not, of course, under this rule, be fairly and properly presented, but at least the opportunity might be left to us to try, the opportunity might be given to us to do the best we may.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If the gentleman will allow me, can he point out to this House any particular, any kind of an instance in which any member of the Populist party was denied any right or privilege which any other member had?

Mr. PENCE. No; I do not claim so. I certainly could not tell you. If the Speaker could have seen fit to grant our request, we should have had a member on the committee, and might be able to answer your question more intelligently. I know of none.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Now, another question. Did Mr. Watson, the present contestant, even take the trouble to appear before the Committee on Elections in any way whatever, except by brief of attorney?

Mr. PENCE. No; Mr. Watson had not the disposition to do that. He had other men here. He had his attorneys here, who came and presented the case; but he had before him the example of Mr. Whatley, of Alabama, who had danced attendance here for months and months, trying to get a hearing and some action and favorable consideration for his case against Mr. COBB of Alabama.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. PENCE. Two moments.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Every delay before the Committee on Elections in the hearing of that contest was at the instance and request of Mr. Whatley.

Mr. PENCE. Not disputing that, for I know nothing about it—I begin to wish really that I had been a member of that committee, Mr. Speaker, or that we had had a member of the committee—I do not dispute that; perhaps it is true; however that may be, Mr. Watson knows that Mr. Whatley did dance attendance, and had to dance at least—and I use that in no offensive sense; it may be that there was no unfair delay, and I am not suggesting that there was—Mr. Watson, at least, did not think it was his duty to come and wait here. He might have had a prompt hearing, and if the gentleman——

Mr. OUTHWAITE rose.

Mr. PENCE. I have but a moment left. It is possible that after the fullest hearing upon his part, the fullest argument by Mr. Watson himself, the report might still have been unanimously against him. I do not know. I can not say. I do know he did not appear before the committee. I do know that from the beginning of the history of this House, this is the first time that an opportunity for a contestant to be heard has been cut off; and your rule here will not only cut him off, but will cut off anybody else from discussing the facts in the case. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There seems to be no division among those who have had the opportunity of considering the evidence, the testimony, and the law in the case.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to say a word respecting any case that has been before the Committee on Elections, except the case now before the House. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. PENCE] seem to go into extremes because the House is in its present condition concerning this case. Who is responsible for this case being before the House now?

Mr. PENCE. I am—partly so.

Mr. BROWN. Who brought this question here? Who was it that took the jurisdiction away from the Committee on Elections on the floor of the House to-day? It is one of the gentlemen who is now deploring the present situation of the House—the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. PENCE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PENCE. Did I not before taking any action come to you and ask if you would not agree to appoint some day for the purpose of considering this case?

Mr. BROWN. Now, I know you do not want me to tell all that was said, and therefore I will not tell anything you said to me about it.

Mr. PENCE. I have asked the question, and you are free to answer.

Mr. BROWN. The responsibility for this case now being here, about which these gentlemen now cry peccavi, rests with them, and with no one else. The report of the Committee on Elections was made as soon as the contestee desired it should be made. It has not yet been placed on the desks of the members of the House.

The printer's ink is scarcely dry on it, and the gentleman who made the report is necessarily away from the city; and yet my friend from Colorado—I may say my brother, because he formerly lived in Indiana, and was much more generous then than he is now—comes in here and on his own motion, and he not being a member of the Committee on Elections, brings up this case; for what purpose? For the purpose, as he says, of allowing Mr. Watson to come here and address the House. In view of what has taken place, who supposes that Mr. Watson, the contestant, wants to address the House? He has not had concern enough about his case to attend a single session of the Committee on Elections.

The only communication that he has had with the committee was to send in a bill of nearly $2,000 for his expenses, which this Democratic House and committee allowed, and which, Mr. Speaker, I believe it would have been justified in not allowing.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. BROWN. Therefore, the criticism which these gentlemen seek to throw upon the dominant party of this House is unjust. It is simply an effort on their part to get something printed at the public expense to circulate in Georgia against the Democratic party. That is all. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PENCE. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 123, noes 3.

Mr. PENCE. No quorum.

Mr. QUTHWAITE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. OUTHWAITE, and the gentleman from Colorado, Mr. PENCE, will please take their places as tellers.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 132, nays 54, present 11, not voting 155; as follows:

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. HOLMAN, be excused, as he was compelled to leave the House on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 132; the nays 54; present and not voting 11. The ayes have it, and the resolution is agreed to. The question now is on agreeing to the resolutions reported by the Committee on Elections, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved 1. That Thomas E. Watson was not elected a member of the Fifty-third Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Georgia and is not entitled to a seat in said Congress.

Resolved 2. That James C. C. Black was elected a member of the Fifty-third Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Georgia and is entitled to a seat in said Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to these resolutions.

The question being taken, there were on a division (called for by Mr. PENCE)—ayes 106, noes 10.

Mr. PENCE. No quorum.

Mr. BRETZ. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers to act during the call of the yeas and nays the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BRETZ] and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. PENCE].

Mr. PENCE. On reflection, I see no object in having the yeas and nays. The majority is evidently determined to exclude this contestant.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the vote ordering the yeas and nays will be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection. The point of no quorum being withdrawn, the resolutions are agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BROWN, a motion to reconsider the vote last taken was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins at half past 4 o'clock.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that the House now take a recess till 8 o'clock this evening, instead of waiting till 5 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will now declare the House in recess until 8 o'clock this evening, the evening session to be devoted to business under the rule. The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROOKSHIRE] will preside at the evening session.

The House accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. BROOKSHIRE, as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is in session pursuant to clause 3, Rule XXVI.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole in pursuance of the special order.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that, beginning where we left off last Friday night, we proceed under the same order as we proceeded then.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HULL. I object. We have bills here which were passed over last Friday night and which ought to be considered. I have been coming here every Friday night——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Last Friday night we got through more business than at any other three night sessions.

Mr. HULL. That is true; but I object to permitting two or three men here to determine whether they will let bills go through or not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I hope the gentleman will let us proceed the same way we did last Friday night.

The CHAIRMAN. The order, as the Chair understood, applied only to bills reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HULL. So I understand. I have a bill here reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which in my view is as meritorious as any bill on the Calendar. I come here every Friday night——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So do I.

Mr. HULL. And there is business on this Calendar that I am anxious to get through; and I do not believe I am doing justice to my constituents in allowing it to be passed over night after night. The bill which I particularly refer to, I allowed to be passed over last Friday night because the point of "no quorum" was raised; but I am tired of permitting one or two men to determine what bills shall go through and what shall not.

This Committee of the Whole ought to be able to determine what it will pass. If my bill were voted down in the Committee of the Whole, I would not raise the point of no quorum to save it. But it seems to me it is not fair toward those who have been attending practically every night session to have their bills passed over night after night because the gentleman from Virginia or some gentleman from some other State happens to object.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I suggest to the gentleman that as there are but few members here to-night, and as there are members here who have been regular in their attendance night after night, it might be agreed by unanimous consent that each member be allowed to call up a bill out of its regular order. In that way we might get a number of bills off the Calendar.

Mr. HULL. I would have no objection to that arrangement.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I hope the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] will withdraw his objection—at least for the present. I was directed to make this request again, at a meeting of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to-day, at which there was a quorum present.

Mr. HULL. We shall not get through the Calendar to-night.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, yes, we shall.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] would modify his motion so as to include Calendar No. 345, I think perhaps there would be no further objection.

Mr. HULL. I would not object.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is not that the very bill that we were hung up on last Friday night?

Mr. HULL. Yes, sir; and I withdrew the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee except to say to the gentleman that it would be better for his bill to proceed in the manner I have suggested. We will probably get through with the Calendar in a short time.

Mr. HULL. We carried this bill through the committee at the last Friday night session by more than two to one, but in order to not stop the business I consented to let it be laid aside temporarily. It seems to me in a case of this kind where the committee has fully considered it, it is no more than fair that it should be finally acted upon.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Why not let it keep its place on the Calendar?

Mr. HULL. It has kept its place on the Calendar now for several nights, and I am unwilling to consent to any further delay. I do not think that we ought to consent to let bills which have merit in them be laid aside night after night simply because of the objection of one or two gentlemen. We have never raised the point of no quorum on this side, and it seems to me only justice to let the sense of the committee be taken upon the bill.

Mr. PICKLER. I understood that we had to go entirely through the Calendar when this arrangement was made, and then commence again at the beginning.

Mr. HULL. One Friday night can not make an agreement that will bind the committee for the rest of the session.

Mr. PICKLER. It was agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. HULL. Not to go to that extent. I was not here when that agreement was made or I should not have consented to it.

Mr. PICKLER. Besides we can probably get through with the Calendar to-night if the gentleman will not insist upon the objection.

Mr. HULL. If the chairman of the committee will waive that one bill, probably we can dispose of it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is exactly the trouble. We will not proceed with this bill for a half minute before you strike a stumbling block. It was in order to avoid that that the request was made.

Mr. PICKLER. If we make the same progress that we made last Friday we can get through with the Calendar in an hour and a half.

Mr. HULL. Why should we let two men on the other side determine what the business is to be?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Why should we let one man on this side dictate it?

Mr. HULL. I am not undertaking to dictate the business. I am simply insisting upon the right that this bill shall have consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill, the unfinished business coming over from the last session.

HARRIET R. TATE.

The unfinished business coming over from the last session of the committee was the bill (H. R. 6213) to pension Harriet R. Tate.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the act approved June 27, 1890, the name of Harriet R. Tate, widow of William S. Tate, late a private in Company L, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Cavalry.

Mr. JONES. Let the report in that case be read, please.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest that this is the unfinished business. At the time that the committee rose on last Friday the committee was voting on the amendments. The regular order is the vote on the amendments recommended by the committee, which have heretofore been stated.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. I am authorized by the gentleman who made the point of no quorum to withdraw the point in his name. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. CAPEHART] made the point and authorizes me to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum applied only to that legislative day. The question is on agreeing to the amendments, which was the pending question when the committee rose.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside with the recommendation that it do pass.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

Bills of the following titles were severally laid aside without prejudice, retaining their places on the Calendar, viz:

The bill (H. R. 3156) for a pension to Cornelia de Peyster Black, widow, etc.;

The bill (H. R. 811) for the relief of Harriet Woodbury;

The bill (H. R. 3693) for the relief of Louisa B. Hull;

The bill (H. R. 5112) for the relief of Mary E. Cole;

The bill (H. R. 5616) granting a pension to Mary Tuttle; and

The bill (H. R. 4290) for the relief of Druzilla J. Rigg, of Macomb, Ill.

THOMAS CORIGAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5260) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corigan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered to place on the invalid pension roll of the United States the name of Thomas Corigan, late a member of Company B of the Eighty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $72 per month, from and after the passage of this act.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Strike out in line 7 the word "seventy-two," and insert "fifty;" so that it will read "$50 per month."

Mr. JONES. I ask for the reading of the report in that case, the majority and the minority.

The report (by Mr. LACEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 5260) to increase the pension of Thomas Corigan from $30 to $72 per month, and submit the following report:

Thomas Corigan was a corporal in Company B, Eighty-eighth Illinois Infantry, enlisted July 28, 1862, and was discharged on January 24, 1864.

At the battle of Chickamauga, September 20, 1863, he was severely wounded in the left hand and is now drawing a pension of $30 per month for that injury, the arm being rendered wholly useless by the wound. At the same time he was wounded by a buckshot in the neck, and the soldier claims that this wound has affected his spine and has produced epilepsy.

The medical evidence shows that the wound in the neck produces distinct crepitus on movement of the neck. The epileptic fits have gradually increased until the soldier is totally helpless and requires constant aid and attendance and has become almost imbecile mentally.

The Pension Bureau in 1892 holds that it can not accept the "fits" as a result of the wound in the back of the neck, but no other cause is evident and medical evidence has been furnished to show that the wound in the neck is the cause of his present condition.

The soldier's condition is helpless in the extreme, and if the wound in the neck is the cause of his injury he would be entitled to $72 per month under the general law. We are not disposed to criticise the action of the Pension Bureau in rejecting this portion of the soldier's claim, but we think that it might have very fairly decided the other way under the evidence and examination of the medical boards.

Your committee think that the soldier should be given the benefit of the doubt to the extent of being raised to the second grade or $50 a month. The committee is adverse to reporting bills changing the rate of pension as fixed by the Pension Bureau, but in a case of extreme helplessness like the present, where the wound has been followed by such helplessness, and there is much evidence to show that the soldier's condition is due to his wound, we are inclined to relax the rule.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out "seventy-two," in line 7, and inserting "fifty."

If the case were before us as an original question we would probably have come to a different conclusion from that arrived at by the Pension Bureau, but in the doubt raised in the case we think that the second grade would relieve the wants of the soldier and ought to be granted, especially as the claimant was an excellent soldier, highly commended by Gen. W. T. Sherman, and his severe wounds received in the battle of Chickamaugua are clearly shown.

The letter of Col. Sherman is as follows:

"HEADQUARTERS FIRST BRIGADE,
"SECOND DIVISION, FOURTH ARMY CORPS,
"Camp near Blains Cross Roads, East Tennessee, January, 10, 1864.

"To whom it may concern:

"This is to certify that Thomas Corigan, an enlisted man of the Eighty-eighth Regiment Infantry, Illinois Volunteers, and corporal of Company B, same regiment, is a soldier good and true; ever faithful in the discharge of duty, never absent without leave, brave as a lion in action, and always at his post. He won the confidence and esteem of his commanding officers by his uniform good conduct and soldierly bearing. I therefore take great pleasure and bear willing testimony to his merit, and request that his wishes may be consulted inasmuch as he is disabled from active field service by reason of wounds received on the hard-fought and bloody field of Chickamauga on the 20th of September, 1863.

"F. T. SHERMAN,
"Colonel Eighty-eighth Infantry, Illinois Volunteers."

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass after being amended by striking out the word "seventy-two," in line 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

The views of the minority (by Mr. MCDANNOLD) were read, as follows:

The minority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 5260) to increase the pension of Thomas Corigan, and submit the following statement of their views:

The records of the War Department show that this soldier served from July 25, 1862, to January 29, 1864, in Company B, Eighty-eighth Illinois Infantry. He was discharged on account of disability from gunshot wound of hand received at Chickamauga. He has been pensioned for this wound ever since discharged, and now receives $30 per month since August 4, 1886. His application, filed February 12, 1864, alleged only this wound. A later application, filed September 11, 1866, states that he also "suffers pain in the neck from the effects of a wound there received." In 1887 he claimed that deafness had resulted from that wound, and states that the ball was removed in the field hospital; in April, 1888, he alleged resulting impairment of vision and of hearing; in September, 1888, he refers to "buckshot wound in back of neck;" in February, 1892, he alleged affection of sight and hearing and epilepsy as a result of said wound.

In September, 1892, the Pension Bureau accepted the fact that he had received this wound in the neck, but rejected the claim for additional pension on the ground that he had suffered no ratable disability from it at any time since the war, and none of the alleged results were accepted as sequences of such wound. This action was taken after a careful special examination of the claim, and was affirmed by Secretary Bussey on appeal January 3, 1893.

In his deposition before the special examiner in June, 1892, the pensioner stated that he received the wound of neck at Chickamauga; that the doctor who took the bullet out put a sticking plaster over the wound and it remained until it fell off.

"The first time I felt any serious disability from the wound of my neck was about fourteen years ago (1878). I was flagging at a railroad crossing * * * in Chicago. I felt a cloud come over me and I fell down right in the track. * * * It was a hot day just like this. * * * I have had convulsions for the past fourteen years but not so much until the last eight years. I saw the shot that was extracted from my neck. I had it a long time. I lost it. It was a buckshot, and went as far as the point of my ear. The doctor said to me when he extracted it, 'Pat, if the shot had gone a quarter of an inch farther you would never eat any more potatoes.' * * * I was not bothered with the wound of my neck in 1873, but I knew I had been shot in the neck. In 1875 I was not suffering with the wound in my neck much."

His wife, Rosetta Corigan, corroborates his statement as to the first convulsion or fit about fourteen years previously.

An examination by medical officers of the Pension Bureau September 6, 1873, reports: "Flesh wound of the neck, not rated;" September 7, 1875, "slight flesh wound on the back of neck, not rated;" September 4, 1877, "slight wound of neck, not rated;" June 22, 1892, "wound on posterior surface of neck, size of a nickel, white in color, nonadherent, nondragging, nondepressed, the vertebræ do not seem to have been injured, but there is thickening of soft tissues beneath the integument."

From the facts stated it seems reasonably clear that the pensioner's present condition as to epilepsy is not chargeable to the slight wound of the neck, but rather originated in 1878 in the manner described by himself and wife.

Moreover, he is in receipt of a pension of $1 a day and the question involved is purely one for the determination of the Pension Office, and the committee has repeatedly refused to interfere in the individual adjudications of the Pension Bureau in matters clearly within their jurisdiction and presenting no technical hardship. To pass this bill is squarely in violation of the principle enunciated in several adverse reports on bills of this character, and the minority do earnestly recommend that the bill do lie on the table.

JOHN J. MCDANNOLD.
M. R. BALDWIN.
C. J. ERDMAN.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside this bill to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the bills which was under consideration on the last pension evening, and which, after a great deal of discussion pro and con, it was deemed best by those in charge of the measure to withdraw it from further consideration, in order to prevent the obstruction of other bills on the Private Calendar.

It seems to me that this is a bill that ought not to pass under any circumstances. I know that there are a great many gentlemen who are opposed to the passage of this bill.

There is a minority report in this case. The views of the minority have been read, and it seems to me that they ought to convince every member of this House that this is not a proper sort of bill to pass. The pensioner is now drawing $30 a month, or a dollar a day, and there is nothing in this record to show that his present disabilities are the result of the slight wound on the back of his neck.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that in all justice this bill ought not to be passed. It would be quite a refreshing experience if a bill as utterly without merit as this could be defeated upon a square vote, and I for one want to see this bill voted down. Gentlemen should not insist upon passing bills of this character when by doing so they defeat all pension legislation and do it with their eyes wide open. I submit that this is one of those claims that all of us ought to agree should not be passed by this House, and I hope that the bill will be reported adversely.

I do not propose now to enter upon any extended discussion of it. This matter has been before the Pension Bureau for a long time. The examiners of that Bureau have said that this man's disability was not the result of the alleged wound in the neck.

An appeal was taken from these examiners, and Gen. Bussey, then in charge of that Department, overruled that appeal and sustained the examiners. It seems to me that this is simply an attempt to override the decision of the Pension Bureau, where this matter has been carefully considered and examined into.

I do not think that upon the testimony which has been furnished us in this short and unsatisfactory report we ought to undertake to overrule the decision of the medical examiners of the Pension Bureau, upon a technical question with which they must be more conversant than the members of this House can possibly be.

I hope that gentlemen will not seriously ask this House to overrule a decision of the Pension Bureau upon a question of this sort, as to whether or not the disability from which this man suffers is the result of this slight wound in his neck. The Pension Bureau have decided that it was not the result of that wound. As I have said, an appeal has been taken and Gen. Bussey has sustained the medical examiners. Now, I hope the committee will vote down this bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I only want to occupy the attention of the committee for a very few minutes, because this bill has been fully discussed. I want to call the attention of gentlemen who were not here last Friday night to the fact that after a very full discussion the Committee of the Whole, by a vote of more than two to one, declared that this bill should pass. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] misstates the case when he says the bill was withdrawn. It was only withdrawn after the point of no quorum was made, so that other business could be proceeded with.

I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that every pension bill that is passed here is an overriding of the Pension Department. If it were not overriding the Pension Department there would be no sense in coming here at all, because claimants could go there and get the relief desired.

I want to call attention to another fact, that a board of medical examiners in Des Moines, Iowa, composed of representatives of both parties, have held that the wound in the neck is the cause of the disability of this man, and I believe that to be the fact. That he is totally disabled, nobody doubts who knows the facts. With this statement, correcting what the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] has said, I am willing to leave it to the committee.

I simply want to say that this man is old and poor, that he was a gallant soldier, that he is utterly disabled, and as I believe, after examining all the papers, his disability is caused by the wound which he received at Chickamauga, in the back of the neck. I want to say furthermore that I believe the doctors who have given him a personal examination, who have moved his head from side to side and found this creaking sound in the back of his neck, this crepitus, are better qualified to judge than is a man sitting in his office in the city of Washington who has never seen the patient and never made a personal examination.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, of course I do nt want to makes any issue with the gentleman about any statement that he may make, but I should like to know where the evidence is to be found to support these statements. It is not in either report, most certainly. I have looked through both of them and have failed to find any such evidence.

Mr. HULL. It may not be in the report, but I will ask my colleague [Mr. LACEY], who wrote the report, if that is not true?

Mr. LACEY. We went through all the testimony, which is very voluminous, and there seems to be no other source or origin for the injury. There was this wound right by the spine, which is the seat of this trouble, the paralysis starting from the spine, and the evidence of the doctors in Iowa was to the effect that they believed that this wound caused the disease.

Now, the doctors in the Pension Bureau thought that those other gentlemen were mistaken about that, and the committee came to the conclusion that they would give the soldier the benefit of the doubt to the extent of giving him $50 in view of the fact that he required the personal attendance of another person, not giving him the $72 which he would be entitled to if the Department was satisfied, and we determined to make some concession under the circumstances. The man is perfectly helpless.

Mr. HULL. Is it not true that the examining boards have held it to be so in each examination?

Mr. LACEY. There were two or three examinations to that effect, but they only set out a very brief description; and there is no intimation anywhere to show that any other injury was received outside of the service to produce the paralysis that he suffers from.

Mr. JONES. After the statement the gentleman who made this report has made, I now understand that it is not exactly the purpose of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to override the Commissioner of Pensions, because this man would be entitled to $72 a month if the disability from which he now suffers was the result of this wound in the neck. This is a sort of compromise report, it seems. The report of the committee says:

> Your committee think that the soldier should be given the benefit of the doubt to the extent of being raised to the second grade, or $50 a month.

Now, then, the committee, from whose report I have read, did not themselves think the evidence was enough to justify them in reporting that this disability was the result of that wound. There being a doubt upon their minds, they say, we have resolved that doubt in favor of the claimant to the extent of giving him $50 a month instead of the $72 a month which he would be entitled to were we satisfied as to the origin of his disability.

Upon that point I imagine the members of the committee who made this minority report had the same information before them that the members who subscribed to the majority report had, and this is what they say upon that subject:

> An examination by medical officers of the Pension Bureau September 6, 1873, reports: "Flesh wound of the neck, not rated;" September 7, 1875, "slight flesh wound on the back of neck, not rated;" September 4, 1877, "slight wound of neck, not rated."

And down as late as June 22, 1892, there is this statement made by the medical board:

> Wound on posterior surface of neck, size of a nickel, white in color, nonadherent, nondragging, nondepressed; the vertebræ do not seem to have been injured, but there is thickening of soft tissues beneath the integument.

Now, that examination was made as late as June 22, 1892, and the sunstroke which this man received was in 1878. The minority believed that this disability was the result of that sunstroke, and not of this wound in the neck; and the examination made by the medical board four years after that time discloses the fact that that medical board did not believe that the disability resulted from this wound. I do not know what the local boards out in Iowa, that we are now told about, may have determined; but all we have bearing on that subject here is found in the views of the minority.

There is nothing at all on the subject to be found in the views of the majority; and I submit that if there had been anything in the medical testimony in this case that would have justified this committee in believing that this disability resulted from that slight scratch in the neck that the gentleman who drew that report would, in justice to himself, have incorporated that testimony in the report.

I submit that there is not hing before this body that justifies the belief that this disability resulted from the wound in the neck.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. What do you think caused the disability?

Mr. JONES. The cause of the disability was a sunstroke which the soldier received in the city of Chicago while flagging in that city on a hot day, as both he and his wife have testified, and that, the minority say, in their opinion, was the cause of his present disability. He says, his wife corroborates his statement, and the minority of the committee agree with them, that that was the cause of the disability, and the medical board does not say that the wound is the cause, and they are the proper persons, it seems to me, to determine what the disability resulted from.

Surely we laymen should not undertake to say what was the cause of this man's disability when the medical boards have examined his case, as disclosed by this report, four or five different times, and in every single instance have said this wound was not even a ratable one. I submit, in view of the testimony of the medical experts who have examined the case, in view of the testimony of the man himself, corroborated by his wife's statement, that there is nothing here to justify the belief that the disabilities from which he is now suffering are the result of any wound in his neck. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 23, noes 27.

Mr. HULL. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being raised, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN].

Several MEMBERS (to Mr. HULL). Withdraw the bill.

Mr. HULL. The only condition on which I will consent to withdraw the bill is that it shall go over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will take their places.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 23, noes 29.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa withdraw the point of no quorum?

Mr. HULL. I am willing to let the bill go over without prejudice until we have as full a House as we had last Friday night.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the point of "no quorum" be withdrawn, the Chair will be required to direct the Clerk to call the roll. Does the gentleman insist upon the point of "no quorum?"

Mr. HULL. I am willing that the bill shall go over now the same as it did last Friday night when the majority was the other way.

A MEMBER. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. HULL. That the bill by unanimous consent go over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. Pending the point of "no quorum," the gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. JONES. I object.

Mr. HULL. That was what was done last Friday night when the bill had a majority in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JONES. If the understanding is that the bill go to the foot of the Calendar——

Mr. HULL. My understanding is that if it goes to the foot of the Calendar it may be reached again to-night. We shall probably get through the Calendar to-night.

Mr. JONES. Well, I object; we may as well settle the matter now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be constrained to direct the roll to be called unless some agreement is reached.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that the point of no quorum has been made?

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. By whom?

The CHAIRMAN. By the gentleman from Iowa on the left [Mr. HULL.]

Mr. HULL. I understand that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] objects to the bill going over at all. He wants the matter decided to-night.

A MEMBER. No; he does not.

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes; he does. He says he objects to my proposition. Of course I do not propose to let the bill be killed by only 29 adverse votes.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, if the bill be now withdrawn without prejudice, it goes to the foot of the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice, and go to the foot of the Calendar.

Mr. JONES. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll; when the following-named members failed to answer:

The committee then rose, and the Speaker pro tempore resumed the chair.

Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar having had under consideration various bills, had found itself without a quorum, whereupon, in accordance with the rule, he had caused the roll to be called, and now reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The names of the absentees will be entered upon the Journal. Seventy-one members have answered to their names.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I move a call of the House.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 27, noes 28.

So the call of the House was refused.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, it is evident we can do nothing to-night, and I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. I desire to ask first that my colleague, Mr. HOLMAN, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina) there were—ayes 31, noes 27.

Mr. MARTIN. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Several MEMBERS. "Too late."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman was in time.

Tellers were refused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. MARTIN and Mr. PICKLER as tellers at the Clerk's desk.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 26, nays 46, answered "present" 1, not voting 279; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

After the first call,

Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to ask unanimous consent to waive the second call? If so, I ask consent to waive it, and that the result be reported on this first call.

Mr. ARNOLD. I desire to vote, Mr. Speaker.

Several MEMBERS. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The roll call can not be interrupted, and the Clerk will proceed.

The call of the roll was resumed and concluded as above.

The following pair was announced:

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts with Mr. COGSWELL.

Mr. COGSWELL. I withdraw my vote, being paired with my colleague.

Mr. EPES. I ask that my colleague, Mr. EDMUNDS, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to move that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has been developed that there is no quorum present, and the motion would not now be in order.

Mr. PICKLER. I move that the absentees be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion could not be entertained.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I move a call of the House.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 32, noes 18.

So a call of the House was ordered.

Mr. PICKLER. Pending that, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 32, noes 26.

So the motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. STONE of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims: A bill (H. R. 2985) for the relief of Lawrence Tobin. (Report No. 1185.)

By Mr. STRONG, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: A bill (H. R. 6131) to grant a pension to Sarah E. Roebuck. (Report No. 1186.)

By Mr. STORER: Resolutions of Cincinnati (Ohio) Builders' Exchange, indorsing House bill 7564, to provide penalties for crimes attempted by anarchists—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 30, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock, noon, and was called to order by the Speaker. Prayer by the Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STORER, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. HULL, indefinitely, on account of the sickness of his wife.

To Mr. HUTCHESON, for this day, on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BALDWIN] be indefinitely excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

UNCOMPAHGRE AND UINTAH INDIANS.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6557) providing for opening the Uncompahgre and Uintah Reservations in Utah.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection to its consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a commission of three persons, within thirty days after the passage of this act, to allot in severalty to the Uncompahgre Indians within their reservation, in the Territory of Utah, agricultural and grazing lands according to the treaty of 1880, as follows:

"Allotments in severalty of said lands shall be made as follows: To each head of a family one-quarter of a section, with an additional quantity of grazing land not exceeding one-quarter of a section; to each single person over 18 years of age, one-eighth of a section, with an additional quantity of grazing land not exceeding one-eighth of a section; to each orphan child under 18 years of age, one-eighth of a section, with an additional quantity of grazing land not exceeding one-eighth of a section; to each other person under 18 years of age, born prior to such allotment, one-eighth of a section, with a like quantity of grazing land: Provided, That with the consent of said commission, any adult Indian may select a less quantity of land, if more desirable on account of location." All necessary surveys, if any, to enable said commission to complete the allotments shall be made under the direction of the General Land Office. Said commissioners shall, as soon as practicable after their appointment, report to the Secretary of the Interior what portions of said reservation are unsuited or will not be required for allotments, and thereupon such portions so reported shall, by proclamation, be restored to the public domain and made subject to entry as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That the remainder of the lands on said reservation shall, upon the approval of the allotments by the Secretary of the Interior, be immediately open to entry under the homestead and mineral laws of the United States: Provided, That after three year's actual and continuous residence upon agricultural lands from date of settlement the settler may, upon full payment of $1.50 per acre, receive patent for the tract entered. If not commuted at the end of three years the settler shall pay, at the time of making final proof, the sum of $1.50 per acre: Provided, That the minimum price of mineral lands known to contain asphaltum shall be $50 per acre.

SEC. 3. That persons otherwise qualified to make entries who have, in good faith, made mineral discoveries and locations within the limits of said reservation prior to the 1st day of July, 1890, and who have complied with the law in regard to the entry and location of mineral lands as far as practicable, shall, upon the opening of said lands to entry, have the preferred right of entering their respective locations for thirty days next after such opening, but no longer.

SEC. 4. That said commission shall also negotiate and treat with the Indians properly residing upon the Uintah Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Utah, for the relinquishment to the United States of the interest of said Indians in all lands within said reservation not needed for allotment in severalty to said Indians, and, if possible, procure the consent of such Indians to such relinquishment, and for the acceptance by said Indians of allotments in severalty of lands within said reservation, and said commissioners shall report any agreement made by them with said Indians, which agreement shall become operative only when ratified by act of Congress.

SEC. 5. That said commissioners shall receive $6 per day each, and their actual and necessary traveling and incidental expenses while on duty, and to be allowed a clerk, to be selected by them, whose compensation shall be fixed by said commissioners, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior; and a sufficient sum is hereby appropriated to carry out the provisions of this act, which sum shall be reimbursed to the Treasury out of the proceeds of the sale of said lands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I have given some examination to the bill. I am willing, as far as I am concerned, to give consent for its consideration, provided the gentleman will agree to strike out at this time, in offering the bill, section 3, and also that later on he will incorporate an amendment limiting the entire cost to $16,000.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have some explanation of this bill before I consent to its passage. It is a very important bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the gentleman will make an explanation.

Mr. MCMILLIN. This is a long bill. Suppose we have the report read.

Mr. RAWLINS. I can state the purport of the bill.

Mr. LYNCH. It is quite long, and perhaps a statement of it would cover the grounds better. I am somewhat familiar with the facts.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us hear a statement of it, and then if it is desired the report can be read.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. Speaker, the provisions of this bill relate to two Indian reservations in the Territory of Utah, one the Uncompahgre Reservation and the other the Uintah Reservation.

The Uncompahgre Reservation contains 1,933,440 acres of land, and is occupied, as shown by the last census, by 1,021 Indians, or about 7,600 acres of land to each family of Indians of four persons.

These Indians formerly owned a large section of land in Colorado. In 1880, by treaty, they sold these lands to the United States. The fund to the credit of these Indians arising from the sale of this land amounts now to about $1,700,000.

By the treaty made with these Indians they were to have lands allotted to them, as provided in this bill, by a commission to be appointed by the President. If the lands allotted to them were not within their old reservation in Colorado they were to pay for the lands at the rate of $1.25 per acre. This bill simply provides for carrying out the treaty made with those Indians, and which was ratified by act of Congress, by making allotments to the Indians in exact accordance with the terms of that treaty with them. It will take about 200,000 acres of land to satisfy the allotment.

That is the extent of the provisions of the bill so far as the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation is concerned. It is held by the law department of the Government that these Indians only had the right to the temporary occupancy of this reservation, with the right to have allottments made to them according to their treaty, and this bill carries out that provision of the treaty.

As to the Uintah Reservation, that contains about 2,100,000 acres of land. It is occupied by 833 Indians, as shown by the last census. This reservation is contiguous to the Uncompahgre Reservation. The bill provides that this commission of three persons, appointed by the President, shall treat with those Indians for the cession to the United States of such portions of the land within that reservation as are not needed for allotment in severalty, and to report any agreement made with them to Congress for ratification.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. There is an effort here, as I understand, to strike out section 3. I should like to have that explained. As I understand it, being a member of the committee, that section was put in there to protect certain innocent parties who had discovered valuable asphalt deposits upon this reservation. I should like to have the gentleman explain that. Otherwise I can not consent to the bill being passed with that section stricken out.

Mr. RAWLINS. I would state, in regard to section 3, that prior to 1890 certain parties, before the boundaries of the Uncompahgre Reservation were actually designated, made the discovery of some asphaltum lands, and not being able to ascertain that they were within the reservation, took steps to make entries of the land in accordance with the mineral land laws of the United States, and the provision of this section was to give them a preferred right of entry for thirty days after the opening of the reservation. I would state to the gentleman from Kansas that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] made objection to this provision in the bill, on the ground that it showed some favoritism, and that he believed all people ought to have an equal chance to make entries.

Rather than have the bill delayed I preferred to consent that that section should go out, and for this reason: The Supreme Court of the United States, in 121 United States Reports, in a case like this, arising in the Black Hills, where persons in good faith made mineral discoveries and locations within an Indian reservation, held that upon the opening of such reservation those parties would have the right to prove such act of possession prior to the opening as tending to show their possession, and such persons were given a preferred right against subsequent locators. So that, without this section, I think that those persons who have gone upon such reservations who have got an equitable right at the opening of the land would be protected.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Not without a lawsuit, would they?

Mr. RAWLINS. Well, I think so. I have submitted this question to the Department, and I think they are fully protected in so far as they show that their rights have accrued in good faith.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. The gentleman knows this fact, that there are a large number who have made discoveries, who have attempted to make entries, and they did it in good faith, and that such a showing was made to our Indian Committee.

Mr. RAWLINS. I am aware of that. I think those parties will be protected fully in their rights; and believing that, I prefer, rather than have this bill delayed, that it should be passed without this section. I will say that this bill is approved and recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. It is unanimously reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs to the House. It has been favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, and it is an urgent matter.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. How many acres belonging to the Government does this bill distribute among the Indians?

Mr. RAWLINS. It will require from 160,000 to 200,000 acres to satisfy the Uncompahgres.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Two hundred thousand acres of land belonging to the Government of the United States are to be allotted among these Indians by this bill. Is that so?

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes; in accordance with a treaty already made with the Indians, and which treaty was ratified by act of Congress.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. That may all be true; but it seems to me that that is too important a thing to be done by unanimous consent; and therefore, Mr. Speaker, I will have to object.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the gentleman agree to take up the bill, say for an hour, or for some such time?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I will not object to it; but it does seem to me that a matter of such importance as 200,000 acres of land, which I suppose is certainly worth a great deal of money, ought not to be disposed of in this way.

Mr. RAWLINS. Let me say to the gentleman that this bill has been indorsed by the Interior Department and the law department, and the rights of the Indians have been fully ascertained, and also the obligations of the Government. It is reported favorably by those expected to pass on the bill. It is desirable that the bill should pass now, so that this commission can go to work and accomplish what it is desired that they should accomplish during the present summer, in order that the treaty made with the Indians may be reported to Congress at the next session.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. What committee reported this bill; the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes, sir; it is unanimously reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and also by the Senate committee; and it is expressly recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LYNCH. I will say to the gentleman that these Uncompahgre Indians occupied a reservation in Colorado from 1868 to 1882, and then they were moved from that reservation in Colorado and were temporarily placed upon this reservation until a suitable location could be obtained for them.

Three tribes of them were paid at that time $1,700,000 for their lands in Colorado, with the understanding that those Indians, whenever a suitable place could be found for them, would be assigned another reservation. They were placed temporarily upon this, which contains about 2,000,000 acres; and there are about 1,000 Indians, old and young. Now, they have no right on this reservation except that of possession, because it has not been assigned to them regularly.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I will look into this matter, but I would not like to allow the bill to pass by unanimous consent just now. It is altogether too important, as it involves 200,000 acres of land belonging to the Government.

Mr. PENDLETON of Texas. As a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I wish to say that there are about 2,000,000 acres of this land. Under the treaty made in 1880 the Indians will receive from 160,000 to 200,000 acres, releasing to the Government for sale 1,800,000 acres.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I will examine the bill; but for the present I object.

AMENDMENT OF SHIPPING COMMISSIONERS' ACT.

Mr. ROBBINS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5603) to repeal an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relative to shipping commissioners," approved August 19, 1890.

The bill was read.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman will give us some explanation of this bill.

Mr. ROBBINS. The effect of this bill is that by its provisions the rights and obligations of ordinary contracts, as provided for by the general law, are restored between the owners of ships and seamen engaged in the coastwise trade. In 1872 an act was passed providing for shipping commissioners; in 1890 an amendatory law was passed, making certain provisions of the shipping commissioners' act applicable to seamen engaged in the coastwise trade. It is that act of 1890 which this bill seeks to repeal.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. What act does this bill seek to repeal? Is it the law requiring a certain percentage of seamen to be American citizens?

Mr. ROBBINS. No, sir.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. What does it relate to?

Mr. ROBBINS. It relates to the coastwise trade.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. In what respect?

Mr. ROBBINS. In this respect—that the rights and obligations of ordinary contracts as provided for by the general law are restored between the owners of ships and seamen engaged in the coastwise trade. In other words, if this bill becomes a law, both shipowners and seamen engaged in shipping between ports of the United States will be governed by the general law of contracts——

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The same law relating to seamen shipping from American ports to foreign ports?

Mr. ROBBINS. The bill would have no effect at all on seamen engaged in that trade or shipping under the provisions of the shipping act. I will state to the gentleman——

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Is this bill reported from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. ROBBINS. It has been unanimously reported from that committee.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I was a member of that committee when the legislation which is now sought to be repealed was reported by the committee and was passed by Congress. I will object to this bill for the present, but will take occasion during the day to look into the matter.

COMPARISON OF HANDWRITING IN COURT.

Mr. RAY. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (H. R. 7258) to authorize the comparison of handwriting by courts and juries in cases where the genuineness of a signature or writing is in dispute was read.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has this bill been reported by the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. RAY. If I can have attention for a minute——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I object.

Mr. RAY. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his objection. I do not see what reason he can have for objecting.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ADALINE J. PROPS.

Mr. TERRY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6228) granting a pension to Adaline J. Props.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Adaline J. Props, widow of Lewis C. Props, a soldier in the Southern or Sabine war of 1833, and allow her a pension rated at $15 per month.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out the word "fifteen," in line 7, and substitute in lieu thereof the word "eight;" so as to allow a pension of $8 per month.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. REED. What is the nature of the case that it should be brought up here for consideration to-day instead of taking the usual course on Fridays?

Mr. TERRY. This is the case of a widow of a soldier of the Sabine war.

Mr. REED. The Sabine war?

Mr. TERRY. Yes; the Southwestern war or Sabine war, as it is called. The report states the whole case fully. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. REED. Why should it be brought up now, instead of taking the regular course at Friday night?

Mr. TERRY. Well, it is brought up now as other cases are brought up every day. There have been passed through the House, by unanimous consent, as the gentleman knows, more important bills in regard to pensions than this which have never been considered in Committee of the Whole.

The gentleman will understand the difficulty that we have in getting a quorum to consider these bills at the Friday night sessions; and unless we can get some of them through in this way it will often happen that we will not get them through at all. It is the only hope of getting them passed.

Mr. REED. We used to get them through.

Mr. TERRY. That may be true; but I will state to the gentleman that there has been some trouble of late, and we have difficulty in securing the presence of members.

Mr. REED. Who have made the trouble of which the gentleman speaks?

Mr. TERRY. Well, various members. It was made on your side of the House last night; sometimes it is on this.

Mr. HULICK. I think I can answer the gentleman from Maine as to who made the trouble. A gentleman on this side of the Hall had a bill to pay an old soldier his pension, but there was objection raised on that side of the House, and the bill was defeated, and a quorum was called; and no other pension bills were considered last night because of the objection on that side of the House. Nothing could be done in reference to any other bills on that account.

Mr. TERRY. I do not want to get my case involved with any other cases or with any objections that may have been heretofore made; but the real point was that the bill to which the gentleman refers was beaten last night, and after that the point of no quorum was made by its friends.

Mr. PAYNE. Did that relate to the Sabine war?

Mr. TERRY. No.

Mr. HULICK. It was for a soldier of the late war.

Mr. LOUD. This is all very interesting, but I think I will demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is the call of committees for reports.

The committees were called, but no reports were presented.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at twenty-five minutes before 1 o'clock, and the call rests with the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

POSTMASTERS, OKLAHOMA.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 7020) to readjust the salaries and allowances of the postmasters at Guthrie, Oklahoma City, and Kingfisher, in Oklahoma Territory. I ask that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest that it had better be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7020, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow to the postmasters at Guthrie, Oklahoma City, and Kingfisher, in Oklahoma Territory, the same salaries from July 1, 1889, per annum, that would have been allowed to said officers had the classification been made July 1, 1889.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I ask for the reading of the report, which fully explains the nature of the bill.

The report (by Mr. DUNPHY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4639) to authorize and direct the readjustment of the salaries and allowances for the postmasters at Guthrie, Kingfisher, and Oklahoma City, in Oklahoma Territory, beg leave to report a bill in lieu thereof, and recommend its passage.

A similar bill was reported from this committee in the Fifty-first Congress and the report thereon stated—

"In support of this recommendation your committee state that by proclamation of the President certain lands in the Indian Territory were thrown open to settlement on April 21, 1889; that within a very short time thereafter postmasters were appointed for those places in the Territory, and so great was the influx of population into the cities named that the receipts of those offices from the very first day of their having been opened for business were at a rate exceeding the amount necessary to make them Presidential offices.

"The law requires that no office shall be made Presidential until the receipts for four successive quarters justify the payment of a salary of $1,000 per annum to the postmaster. These offices, therefore, although doing a business much in excess of that required to make them Presidential offices, could not be made Presidential until the receipts for four successive quarters had been reported to the Post-Office Department and the necessary steps taken as provided by law.

"The postmasters at these various places, therefore, performed labor largely in excess of that required in fourth-class post-offices, and yet the Department was only authorized to pay them the amount authorized by law to be paid to fourth-class postmasters. The Postmaster-General recommends that a bill be passed authorizing him to pay these postmasters the same salary from July 1, 1889, that they will be entitled to under the law readjusting their salaries, to take effect from July 1, 1890, as is shown by the following letter received from the Department:

"'OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
"'Washington, D. C., April 30, 1890.

"'SIR; In reply to your request relative to H. R. bills Nos. 3847, 4757, and 5623, to authorize and direct the readjustment of the salaries and allowances for the postmasters at Guthrie, Kingfisher, and Oklahoma, Ind. T., I beg to state the records show that, under existing law (section 463, Postal Laws and Regulations, edition of 1887, Revised Statutes, section 3863), extraordinary allowances for clerk hire have been authorized for each of the said offices; and, under the proviso of section 2 of the act of March 3, 1883, the Auditor will make report for a readjustment of the salaries of the postmasters at these offices on the basis of the receipts of the respective offices for the four quarters ended March 31, 1890, to take effect July 1 next.

"'It will be observed that, by operation of existing law, there is no necessity for this special legislation. Under the present law, however, there is no provision for a retroactive adjustment of salary, and I am of the opinion that, in justice to the postmasters at these offices, the salary, as shown by the adjustment now in progress, should be made to take effect from the first day of the period which will form the basis of the adjustment; and so I recommend.

"'Very respectfully,

"'JNO. WANAMAKER,
"'Postmaster-General.

"'Hon. H. H. BINGHAM,
"'Chairman Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads,
"'House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.'

"Your committee think this is but just and reasonable, as the postmasters at those places have given good service and have received but little compensation therefor. We therefore recommend the passage of the bill, which embraces the objects sought to be accomplished by the three bills."

The following statement submitted to the committee by the then postmaster at Guthrie gives full details, showing the justice of this measure. The same situation existed at Oklahoma City and Kingfisher. The statement is as follows:

"The Guthrie post-office was established in April, 1889, there being at that time but one post-office in existence, which was at Oklahoma City, to supply all of the territory which embraced Oklahoma Territory. I was notified by telegraph to take possession as postmaster of the Guthrie post-office April 26, 1889. By that time the city of Guthrie had at least 20,000 people in it. The office had been in operation in a tent, conducted under the supervision of George M. Christian, Assistant Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, from the 22d. When I took possession of the office there was not a building erected; the office was conducted in a tent 10 by 12. There were, at a low calculation, 50,000 letters still in mail bags which had not been opened and about a carload of newspaper mail. It was utterly impoible to houses this mail, as tents were scarce, and the United States troops guarded it night and day.

"About May 3 I had erected a building into which I moved the post-office. I had at that time a great expense, lumber in those days being worth about $1 a foot, and placing racks, etc., made at an expense to myself of about $2,000. The first day we undertook to open and distribute the mail in this building the crowd was so enormous that they broke down the floor and the troops had to be called to remove them. I then cut holes in the side of the building and made five distributing windows, allowing nobody to come inside except ladies and those who desired to purchase stamps. A line formed outside of each of those windows which averaged at least one-half mile in length.

"The office was open from daylight to dark, the nighttime being used to gradually handle what mail had been previously accumulated. The Department refused, owing to the size of my bond, to furnish me with the necessary supply of stamps to fill the demand. The sale of stamps for the quarter which ended June 30, 1889, amounted to fully $3,000, one-half of which never appeared upon the records of the office, as they were stamps purchased at Arkansas City, Wichita, and Kansas City, Mo. No record was kept for a long time of the cancellation, because of the fact that it was utterly impossible to keep clerks for that purpose.

"The line to which I have referred never broke up even during the nighttime for fully eight months. The records show that the receipts of the first year running from April 22, 1889, until April, 1890, amounted to about $12,000. The space which I occupied in the building for the use of the post-office was renting in like buildings throughout the town at from $65 to $75 per month. The average time put in in the office by myself during that year was about sixteen hours per day. A bill was introduced in the Fifty-first Congress at the suggestion of the then Postmaster-General to authorize him to pay the postmasters at Guthrie, Oklahoma City, and Kingfisher the same salary in 1889 as was by law being paid the other postmasters according to the receipts of the office.

"These offices were, under the law, classified as fourth class, and the postmasters' salaries were gauged by cancellation to in no event exceed $1,000. The receipts from box rents alone in my office during the first year were about $1,000, of which I received nothing whatever. The amount of business done at Guthrie post-office during the first year was the largest business ever done by any fourth-class post-office in the history of the Government. The office was unable to be classified, although it began business in April, 1889, up until July, 1890. In other words, making the first year virtually amount to fifteen months, the bill contemplates merely the placing of the postmasters at these three offices, who had been put to extraordinary expense, upon the same footing that they would have been placed had the Postmaster-General had any discretion in the matter.

"In other words, if the receipts of a post-office are $12,000 a year the postmaster is entitled by law to a compensation of $2,400. This bill was calculated to allow these offices which were only fourth class in name the same salaries as every other postmaster who is doing that amount of business receives in the United States. The extra amount of work, inconvenience, etc., are matters which of course do not appear in this calculation, and are matters which perhaps can not be taken into consideration, except as explanatory of the then existing situation. The Department allowed clerk hire to all of these offices in keeping with the amount of business ordinarily done in second-class offices, which shows that it was purely owing to the law as it exists that the postmasters were unable to obtain fair recompense for their services."

Mr. DOCKERY. I would like the gentleman in charge of the bill to explain further its provisions; also what charge it involves upon the Treasury.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, it seems that the Territory of Oklahoma was opened to settlement on the 21st day of April, 1889; and these three post-offices, Guthrie, Oklahoma City, and Kingfisher, were then fourth-class offices; but there was such an extraordinary rush of population into the new Territory that from the very beginning these three fourth-class offices did a business equal to a Presidential office. Under the law, however, the Postmaster-General could not make a proper allowance to the postmasters.

It seems that under the law, although the offices had been doing a business much in excess of that required to make them Presidential offices, yet they could not be made such until the receipts for four successive quarters had been reported to the Department, and then, too, only to operate in the future. Of course all the business done in the past had to be done without compensation.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Let me ask the gentleman from North Carolina if the purpose of this bill is to reimburse these parties for actual payments for clerk hire, etc.?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. No, not exactly; but to put them on the footing of Presidential offices from the 1st day of July, 1889, and on that basis to regulate the compensation as if the offices had been originally established on that basis.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. I see that this report is based on an old report made in the past Congress. Has there been any call on the present Postmaster-General for his opinion concerning it?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I will state that this bill was directed to be reported to the House by Mr. DUNPHY, but he being absent to-day, I had to take charge of the bill. I find that there is no report here from the present Postmaster-General. I did not know that fact until this morning, but I think there is no doubt about the facts set forth in the report.

Mr. McMILLIN. What amount of money would be donated—for it is a donation, pure and simple—to these postmasters if the bill shall pass Congress?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I can not tell exactly the amount——

Mr. LOUD. Not exceeding twelve or fourteen hundred dollars. That would be the extreme amount required.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I should say about that sum.

Mr. McMILLIN. There are three of them?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. McMILLIN. Now, did they not accept the offices under the law as it existed at the time; and was there any effort on their part to resign and get out from the work, and let somebody else in who was willing to do it?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I suppose not; but this is a remarkable case, a case that probably would not repeat itself once in a hundred years.

Mr. McMILLIN. What I want to call the gentleman's attention to is the fact that that is regulated by clerk hire in the Departments. The responsibility of the office occurs under the general law. They have a division in the Post-Office Department where, from time to time, additional clerk hire is granted for offices similar to this; and it has always struck me that if an officer is not satisfied with the compensation fixed at the time of his accepting the office he ought not to complain until he has made an effort to rid himself of the responsibility and tried to get out.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I think these are extraordinary cases, and that these postmasters should be allowed the amounts recommended.

Mr. McMILLIN. These cases occur all over the country, although not so pronounced as this. New York City increases 2,000 inhabitants per week. This is an extraordinary case, but it is not in Oklahoma alone that this has occurred. The general law has provided that, in order to prevent any "cooking up," if I may use the slang phrase, of salaries of officers in newly-established offices, or old ones for that matter, the business shall run for a period of three quarters.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Four quarters.

Mr. McMILLIN. Four quarters, and that upon that period of four quarters the salary shall be fixed.

Mr. LOUD. For the future, but not for the past.

Mr. McMILLIN. For the past; the general law controls.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Under the general law they would receive nothing for the past.

Mr. McMILLIN. But the law under which the postmaster holds fixes the compensation for those four quarters. Now, you seek by this bill to make a donation four years after this thing occurred and after these postmasters are presumed to have gone out. I doubt not they got the rich emoluments of these offices after the readjustment, did they not?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. After the readjustment they were entitled to pay for the future.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then they held on for four years; because under the ruling of the Post-Office Department they allow an officer to hold for the term of his second commission, if I remember correctly. Therefore, these officers had not only that year's term, but a four years' term after the rerating of the salary and the change to a Presidential office. Now, it does seem to me that, holding on for that length of time, they ought not to have this donation in times of stringency, when receipts are running behind expenditures to the extent of $75,000,000 per annum. We should not issue bonds to get money out of which to make such donations as these.

Mr. HOLMAN. Under the general law, the clerk hire was increased in proportion to the business of the offices, independently of the adjustment of salaries.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have stated already that the clerk hire was regulated by the amount of business all the time, and the amount given was in the discretion, under the appropriation, of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD].

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, while to a certain extent the statements made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] are correct—that is, that the Government is running behind in its receipts, and that the postmasters who accepted these appointments understood the conditions, yet there were conditions existing in these three offices that exist in no other offices in the United States. The gentleman says that this is but setting the example for many claims of this character that are before Congress from many parts of the country. I would say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] that we have a Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads I believe equal in intelligence and honesty and integrity to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am willing to admit its superiority, if it will do you any good. I do not question it at all in any particular.

Mr. LOUD. We have carefully considered these cases, and this is the only case that we have seen fit to report to the House. And if we did not believe and see upon the face of it that these claims are actually meritorious we should not have reported them. There had to be post-offices in these cities. Somebody had to conduct the business. Somebody had to take the position and rely upon the generosity of the Government to recompense him. The gentleman said that the persons who occupied these offices occupied them three years subsequently, and received the emoluments therefrom. I admit that they did; but they received a salary for the first year of $1,000, while they were conducting offices which, had they been classified, would have returned them $2,400 or $2,500. They never can receive anything for the extra amount they have expended in rent, in preparing a place for a second-class office, with the salary appertaining to a fourth-class office; and I can safely assure the gentleman that the amount granted in this bill will not recompense these gentlemen for the extra amount expended during the first year.

A MEMBER. Who are the claimants?

Mr. LOUD. I do not know the names of these postmasters. I do not care who they are. Here was a salary, in one case, of $1,000 for a town of probably 15,000 or 20,000 inhabitants. A city of 20,000 grew up almost in a night.

I do not care if the Government was running behind $500,000,000 in a year, I do not believe the day will ever come when the Government can not afford to perform an act of justice between it and its citizens such as is contained in this measure.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER].

Mr. PICKLER. As an inspector in the public land service I happened to be in these towns during the opening of Oklahoma Territory. As a part of my duty in establishing land offices, I was at Guthrie, Kingfisher, and Oklahoma City frequently. I want to say to the committee that in my opinion money was never more justly earned than these postmasters earned this money.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] states it altogether too strongly when he calls this a donation. I was in the town of Guthrie in the morning when there were from two hundred to three hundred people, land office officials, officials of railroads, and some persons who ought not to have been there; and at 3 o'clock in the afternoon it is estimated there were as many as fifteen thousand people on the ground. It was nearly the same at Oklahoma City, and there was a very large number at Kingfisher. These postmasters had this burden cast upon them at once. I believe that nearly every word that is stated by the postmaster there is true. I was in there week in and week out, and I have seen a long line of people standing there, one er than across this hall, from daylight until dark, seeking to get their mail.

These postmasters were put under extraordinary burdens to take care of the mails. They had no facilities, and they earned this money if ever men did. These offices bounded in one day up to Presidential offices. These men who did the work there had to do it under peculiar circumstances, bearing a peculiar burden. Now, it is not a donation, as the gentleman states. These men earned their money; they did their duty. They took care of the post-offices of those cities that grew up in a day, when the people were demanding their mail, which rendered it one of the most extraordinary affairs that has ever been known in the history of this Government. It is not a precedent. You will never have anything like this again. The truth about it is, that Oklahoma Territory was opened with very little law for the opening. There was not sufficient law enacted for the opening. It simply opened up the land, without any further provision in regard to a great many matters that ought to have been provided for in advance.

The postmasters did their duty under most trying circumstances. They had nowhere to take care of the stamps. They were in a tent in the morning of the 22d. I remember very well the frame structure that was put up to accommodate the post-office at Guthrie and the long line of people seeking to get their mail. I was at these three different towns afterwards. It was a part of my duty to visit these places, and the land offices of these places, and I know that these three postmasters did their duty and earned their money.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman state to the House, as I have no information on the question, whether or not additional allowances were made for extraordinary clerical hire on account of the extraordinary conditions?

Mr. PICKLER. I can not state particularly as to that. I understand an allowance was made for the clerks that came in there, but these postmasters got nothing for these services at the beginning, being simply treated the same as other fourth-class postmasters are, and were not paid for the services that they rendered.

Mr. DOCKERY. The Postmaster-General is allowed money out of which to make extraordinary allowances for clerk hire under exceptional circumstances. Do you know how much these postmasters obtained?

Mr. LOUD. It was very limited in character.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is the gentleman able to say what the allowance was?

Mr. LOUD. I can not say; but they are always necessarily small, and I do not know the amount that was allowed.

Mr. PICKLER. It was extremely difficult to take care of postal matters there. There was a great press in the telegraph as well as postal matters, and as a Government officer, so difficult was it to communicate by wire, that I had to go 60 miles up to Arkansas City to telegraph to the Secretary of the Interior. That shows the pressure there was in obtaining telegraph communications; and it was just as great or more so in postal matters, and it was a puzzle not only to the authorities there as to management of matters, but to the postal authorities here.

I think matters were well managed in each of these cases, and these gentlemen earned their money. They have never been paid. This is no donation. Our action in providing for this case can not be a precedent, because nothing like this case will, in my opinion, ever occur again.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Does not the gentleman think that a similar state of things has occurred recently upon the opening of new towns in Oklahoma?

Mr. PICKLER. Nothing like this.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Has not the same thing occurred at the opening of the gas belt?

Mr. PICKLER. I do not suppose that anything like this particular case has ever occurred. At Guthrie there were at noon three hundred men and at night there were fifteen thousand. And I remember very well that the citizens assembled at sundown on the night of the 22d, and, American-like, elected a mayor for the city, although they had come in there only that afternoon. The circumstances connected with the settlement of Oklahoma obtained a world-wide celebrity, were heralded everywhere, and I do not think there ever was a parallel.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, it appears to me there is very little complication about this proposition. According to my recollection the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] was on the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads in the Fifty-first Congress when this matter first came up for consideration. The reason a bill of this character was not acted upon in that Congress was in the fact the gentleman having it in charge failed, on account of absence or some other reason, to submit the action of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, which was in effect the same as the bill under consideration.

The case is simply this: The law will not allow a new post-office to rank as other than fourth-class, and the compensation of the postmaster can not exceed $1,000. In these three cities in Oklahoma Territory it was found upon an adjustment of the accounts at the end of the year that one of the offices was entitled to be rated as a third-class office and the two others as second-class. The several postmasters received, of course, additional compensation for clerical services because the amount of work was extraordinary. The statute permits extraordinary allowance for clerk hire. The simple proposition in this bill is to place these officials upon the same basis with other officers doing a similar amount of work. Under the general statute, whenever a certain amount of work is done in a post-office a certain compensation follows.

It is but simple justice that we should make such an allowance in this case. It is to me a matter of surprise that it has not been done before. These postmasters, having performed under the law a certain amount of work, are entitled to the compensation that the law fixes. It was not within the discretion of the Postmaster-General to make the necessary allowance, because under the law, until there has been an adjustment of accounts for one year, an office can not be rated as other than fourth class, even though the office is doing as much post-office work as is being done to-day in the city of Washington. It is but justice to these officials who have done this work that they should be compensated in accordance with the work they have performed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. GARRETT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 6500) to define and establish the units of electrical measure; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

POST-OFFICES, OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

The committee again resumed its session, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, the situation of the postmasters in the cities named in this bill is peculiar, and the action which we are asked to take can not be regarded as in any sense a precedent to govern Congress hereafter. The manner in which this Territory was opened to settlement and the long delay preceding such opening caused thousands of people to assemble on the border, waiting the time when the proclamation of the President should permit them to enter.

When the day arrived, thirty, forty, or fifty thousand people rushed in; and between the time fixed by the President's proclamation, 12 o'clock noon, and the close of the day there assembled at different places in the Territory as many as five to ten thousand people, who proceeded to form future cities. Such a thing as that never occurred before in this country and will perhaps never occur again. The condition of things was anomalous and remarkable.

Now, a fourth-class post-office is one at which the compensation is less than $1,000 a year. The work of such an office is very light for one man to perform. But these offices in Oklahoma assumed from the beginning the condition of Presidential post-offices. There were at once formed cities of five, eight, and ten thousand people.

In these cities there were not buildings suitable for postal purposes; and the offices were without box facilities and without carriers for the delivery of letters. Those postmasters practically began business on the very ground. For several weeks, and in some cases for months, they had to keep their offices in tents, or other temporary structures. Great risk was incurred in the handling of the mails; and it is unjust to require the work to be done for the salary of fourth-class postmasters. This bill simply adjusts these salaries on the basis of work actually done from the time those offices were opened, and just as other postmasters are paid.

Mr. DOCKERY. What was the amount actually paid these postmasters?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not know. I have not the data which would enable me to answer that question.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. They could not get more than $1,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. I mean for additional clerk hire.

Mr. SPRINGER. The clerk hire has nothing to do with the question. The clerks who were employed got the pay for their own services, but this did not increase the emoluments of the postmasters. They should be paid such salaries as they earned by reason of the magnitude of the duties they performed.

Here the hammer fell.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LOCKWOOD].

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Mr. Chairman, this is not, so far as the amount of money is concerned, a very important matter; but as a precedent, it strikes me as being exceedingly important that the House should carefully consider it.

At the time of the appointment of these gentlemen as postmasters at the places indicated the salaries were fixed by law not to exceed $1,000 per annum. The extra clerk hire they received. Now, if they are to come in, two, three, or four years afterwards, and make a claim by reason of extra labor performed by them, and the increase of the duties of their offices, what is there, I ask, to prevent many thousands of postmasters throughout the country coming to Congress and presenting a similar claim? There are many cases throughout the country where there have been rapid increases in population; but the salaries of the postmasters are readjusted at stated intervals by the Post-Office Department, the readjustments being made on the business done by the office; and on that basis there are offices throughout the country where the salary would have to be increased from five hundred to a thousand dollars and more per annum.

I remember a case to which my attention was particularly called, the post-office in my own city, where the fact was disclosed that the salary would have been from nine hundred to a thousand dollars more than was actually paid for several months on the basis of the readjustment.

Now, if these postmasters had been doing this extra work, then, under the principle invoked by this bill, these men to whom I have referred have a just and proper right to come to Congress, and in the spirit of this proposition now pending and advocated before the House, would have the right to ask to have their claims adjusted and to be paid extra compensation for the time they have been doing the additional work which has come to the office in the ordinary course of business. It seems to me that it would be a precedent and the establishing of a rule which would be antagonistic to the principle regulating the postal service throughout the country, and would result unfavorably and disadvantageously not only to this service, but to all the other branches of the public service.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I think the committee now understands the question, and I ask a vote.

Mr. BYNUM. I trust the gentleman will yield to me for from three to five minutes before that.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LOCKWOOD] has correctly stated, in my judgment, the effect of this bill. These are not the only cases throughout the country. In the gas belt in Indiana, the growth of towns and cities has been almost as marked and equally rapid as the growth of these places in Oklahoma. In the town of Elwood, Madison County, the census of 1890 showed a population of something over 2,000, but within a short period a city had sprung up with a population of from eight to ten thousand people. This was the case also in Alexandria, about 10 miles off, which in four years increased from a town of 250 to one of more than 7,000 population.

There are, I believe, six or seven Presidential post-offices in that county to-day, all of these but one having sprung up immediately upon the discovery of natural gas. When I visited these towns I called on the postmaster at Alexandria, and he informed me that he was anxious to resign because of the great labor he was compelled to perform and the small compensation he was receiving. With all the work he could do he was required to work every Sunday all day to get his reports up, and he could not succeed even then. Such was the case at Elwood, the postmaster at that point paying almost his entire salary for clerk hire, and absolutely working for nothing himself.

If this is to be reopened you will find twenty offices at least in Indiana where they are entitled to additional allowance such as is provided by this bill. I do not think the precedent ought to be established.

Mr. BINGHAM. Before the gentleman takes his seat, will he permit me to ask him if in the cases he has referred to those offices had not been already established?

Mr. BYNUM. Yes, they had been fourth-class offices; but by reason of the rapid increase of population the work was greatly increased.

Mr. BINGHAM. In this case, in Oklahoma, these offices were just established. Yours had been established for some time and were running on that basis.

Mr. BYNUM. I know; but I am simply calling attention to the fact of the increase of business there, owing to the discovery of natural gas. Whether the offices had been formerly established cuts no figure.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate, if there be no objection, will be considered as closed, and the bill will be read for amendments. There is but one section of the bill which the Clerk will read.

The bill was again read, no amendments being offered.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I move that the committee rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move to report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 42, noes 68.

Mr. MCMILLIN. No quorum.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina and Mr. MCMILLIN were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 85.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Chair will direct the roll to be called.

The roll was called, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the committee will rise and report the names of the absentees to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7020) to readjust the salaries and allowances of postmasters at Guthrie, Oklahoma City, and Kingfisher, in Oklahoma Territory and the committee, finding itself without a quorum, that the Chairman had caused the roll to be called, in accordance with the rule, and herewith reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. The names of the absentees will be entered upon the Journal. One hundred and ninety-three gentlemen have answered. The morning hour has expired.

PRIVATE PENSION BILLS.

The SPEAKER. There are a number of pension bills which have been considered in Committee of the Whole at the Friday evening sessions and reported to the House. If there be no objection, the Chair would like to submit those bills to the House. There are some twenty or twenty-four of them. If there be no objection, the House will take up those bills and dispose of them.

Mr. JONES. What is the request?

The SPEAKER. There are certain pension bills that have been reported to the House by the Committee of the Whole, having been considered at Friday evening sessions. These bills are on the Calendar ready for consideration by the House, and if there be no objection, these bills will be considered by the House and disposed of.

There was no objection.

The bill (H. R. 5697) granting a pension to Ellen Connor, widow of Patrick Connor, deceased, having been reported to the House with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on War Claims, it was accordingly referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The following bills having been reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments, and with the recommendations that as amended they do pass, were severally considered, the amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole agreed to, the bills as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, were read the third time and passed, and motions to reconsider the votes by which the bills were passed were severally laid on the table:

A bill (H. R. 2108) to perfect the military record of Warren Alonzo Alden;

A bill (H. R. 4811) granting a pension to Mary Trimble, the crippled, helpless, and destitute daughter of Benjamin Trimble, late of Nevin's Independent Battery, Light Artillery, Pennsylvania Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 5097) to increase the pension of Mary Stahl;

A bill (H. R. 5374) granting a pension to Sarah Oddy;

A bill (H. R. 1461) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Andrew L. Grugett as a former member of Company E, Sixth Tennessee Cavalry in the war of the rebellion, and to grant him an honorable discharge therefrom;

A bill (H. R. 3033) granting a pension to Amanda J. Lane;

A bill (H. R. 6206) granting a pension to A. F. Neely; and

A bill (S. 920) to pension Mary Brown, of Berlin, Vt.

The following bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, and with the recommendation that they do pass, were severally considered, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, were read a third time and passed, and motions to reconsider the votes by which the bills were passed were severally laid upon the table:

A bill (H. R. 5351) granting a pension to Celestia P. Harrt;

A bill (H. R. 5194) to pension G. O. Grenier, of Texas;

A bill (H. R. 3971) for the relief of Martha A. Holt, widow of Thomas C. Holt;

A bill (H. R. 314) granting an honorable discharge to Wilson Kale;

A bill (H. R. 1110) to correct the military record of Calvin Daniel;

A bill (H. R. 4671) to remove the charge of desertion standing against the name of Joseph G. Utter; and

A bill (H. R. 4651) granting a pension to Harriet T. Vosburg.

The following bill reported to the House from the Committee of the Whole, with the recommendation that it lie on the table, was considered and ordered to lie on the table:

A bill (H. R. 3722) for the relief of the widow and heirs of Marcellus Pettit.

The SPEAKER. This includes all the bills that have been reported from the Committee of the Whole. There are a number of bills that have been laid aside with the recommendation that they be reported, but which have not been reported.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope consent will be given to dispose of them.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will state to the gentleman from Missouri that they are in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DOCKERY. But they have been considered and laid aside with a favorable recommendation, but have not been reported.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole found itself without a quorum and could not report them to the House; but they have been considered.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. They are on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. But not reported to the House; and the order related to those which had been reported to the House. There are a number of bills the committee has considered and has laid aside to report.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bills referred to by the Speaker be considered as having been reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that, as to those bills laid aside to be reported, the Committee of the Whole be discharged from their further consideration and that they be put on their passage.

Mr. STALLINGS. I object.

ELECTRICAL MEASURE.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Mr. Speaker, there is a House bill with Senate amendments of a verbal character that I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6500) defining and establishing the units of electrical measure.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman desires to be absent on Monday, and he asks unanimous consent to call this bill up and dispose of the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. These are only verbal changes and the changing from a small letter to a capital.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

On motion of Mr. CHARLES W. STONE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STALLINGS. Mr. Speaker, I objected a while ago to a request made by the gentleman from Indiana. I want to withdraw that objection. It applies to all bills passed on Friday night of last week and one which passed last Friday night.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will the gentleman also make the exception to the one that was passed on the previous night?

Mr. STALLINGS. Oh, yes.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the House will proceed to consider the bills which had been ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation. A general order will be made to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the bills so that they may be considered in the House.

BILLS PASSED WITH AMENDMENTS.

The Committee of the Whole was discharged from the further consideration of the following bills; which were severally read, the amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole agreed to, the bills passed, and motions to reconsider the votes by which the several bills were passed were laid on the table:

The bill (H. R. 6902) granting a pension to Mrs. Susy Conway;

The bill (H. R. 1196) to restore Mary E. Trickey and children of Hartwell M. Trickey to the pension rolls (title amended);

The bill (H. R. 6050) for the relief of Margaret A. Woods;

The bill (S. 307) for the relief of Earnest C. Emerson;

The bill (H. R. 3992) to increase the pension of Julia Bows;

The bill (H. R. 953) to grant a pension to Allie Dill Broughton;

The bill (H. R. 6103) for the relief of Mrs. Mary A. Menefee;

The bill (H. R. 3816) granting a pension to Mary Ann Donoghue;

The bill (H. R. 3065) to increase the pension of James Lane;

The bill (H. R. 6634) to grant a pension to Edwin Overman, an insane child;

The bill (H. R. 6361) to grant a pension to Pauline J. Smith; and

The bill (H. R. 6213) to pension Harriet R. Tait.

BILLS PASSED WITHOUT AMENDMENTS.

The following bills were severally passed without amendments, and motions to reconsider the votes by which they were passed were severally laid on the table:

A bill (S. 578) granting an increase of pension to Wells Johnson; and

A bill (H. R. 2726) to remove the charge of desertion standing against the name of Edwin J. Butler.

INDEFINITELY POSTPONED.

The bill (H. R. 1197) for the relief of Frederick Ottstotts, reported from the Committee of the Whole with an adverse recommendation, was laid on the table, with the order that its consideration be indefinitely postponed.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Tuesday next.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted

To Mr. HEARD, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. BOUTELLE (on request of Mr. MILLIKEN), indefinitely, on account of sickness.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the House adjourn.

ELECTRIC FANS FOR HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. SHELL. Mr. Speaker, I have a resolution for which I ask immediate consideration. It will not take more than a minute to dispose of it, and I think it is privileged.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do for the present.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Architect of the Capitol be directed to place in the Hall of the House of Representatives such number of electric fans as he may deem necessary for the proper ventilation of said Hall and for the comfort and healthfulness of the members, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund.

The resolution was agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs: A bill (H. R. 5912) for discharge of Julius L. Briggs as sergeant. (Report No. 1200.)

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills; which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7593) for the relief of Rhoda Rucker, of Tennessee—the Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 726) for the relief of Charles M. Kennerly—the Committee on War Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 7628) for the relief of Lavaca Wharf Company—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SETTLE: A bill (H. R. 7629) for the relief of the heirs of Israel G. Lash—to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BLAIR: Petition of the Rockingham County Conference of Congregational and Presbyterian Churches, adopted at its fifty-seventh annual session, June 6, 1894, praying for the passage of the anti-lottery bill at this session—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of James G. Walker, of New Hampshire, against income tax on fraternal beneficiary orders—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. COOMBS: Petition of citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., member of fraternal societies, asking that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations operating upon the lodge system, and providing for the payment of life, sickness, benevolent, and other benefits to members or dependents, be relieved of all national taxation—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts: Two petitions of Henry H. Goodell and 17 other citizens of Amherst, Mass., against the introduction of lottery matter or the allowance of its transportation from State to State—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. IKIRT: Petition of T. P. Marsh and 9 other members of the faculty of Mount Union College, Alliance, Ohio, against the operations and influence of the Louisiana lottery—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. JOSEPH: Petition of miners of the Territory of New Mexico, praying Congress to permit the law requiring $100 in labor to be performed annually on each mining claim to remain in full force and effect—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. MCALL: Petition of citizens of Massachusetts, for the suppression of lotteries—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE: Two petitions of citizens of Glenfield, Pa., for exemption of fraternal societies from income tax—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SETTLE: Petition of the faculty of Trinity College, Durham, N. C., concerning lotteries—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SENATE.

MONDAY, July 2, 1894.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on motion of Mr. CULLOM, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of May 31, 1894, a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, together with copies of all correspondence on file in his office relating to the alleged erroneous survey made of the Klamath Indian Reservation, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Subsequently, on motion of Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, the vote to refer and print was reconsidered, and the communication and accompanying papers were ordered to lie on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MORRILL was, on his own request, granted an indefinite leave of absence.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the National Prison Association of the United States, of Allegheny, Pa., praying for the passage of the bill authorizing the Department of Justice to establish a bureau for the identification of criminals and the collection and dissemination of criminal information, and making appropriation for the same; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BATE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Nashville, Tenn., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TELLER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Arapahoe County, Colo., praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Washington Camp, No. 1, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Denver, Colo., and a petition of Silver State Council, No. 3, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Colorado, praying for the enactment of legislation restricting immigration; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. VILAS presented petitions of A. R. Boerner and 38 other citizens; of A. C. Probert and 34 other citizens; of Henry J. Douglaw and 25 other citizens; of S. E. Gernon and 12 other citizens, and of J. C. Noyes and 49 other citizens of Winnebago County, all in the State of Wisconsin, praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH presented a petition of Order Railroad Telegraphers of North America, of Atlanta, Ga., praying that an appropriation be made for a national exhibit at the Cotton States and International Exposition to be held at Atlanta, Ga., in the fall of 1895; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MCLAURIN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1992) for the relief of Briscoe B. Bouldin, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself June 29, 1894, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and be printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PUGH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. CALL, June 18, 1894, intended to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and be printed; which was agreed to.

MINNESOTA RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. WASHBURN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed to transmit to the House of Representatives any reports that may have been received since his last annual report pertaining to the improvement on the Minnesota River in the State of Minnesota.

GEORGE P. FURBER.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Funds of the Senate, to whom was referred the following resolution, submitted by Mr. GRAY June 16, 1894, reported it without amendment.

Resolved, That there be allowed and paid to George P. Furber, from the contingent fund of the Senate, $750, as compensation for his services in the preparation of the second edition of Senate Election Cases, and the volume entitled Privileges of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 2172) requiring the use of safety fenders on cars operated by cable or electric power within the District of Columbia; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the bill be read at length, and I beg leave to suggest that as this is a matter of great public concern, and a subject that is largely engaging the attention of the people of the District of Columbia, I trust the committee to which it will be referred may give it speedy and favorable consideration, and that the Senate may do likewise.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and hereby are, authorized and directed to require each street railway company or corporation which may be now or hereafter operated by cable or electric power within the District of Columbia to prepare its tracks and road bed in such manner as may be necessary to facilitate the use of safety fenders upon the cars of such companies or corporations, and to equip such cars with the best attainable fenders for the protection and preservation of life and limb.

SEC. 2. That if any of the said companies or corporations shall neglect for six months after having been directed in writing by the said Commissioners to prepare their tracks and road-bed and equip the cars operated by them as required by this act to the satisfaction of the said Commissioners such company or corporation shall, from and after the expiration of six months from the date of the said notice, pay a fine of $1 per day for each car operated by them to which a fender should have been attached.

The said fines shall be collected in the same manner as other fines due the District of Columbia, and when collected shall be paid into the treasury of the said District.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit a communication from the Commissioners of the District, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, relating to the matter of fenders. I move that it be printed, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, with the bill which has just been read.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 2173) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1889, and an act entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved May 2, 1890; to provide for the redistricting of the Indian Territory for judicial purposes, for an additional judge and more United States commissioners, and to prescribe the jurisdiction, duties, and authority of such judges and commissioners, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 2174) granting an increase of pension to Chester Ogden; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 2175) conferring additional powers on United States commissioners; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 2176) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Tampa, Fla.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. KYLE. I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask may be read at length and lie on the table for the time being.

The joint resolution (S. R. 94) defining obstruction to railway trains, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That no warrant or other process, civil or criminal, shall be issued by any United States commissioner, or out of any circuit or district court of the United States, against any person or persons for the alleged obstruction of any railroad train or trains, unless it shall appear that such person or persons have obstructed or hindered such train in such manner as to interfere with the safe and convenient movement of the part of such train or trains as are essential to the safe and convenient transportation of the mails of the United States. And the detachment of Pullman or other parlor or sleeping coaches from any railroad train or trains shall not constitute any offense against the laws of the United States.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN ENGAGEMENTS.

Mr. LINDSAY submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, requested to furnish for the use of the Senate, as early as practicable, a statement showing fully and in detail all expeditions and engagements had by the military forces of the United States with hostile bands or tribes of Indians for the period beginning with 1850 and ending with March 3, 1891, showing, whenever possible, the tribe or band engaged or operated against, and submitting with the said statement copies of all correspondence and reports relating to the said expeditions against and engagements with the said Indian bands or tribes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky ask for the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LINDSAY. Yes; I think it is important enough to be considered now.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that it should be a direction and not simply a request. A direction is the usual form.

Mr. LINDSAY. I have drafted it as a request. I suppose it will operate as a direction, however.

Mr. HOAR. I believe the universal custom of the Senate is to have the heads of Departments directed to furnish information.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; it should be a direction.

Mr. LINDSAY. Very well; I will strike out the word "requested" and insert "directed."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator, if this is to be done, going back for forty-four years, whether it would not be well to have it go back to the beginning of the Government? Then we should have a compact and very convenient and important history of this particular matter. I hope our Indian war history is over.

Mr. LINDSAY. I will say that there is no objection to that, except the great length of time it may take to prepare a report of that character. It is desired that this report shall be made as speedily as possible, to enable the Law Department to defend claims for Indian depredations.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator to amend the resolution by adding to it a direction for the same information from the beginning of the Government, but let the resolution require the two to come in separately, so that it can be printed in two volumes. There is not, so far as I know, anywhere a good history of our Indian wars, either showing the cost of them or giving a list of them and a statement of the general circumstances. I had occasion some ten or twelve years ago to ascertain the cost to the Government of the Indian wars, and the official at the Treasury Department procured the information for me after a great deal of labor and research.

Mr. LINDSAY. In that view the resolution may go over until to-morrow, and I shall prepare an amendment to meet the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will put in a clause that we shall communicate these two matters, one before and the other after 1850, separately, they can be printed as two volumes, and it will be a very valuable historical work. One need not wait for the other.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

RAILROAD STRIKE.

Mr. CALL. I submit a resolution, which I ask may be printed and lie over until to-morrow morning.

The resolution was read and ordered to be printed and to go over, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators shall be appointed by the President, who shall inquire and report to the Senate the cause of the existing strike of railroad and Pullman car employés, and the justice of the demands of the workingmen, and report by bill or otherwise such legislation as may secure justice to the workingmen and be reasonable and fair to their employers, and secure the transportation of the mails and freight and passengers without interruption, and that such committee be authorized to act with a committee of the House appointed for this purpose, and may report to their respective Houses the result of their final action.

PEARL HARBOR SURVEY.

Mr. KYLE. I submit a resolution which I ask may be read and lie on the table, to come up hereafter.

The resolution was read and ordered to lie over, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to inform the Senate by what authority and for what purpose the United States Government through Admiral Walker is making a survey or exploration of Pearl Harbor on the island of Oahu, Hawaiian Islands, and the results of such survey or exploration.

DELIVERY OF SENATE MAIL.

Mr. HOAR. I submit a resolution, for which I ask immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to make strict inquiry into the cause of the failure of a due and prompt delivery of Senate mail, and to cause the same to be remedied.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I desire before the resolution is adopted to say a few words. During the last Administration and during the present there has been great irregularity in delivering mail to Senators. I should receive regularly five Massachusetts papers, three morning and two evening papers, but sometimes for a week they will fail, being received perhaps in a single mail on the same day, sometimes two days after they are due. On complaint to our postmaster here he will make inquiry; he says he thinks it is not in his own office, and the matter will be remedied for a day or two. For instance, yesterday morning I should have received three Massachusetts papers. I received none of them in the morning.

One came at noon, one mail late; the others have not come yet. Yesterday at noon I should have received two Massachusetts afternoon papers, and they came this morning, a mail late. The prompt receipt of newspapers is not quite so important, but nobody knows whether the same thing is not going on all the time in regard to letters, and especially when legislation like that we have had this winter is in progress it is very important to the due performance of the office of Senator that the mails shall be received promptly.

I do not think the fault is in the Senate post-office. The same thing happened under the last Republican Administration. I do not know that it would be just, without some inquiry, to say that I think the fault is in the city post-office, but still that is my belief, because where you have three newspapers due in the same mail and one comes and the other two do not, it of course would indicate that the Northern mail had not miscarried. I have no doubt this is a matter more or less within the experience of every Senator.

The resolution was agreed to.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1930) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo. The bill has been favorably reported by the Committee on Commerce with the usual amendments.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 3, line 1, after the word "that," to strike out "if;" in line 2, after the word "spans," to strike out "it" and insert "and;" in line 6, after the word "the," to strike out "main channel" and insert "water way;" and in line 7, after the word "than," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

That said bridge shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans, and shall not be of less elevation in any case than 50 feet above high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the lowest member of the bridge superstructure, nor shall the spans of said bridge over the water way of said river be less than 400 feet in length in the clear, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of said river, and the bridge itself at right angles thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 10, after the word "that," to strike out:

If said bridge be constructed as a drawbridge it shall be constructed as a pivot drawbridge, with a draw over the main channel of the river at an accessible and the best navigable point, and with spans of not less than 200 feet in length in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw and said spans shall be not less than 10 feet above low-water mark, measuring to the lowest member of the bridge superstructure: And provided also, That said draw shall be opened promptly, upon reasonable signal, except when trains are passing over said bridge, for the passage of the boats whose construction shall not be such as to admit of their passage under the draw of said bridge when closed, but in no case shall unnecessary delay occur in opening the said draw after the passage of said trains, and.

And insert:

In case the approach and passage under the channel span of said bridge be found at any time dangerous or difficult of access by the river traffic, the owners of said bridge shall construct, at their own expense, such works of channel regulation and such aids to navigation as the Secretary of War shall order, to render the approach and passage reasonably safe and easy.

So as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That in case the approach and passage under the channel span of said bridge be found at any time dangerous or difficult of access by the river traffic, the owners of said bridge shall construct, at their own expense, such works of channel regulation and such aids to navigation as the Secretary of War shall order, to render the approach and passage reasonably safe and easy: Provided also, That the said company or corporation shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 20, after the word "within," to strike out "two years" and insert "one year," and in line 21, after the word "within," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to read:

And should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of construction, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and if said bridge is not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the passage of this act, the rights and privileges hereby granted shall be null and void.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUITS UNDER EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. LODGE. I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 346) to remove the bar of the statute of limitation and give the right of appeal in certain cases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the statute of limitation shall not be interposed in any suit brought by any laborer, workman, or mechanic in the Court of Claims against the United States to recover wages claimed to be due him under the national eight-hour law: Provided, That such suits shall be commenced within three years from the passage of this act: And provided further, That any number of claimants may join in the same suit, and the court may find in favor of some and against some, as in law and equity may be right, and both the claimants and the United States shall have the right to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, irrespective of the amount claimed.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill would impose an enormous labor upon the Supreme Court. I should think there is no necessity for an appeal in such cases. Certainly we ought not to give jurisdiction to the United States Supreme Court in the multitude of cases which may arise under the bill.

Mr. LODGE. A bill similar to this one has been before the Senate several times, and it has passed both Houses at different times. It is now drawn in conformity to meet the objections made to the bill the last time it was before the Senate. It covers the overtime claims of men who were kept at work after the eight-hour law was passed. The claims stand under the letter of Secretary Thompson, in which he said that if they would work ten hours a day they should receive extra wages. The object of the bill is simply to remove the bar of the statute of limitations, and let them take their case into the Court of Claims and have their claims passed upon there.

Mr. SHERMAN. But the bill authorizes an appeal to the Supreme Court.

Mr. HARRIS. Regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded. The hour of half past 10 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6500) to define and establish the units of electrical measure.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 578) granting an increase of pension to Wells Johnson.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2794) to amend the judiciary act of August 13, 1888;

A bill (H. R. 6656) for the relief of P. W. Mitchell, M. C. Felmet, George H. Smathers, and others; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 198) to print Agricultural Report for 1894.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 171) granting to the State of North Dakota certain lands heretofore set apart as a wood reservation for Fort Totten military reservation for the use of the militia of the State of North Dakota, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 1963) for the relief of the sureties of Dennis Murphy;

A bill (H. R. 7449) authorizing the Minneapolis Gas Light Company, of Minneapolis, Minn., to lay submerged gas pipes across the Mississippi River at Minneapolis; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 193) to appoint three members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CULLOM. I am not aware what course the committee intend to pursue in regard to the bill, but I desire a separate vote on the amendment on page 28, which was made as in Committee of the Whole, providing that barbed wire, commonly used for fencing, shall be admitted free of duty.

Mr. VEST. I was about to suggest, in order to save time, that any Senator who desires to reserve a separate vote in the Senate on any specific amendment and have the action of the Senate taken upon it shall indicate such amendment, and that all amendments not so reserved shall be voted upon en masse by the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the question is as to what amendments are pending, I desire to offer an amendment to the wool schedule.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest, as to the action to be taken, that we first take up the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, and amendments to be offered in the Senate will of course come up subsequently.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to offer an amendment to the text of the bill at the proper time; but there is no hurry about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio will properly come after amendments which were made as in Committee of the Whole are disposed of.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator propose to begin at the beginning and go through seriatim with the amendments?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The proposition of the committee is that such amendments as any Senator chooses to ask a separate vote upon and to have separately considered shall be reserved, and when those amendments have been reserved, the others, upon which no Senator asks a separate vote, may be at once disposed of in bulk.

Mr. HALE. I supposed that was to be the course pursued. That is the usual mode, and of course it will save time if it is taken. Does the Senator now propose to have other Senators indicate the amendments they want reserved?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes; but I should like first to indicate some amendments which I propose to have reserved on the part of the committee, and after that I shall be very glad to have each Senator suggest any paragraph or section which he desires to have reserved for a separate vote.

Mr. HALE. Let me also suggest to the Senator that, as the amendments are not numbered, it is pretty difficult to identify them; and when we get through, after Senators have reserved any items, if they find that, through mistake or by inadvertence, they have neglected to reserve an amendment, they may have an opportunity to do so. I hope the Senator will not insist in a case of that kind on a strict enforcement of the rule.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There will be no objection to such amendments being considered as open. I ask to have reserved——

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will permit me, I suggest to Senators that they use the last print of the bill in referring to the amendments they desire to have reserved, so as to prevent confusion at the Secretary's desk. It will facilitate business very much if Senators will use that copy of the bill.

Mr. HILL. I was going to suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that all the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole should be regarded as adopted without any formal vote of the Senate, except where any Senator desires a separate vote. We can not now specify all the particular amendments we want a separate vote upon.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I presume there would be no objection to that.

Mr. HILL. That would be satisfactory.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is necessary to have a formal vote.

Mr. HALE. It seems to me I would not agree that the amendments go nem. con. in bulk. Let Senators first indicate the amendments they wish reserved for a separate vote, and then let the question be put on concurring in all the amendments not reserved.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In bulk?

Mr. HALE. In bulk.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That course may be taken, and the vote may be taken on the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, reserving the right to each Senator to suggest any amendment he wishes to have a separate vote on.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator propose to go ahead with the committee amendments first?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I intended to do that, and as we propose to offer a number of amendments to amendments which have been made in the paragraphs, I desired to do that in the beginning. As I understand, the amendments will have to be offered before the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole are acted on, and I presume, under the agreement just now made, we may have a vote on the amendments.

Mr. HALE. Let Senators first put in a list of the amendments they want reserved.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before any agreement is made, I desire to reserve all the amendments made to the wool and woolen schedule. I have but one amendment to offer to that schedule; but if that should be adopted it will require slight changes in other provisions. I ask that the amendments made to the whole schedule be reserved, and I have also one other amendment I desire to offer.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not let the Senator from Arkansas designate the amendments he wants to except, and then let other Senators indicate their amendments? It can be done in three minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am perfectly willing to consent to that course.

Mr. HALE. That would be the best way, because, perhaps, we should complicate matters by offering other amendments now.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. HARRIS. If the suggestion of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] is agreed to, it will lead, as it seems to me, to inextricable confusion. I do not know of a single instance where the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole have not been concurred in.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator from Tennessee will permit me, the Senator from New York has withdrawn his request.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well. I now suggest that every Senator indicate the particular amendment or amendments he wishes to reserve for a separate vote, and then that we concur in all other amendments not so reserved.

Mr. HALE and others. We are ready for that.

Mr. McLAURIN. I desire to reserve for a separate vote the amendment on page 173, section [55] 28, inserting the words "not including the salary of the President of the United States and the judges of courts of the United States, but." I desire to reserve that amendment for a separate vote.

Mr. HALE. I desire to reserve the amendments to the lumber and wood schedule, on page 39, and also the provision of the free list touching that same subject, on page 119.

Mr. KYLE. I wish to reserve a separate vote on sections 182 and 182½, being the sugar schedule, pages 40, 41, and 42, and also on page 109, paragraph 575, paintings in oil or water colors, original drawings, and sketches, etc.; also on page 230, relating to manufactures of tobacco.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to reserve paragraph 178, relating to lumber, in Schedule D, wood, and manufuctures of Mr. GALLINGER. I reserve a separate vote on paragraph 199, hay.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to reserve a separate vote on paragraph 264, relating to manufactures of cotton, and paragraph 356, relating to matting and mats made of cocoa fiber or rattan.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to reserve the amendment on line 3, of the first page of the bill, fixing the date when the act shall take effect; in lines 6 and 7, on the same page, the words "or withdrawn for consumption;" on page 2, line 25, in relation to the rate of duty on borax. On page 8, I desire to reserve the provisions in relation to the duty on lead and lead products; on page 11, item 69, the duty on sponges; on page 20, line 14, the duty on iron ore; on page 28, line 20, the duty on barbed wire; on page 37, line 10, the duty on lead ore.

I had also marked for reservation page 40, being the sugar schedule. I take it for granted, however, that if an amendment is reserved by one Senator, it can not be withdrawn by that Senator subsequently without unanimous consent. So I omit to reserve the sugar schedule.

On page 45, paragraph 193, I reserve a separate vote on the duty on rice; on page 53, the spirit schedule; on page 55, the wine schedule; on page 50, paragraph 275, relating to collars and cuffs; on page 76, the schedule of silk and silk goods; on page 82, paragraph 318½, the amendments to the schedule on coal; from pages 171 to 201, the amendments relating to the income tax; on page 198, section 36, the amendments to the provision in reference to keeping books; on pages 232 and 233, section 1, the provision in reference to reciprocity.

Mr. FRYE. I suggest to the Senator it would be easier to reserve the whole bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I had marked a number of amendments I desired to have reserved. I think the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has covered most of them, but I desire now to understand whether or not if an amendment on which a separate vote is desired shall have been agreed to in the general agreement it is then in such a position that it can not be asked for. Suppose, for example, that I wish to reserve a vote on paragraph 213*a*, but do not now give notice of the fact, can I do so afterwards?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] asked in case these amendments were agreed to, and any Senator should state that he had overlooked or neglected to offer an amendment, would there be objection to his doing so, and I stated that there would be no objection. Whilst we should prefer that these things should be considered and settled now so far as possible, of course, if a Senator has overlooked an amendment he desired to offer and had made no reservation of it, there would be no desire on this side of the Chamber to take advantage of such omission.

Mr. ALLISON. One difficulty I see with the suggestion made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] is that he does not propose to amend paragraphs, but alludes to pages and topics.

Mr. CHANDLER. In some cases I have named paragraphs and in others not. I think my notice is specific enough.

Mr. ALLISON. Perhaps it is.

I desire to reserve the amendments to paragraphs 217 to 225, inclusive.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator has a memorandum by him I suggest he had better send it to the Secretary's desk. I should like to send up a memorandum with a reservation of amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I have a memorandum, but it is my own, and I do not think it would be intelligible to the clerk.

Mr. PEFFER. If it is agreeable, I shall do the same thing. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to make out such a memorandum immediately.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know what are the amendments reserved by the Senator from Ohio.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to reserve Schedule K, wool and manufactures of wool, and paragraph 685 as to wool.

Mr. WASHBURN. While the Senator from Iowa is arranging his memorandum——

Mr. ALLISON. I am not arranging a memorandum. I find that nearly every amendment which I intended to ask to reserve has already been reserved by other Senators.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask a separate vote on paragraph 191, on page 45. I also give notice that I shall offer at the proper time an amendment at the end of Schedule G.

Mr. PEFFER. Before pointing out the amendments which I ask to reserve, I wish to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill whether such amendments as were proposed and rejected will be again in order without any special notice until the time comes to offer them?

Mr. MANDERSON. There can be no question about that. The bill is open to amendment in the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator can offer whatever amendments he chooses in the Senate.

Mr. PEFFER. Very well.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Where an amendment has been concurred in, if the Senator proposes to amend an amendment, it would be better to give notice that he intends to offer an amendment to the amendment, and have that reserved.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask that paragraph 134, on page 30, be reserved; that on page 31, paragraph 138 be reserved; on page 33, paragraphs 145, 146, 147, 148, and 149, on pages 40 and 41, as to the sugar schedule; on page 69, paragraph 264, the cotton schedule; paragraph 271, on the same page; page 71, Schedule K, the wool schedule; on page 85, paragraphs 339 and 340, and running over onto the next page, paragraphs 341 and 342.

Mr. MANDERSON. I propose to demand a separate vote on paragraph 225, page 51, relating to "extract of meat;" also a separate vote on paragraph 367, "albumen," on the free list, and a separate vote also on the different items of the sugar schedule; and I give notice that as to section 182½, I shall propose several amendments voted upon as in Committee of the Whole, and also some additional amendments to that section.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask for a separate vote on paragraph 685, placing wool on the free list.

Mr. PERKINS. In the absence of the Senators from Nevada, and at their request, I ask for a separate vote on the amendment on page 2, line 1, relating to boracic acid.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to reserve for a separate vote the substitute for the sugar schedule which I have just sent to the Secretary's desk; also a separate vote upon my amendment offered a few days ago upon the subject of placing certain foreign works of art on the dutiable list, and also on an amendment placing all classes of fencing wire on the free list.

Mr. POWER. I am not now prepared to indicate the amendment I want to offer. I wish to know if I can do so to-morrow morning. I only reached the city this morning, and have not looked over the new print of the bill. The amendments I want to offer relate to lead products, rice, barley, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to state to the Senator from Montana that it is impossible to hear him. The Chair can not tell what the Senator has said.

Mr. PLATT. Nothing that any Senator has said in the Senate for the last twenty minutes has been heard more than 10 feet from where he stood. All Senators are engaged in private conversation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that no attempt will be made to transact business until order is restored. The Chair will now hear the statement of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator can offer his amendments any time.

Mr. POWER. I understand that I can hereafter offer all the amendments I choose. I am not ready to indicate the amendments that I desire to offer, as I only arrived in the city this morning. I understand I can hereafter offer any amendments I choose, and that is what I wished to know.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to reserve for a separate vote the amendments to paragraph 307, page 78, relating to paper.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish to reserve whatever dates are in the bill at which the bill or the different schedules are to go into effect, and also to reserve paragraphs 88, 94, 180½, 224, 276, 279, 284, 292, 288, 287, 291, 290, 289, and also 269, and 270.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to reserve the amendments in paragraph 270.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the residue of the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], whom I do not see in the Chamber, I think, desires to offer some amendments to subdivisions 2 and 10, and hence, for the purpose of reserving that right to him, I will make that reservation. I may desire myself to offer an amendment placing bags upon the free list. I do not observe that that transfer has been made. I may also desire to amend paragraph 244 as to a word or two where I think a clerical mistake has possibly occurred. I desire also to give notice that I shall move to place a substance known as œnotannin upon the free list.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to reserve the proviso which I submitted on Friday last.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I desire also to reserve the amendment in section 5, on page 124.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the residue of the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand that on Friday last, after I left, some change was made in the crockery schedule, but I have not been able to examine it. I will therefore reserve for the moment the crockery schedule.

Mr. ALLISON. It is understood that if any Senator has omitted by accident or otherwise this morning to call for a separate vote upon any particular amendment, he can have an opportunity of doing so notwithstanding this general concurrence?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is understood.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That has been agreed to twice. Let it be agreed to again.

Mr. ALLISON. It has not been announced by the Chair. I desire that it shall be understood.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that to be the agreement. The question is on concurring in the residue of the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 88, line 6, I propose to strike out the word "quart" and insert the word "pint."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the word "quart," in line 6, and insert the word "pint;" so as to read:

Green and colored, molded, or pressed, and flint and lime glass bottles holding more than 1 pint, and demijohns and carboys.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 12 in the same amendment after the word "one," I move to strike out the word "quart," and insert "pint," so as to read:

And vials, holding not more than one and not less than one-quarter of a pint, 1½ cents per pound.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator desire the paragraph to be agreed to as amended.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes; I am obliged to the Senator for the suggestion.

Mr. FRYE. That should be acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 94, page 17, line 10 I move to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-two and a half" before the word "cents" so that the paragraph will read:

94. Cast polished plate glass, finished or unfinished and unsilvered, not exceeding 16 by 24 inches square, 5 cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding 24 by 30 inches square, 8 cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding 24 by 60 inches square, 22½ cents per square foot; all above that 35 cents per square foot.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move as a new paragraph, to be inserted on page 40 as paragraph 180½:

180½. Toothpicks of vegetable substance, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator in reference to the amendment. Is 35 per cent on toothpicks proposed as a revenue duty or for the protection of the manufacture of toothpicks?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Simply as a revenue duty.

Mr. CHANDLER. I supposed so.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out paragraph 224, page 50, and insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out paragraph 224, as amended as in Committee of the Whole, in the following words:

224. Nuts of all kinds, including cocoanuts shelled or unshelled, not specially provided for in this act, 20 per cent ad valorem.

And insert:

224. Cocoanuts in the shell, and other nuts, shelled or unshelled, not specially provided for in this act, 20 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 269, page 69, of the new print——

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator, as he says, "new print," that this is the proper print. This is the first print of the bill in the Senate, and therefore the clerks should deal with it rather than the old print which they have had heretofore.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the case.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 269 I move to strike out the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole and restore the words "twenty per cent ad valorem."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Paragraph 269, page 69, lines 16 and 17, strike out "4 cents per square yard," and restore the House provision, "20 per cent ad valorem;" so as to read:

269. Hemp and jute carpets and carpetings, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. The proper statement of the question is to nonconcur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. If the amendment is nonconcurred in, the House provision is left standing.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Very well; let the question be put in that way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, striking out "20 per cent ad valorem" and inserting "4 cents per square yard."

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Arkansas recommends that the amendment be nonconcurred in.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes.

The amendment was nonconcurred in.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 276, page 71, I move in line 1, after the word "edgings," to insert the words "nettings and veilings," with a comma, and in line 10, to strike out "forty" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the paragraph read:

276. Laces, edgings, nettings and veilings, embroideries, insertings, neck ruffings, ruchings, trimmings, tuckings, lace window curtains, tamboured articles, and articles embroidered by hand or machinery, embroidered handkerchiefs, and articles made wholly or in part of lace, ruffings, tuckings, or ruchings, all of the above-named articles, composed of flax, jute, cotton, or other vegetable fiber, or of which these substances or either of them, or a mixture of any of them is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this act, 50 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 279, page 72, line 5, after the words "carbonized wool," I move to insert "15 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. SHERMAN. As that is the schedule I have asked to have reserved, I hope the Senator will let it pass over informally for the present.

Mr. ALDRICH. The amendment to be proposed from the committee might be adopted, and then the Senator can reserve the right to move to amend afterwards.

Mr. COCKRELL. That course will not preclude the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should be glad to have this amendment acted upon. It does not conflict with the Senator's amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection, if that is understood. I wish to deal very frankly with the Senator. I propose to offer an amendment making a duty on wool——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We can not hear on this side what the Senator is saying.

Mr. SHERMAN. If this amendment should be adopted, then some changes might have to be made, and I do not want any changes made that would cut off the proper motion which may follow my amendment if it is adopted.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. This is simply an amendment to an amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, which is pending.

Mr. COCKRELL. And it will leave the amendment still pending.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It does not conflict with the Senator's amendment.

Mr. VEST. Regular order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 279, page 72, line 5, after the words "carbonized wool," insert "15 per cent ad valorem."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 9, of the same paragraph, I move to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the paragraph read:

279. On flocks, mungo, shoddy, garnetted waste and carded waste, and carbonized noils, or carbonized wool, 15 per cent ad valorem, and on wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other like animals, in the form of roving, roping, or tops, 20 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the paragraph as amended.

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. COCKRELL. No.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is agreed that the paragraph shall remain open for the present.

Mr. PLATT. It stands now on the question to concur in the amendment as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so understood.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out paragraph 284, page 73, and insert:

284. On clothing, ready made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, made up or manufactured wholly or in part, not specially provided for in this act, felts not specially provided for in this act, all the foregoing, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other animals, including those having India rubber as a component material, valued at above $1.50 per pound, 50 per cent ad valorem; valued at less than $1.50 per pound, 45 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 292, page 75, I move to amend the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole by inserting 32½ instead of 35 per cent; so as to make the paragraph read:

292. Treble ingrain, three-ply, and all chain Venetian carpets, 32½ per cent ad valorem.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as amended will be considered as concurred in, if there be no objection.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I find that I have not these amendments in regular order.

Mr. PLATT. I do not like to go so fast.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is one of the amendments not to be concurred in. It remains open. It is in the woolen schedule, the schedule referred to by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The woolen schedule I understand is to remain open after the committee amendments to it are adopted.

Mr. PLATT. All right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so ordered.

Mr. ALDRICH. What was the amendment just adopted?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Thirty-two and one-half per cent on treble ingrain, three-ply, and all chain Venetian carpets, instead of 35 per cent.

Mr. PLATT. I should have said nothing, but the Chair stated that the amendment as amended would be concurred in without objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment is agreed to. The paragraph as amended is left open.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out in paragraph 287 "thirty-five" and insert "forty," in line 6; so as to read:

287. Aubusson, Axminster, Moquette, and Chenille carpets, figured or plain, carpets woven whole for rooms, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, and oriental, Berlin, and other similar rugs, 40 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 288 I move to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty" in line 10; so as to read:

288. Saxony, Wilton, and Tournay velvet carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character and description, 40 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 289, line 12, I move to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty;" so as to read:

289. Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, 40 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 290, line 16, I move to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty;" so as to read:

290. Velvet and tapestry velvet carpets, figured or plain, printed on the warp or otherwise, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, 40 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 291, line 20, I move to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty-two and one-half;" so as to read:

291. Tapestry Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, printed on the warp or otherwise, 42½ per cent ad valorem.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I leave the dates open for the present and will ask the Senate to consider them later. These are all the committee amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, let us begin with the first amendment reserved.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires the attention of the Senator from Arkansas. What was the motion of the Senator from Arkansas as to paragraph 270?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The motion of the committee was to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty" in line 20, of paragraph 270.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the amendment be read at the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 20, paragraph 270, page 69, strike out "fiftteen" and insert "twenty;" so as to read:

270. Burlaps, containing not over forty threads to the square inch counting warp and filling, 20 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Paragraph 270 has been reserved, I believe. If it is not, I give notice that I want it reserved.

Mr. PLATT. And paragraph 271.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Paragraph 271 has been reserved, the Chair will state.

Mr. ALLISON. Paragraph 270 should have been reserved. I have it on my memorandum.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It can be reserved. There is no objection to that, if the Senator desires it.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment was adopted, and the paragraph is still pending.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. In paragraph 320 I ask that the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole be nonconcurred in and that the paragraph remain as it came from the other House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 320 the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "fifty" and inserted "thirty" before "per cent.;" so as to read:

320. Dice, draughts, chess-men, chess-balls, and billiard, pool, and bagatelle balls, of ivory, bone, or other materials, 30 per cent ad valorem.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

The amendment was nonconcurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reserved amendments will be stated in their order in the bill. The first reserved amendment will be stated.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know whether it is the first one or not, but there is an amendment in charge of my colleague, who is absent from the Senate, and I fear on account of illness, though I do not know, as I have not seen him since we adjourned on Friday. In view of the absence of my colleague, I should like to have it passed over until he comes in or until later in the day.

Mr. VEST. That is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first reserved amendment will be stated.

Mr. RANSOM. Is it in order now to offer an amendment to the bill?

Mr. VEST. Let us get through with the reserved amendments.

Mr. RANSOM. All right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reserved amendments will be stated in their order.

The SECRETARY. Page 1, line 3——

Mr. VEST. That is about the date.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let that go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The second reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, lines 6 and 7——

Mr. CHANDLER. The next reserved amendment is to insert the words "or withdrawn for consumption."

The SECRETARY. Lines 6 and 7, page 1, after the word "countries," insert the words "or withdrawn for consumption."

Mr. ALLISON. Those words are wholly unnecessary, whether in or out. They do not change the bill a particle.

Mr. SHERMAN. I called the attention of the Senate early in this debate to it. There is another provision in the bill which carefully fixes the whole matter, and I think these words ought to be dropped; not that they will do any harm, but they may possibly create a doubt as to what is made perfectly clear by another section of the bill.

I think they ought not to be inserted. No doubt in conference they will be dropped anyway, because there is another provision in the bill which fixes the rule that all goods in warehouse or withdrawn for consumption shall pay the duty imposed by law at the time of the withdrawal. That is the rule, and it is not necessary to have the words inserted here. They will not do any great harm however.

Mr. VEST. There is a difference of opinion about this matter. We discussed it at the time. We prefer that the words shall be retained in the bill. It can be arranged afterwards in conference if the position of the Senator from Ohio is correct; but for the present we prefer to let it stand as it is, because a good many of us do not agree with the Senator from Ohio as to the words being unnecessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 1, paragraph 2, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "20 per cent ad valorem" and inserted "2 cents per pound;" so as to read:

2. Boracic acid, 2 cents per pound.

Mr. PERKINS. In the absence of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] I ask that this amendment be passed over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. VEST. What is the order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent that the amendment just read be passed over.

Mr. ALDRICH. I thought it was understood that the rate was to be made 3 cents a pound. I think we might as well dispose of it now.

Mr. VEST. I never heard of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then I must have been misinformed.

Mr. PERKINS. The Senator from Nevada desires to offer an amendment at the proper time and I gave notice for his benefit. I would rather have it passed over for the present, until he is in his seat.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

Mr. CHANDLER. I reserved on page 2, the tenth paragraph, refined borax, and I ask that it may be passed over with the other.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, line 12; "lead products"——

Mr. ALLISON. There are no amendments there. So none could have been reserved.

Mr. POWER. I wish to offer an amendment at that point.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Montana can do that afterwards.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator can offer his amendment whenever he chooses. It is not necessary to have these paragraphs held up for that purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, paragraph 69, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole inserted "sea moss or Iceland moss;" so as to read:

69. Sponges, sea moss or Iceland moss, 10 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted as paragraph 109½:

Iron ore, including manganiferous iron ore, also the dross or residuum from burnt pyrites, 40 cents per ton.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to strike out that paragraph.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator can not move to strike out the amendment. He can ask the Senate to nonconcur in the amendment, which is his only chance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Nebraska that his object can be accomplished by voting against concurrence.

Mr. COCKRELL. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLEN. I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. HILL. What is the precise question before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, inserting as a new paragraph what will be read:

The Secretary read as follows:

109½. Iron ore, including manganiferous iron ore, also the dross or residuum from burnt pyrites, 40 cents per ton.

Mr. HILL. I desire to say a few words upon that question. The effect of concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole would be to place iron ore upon the free list. Every Senator will understand that to be the effect of his vote, if he votes to nonconcur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

I do not propose to reiterate to any extent the remarks which I made upon the subject as in Committee of the Whole. I had supposed, until the debate was had the other day, that it was conceded so be one of the Democratic principles that raw materials—iron ore is one—should be placed upon the free list. I was informed by some Senators who participated in the debate, that that is a new doctrine. I do not so understand it. If there is any one thing which can be regarded as settled, it is that the Democratic party, ever since tariff reform has been raised, considered iron ore as a raw material, and that raw materials should be placed upon the free list.

I call the attention of the Senate especially to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, made to Congress last December, in which he argues ably and satisfactorily in favor of placing raw materials upon the free list. Our Democratic Secretary of the Treasury especially argues in favor of placing iron ore on the free list. He shows that it will be a benefit to the whole country. He demonstrates that it is desired by our manufacturing interests, and he says that free raw material should constitute a permanent feature of our revenue legislation. He especially deprecates any tax upon iron iron.

The House of Representatives, true to its Democratic instincts and traditions, principles and policies, has seen fit to place this article upon the free list. In my judgment the Democratic House can not consistently or conscientiously recede from that position. It is better that we should recede now than to wait until forced to do so by the action of the conference committee. It is better that we should stand up for this Democratic principle here and now than to wait until compelled, as I think we shall be, to do so when the House of Representatives shall have taken action upon this subject.

I do not propose to detain the Senate. Words are useless. This compromise arrangement is to be put through. This torn and tattered McKinley act, for that is about all the pending bill is, is to receive the approbation it seems of the Democratic Senate. For one I protest, and so far as I am concerned I propose to vote again in favor of free raw material.

Mr. KYLE. I wish to ask the Senator from New York a question. Will the Senator explain to the Senate why it is that the committee reported a duty of 40 cents on iron ore?

Mr. COCKRELL. And why is it not a revenue duty strictly and fairly.

Mr. HILL. The Senator can argue with his Democratic Secretary of the Treasury and not with me. I can not explain why it is put on. I know of no reason for it except that it is a part of the arrangement under which the bill is expected to go through.

Mr. KYLE. I have understood from experts that iron ore in the northern regions can be placed upon the cars for 25 cents per ton. Under the McKinley act there is a duty of 75 cents a ton. We propose to retain 40 cents.

Mr. HILL. It is a question of principle and not a question of figures. I think the Senator agrees with me that it ought to be placed upon the free list.

Mr. KYLE. Then let us vote to put it on the free list.

Mr. HILL. That is precisely what I am endeavoring to do, and it will be put on the free list if the Senator from South Dakota will vote with me, and Democratic Senators will vote with me. Of course we expect Republican Senators to vote the other way, as they believe in protection, as it is called, and we do not believe in protection to any extent. I do not expect my motion to prevail, but let us make the record.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to argue the general question as to the duty upon raw materials, including iron ore, but I wish to correct a mistake into which the Senator from New York has inadvertently fallen. If the amendment be rejected it would not put iron ore upon the free list. It would leave it with a duty of 75 cents a ton, as under the McKinley act.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no.

Mr. VEST. If we simply reject the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole that would be the effect of the action.

Mr. HILL. The effect of it would be to restore the condition as it existed in the bill when it came from the other House.

Mr. VEST. It would be necessary by affirmative action after that, if the Senate should reject the amendment, to put iron ore upon the free list. Otherwise it would leave the McKinley act in force as to iron ore.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me?

Mr. VEST. Of course.

Mr. HILL. The bill as it came from the other House placed iron ore upon the free list. The Senate came in here and as in Committee of the Whole has placed upon it a duty of 40 cents per ton. If we do not concur in the amendment the House provision stands. That is as plain as A B C.

Mr. VEST. This is a new section entirely.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me? Is he not mistaken in saying it would leave iron ore at the present duty? Would it not come under the provisions of the bill in some general clause? I do not know what the rate of duty would be, but I imagine it would be provided for by some clause as to articles not specially enumerated.

Mr. ALLISON. It would be 20 per cent under the pending bill.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri a question. This is a very important suggestion he has made for our understanding of the bill. Is anything left of the McKinley act, as he understands it? Does he understand that all matters which by inadvertence or otherwise are omitted to be specifically named in the bill go back under the McKinley act?

Mr. VEST. There is a provision in the bill that all legislation inconsistent with the provisions of the proposed act is repealed, but there is a good deal of the McKinley act left in force. There is a good deal of the administrative provisions of the McKinley act left in force.

Mr. HOAR. I am speaking of duties. The administrative features constitute another matter. Does the Senator understand that any McKinley duties are left in force? Will he give us a few instances?

Mr. VEST. If any of the duties in the McKinley act are not inconsistent with the pending bill, they are in force. I can not call any to mind which would be left in force; but the general provision of the bill is "that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that on all manufactured articles not specially provided for, either in the free list or on the dutiable list, there is a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem, and on all articles partly manufactured there is a duty of 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. Then iron ore would not go back to the free list.

Mr. ALLISON. It would not go back to the free list. It would either be dutiable at 10 per cent or 20 per cent. I think iron ore would be rated at 20 per cent, because it is partly manufactured.

Mr. ALDRICH. I take it for granted that the Senator from New York intends, if his motion is adopted, and it is not likely to be, to follow the matter up by a motion to put iron ore on the free list.

Mr. HILL. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that, in order to save the trouble of two votes, the motion be put in this way, to nonconcur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, and that the article be admitted free of duty.

Mr. VEST. That is a different proposition. There is no objection to taking a direct vote.

Mr. HILL. Then we can take the whole vote together.

Mr. VEST. As I was going on to remark, we have already stricken iron ore from the free list, where the House of Representatives put it, and it would be necessary to put it back.

Mr. HILL. I ask that the vote be taken in that way, so as to save trouble.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. There is objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. ALLISON. We shall never get through with the bill unless we proceed in an orderly way. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, have recommended a duty of 40 cents on iron ore, and the question is whether we shall concur or nonconcur in the amendment.

Mr. VEST. That is the question.

Mr. ALLISON. And then, after we have done that, there is another amendment, striking out the House provision placing iron ore on the free list. The question will be on concurring in that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has stated the pending question.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course the paragraph will be stricken out if the vote is in the negative.

Mr. HILL. I ask for the yeas and nays on concurring in the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from New York stated that of course the Republicans would vote to retain the duty on iron ore. That is true, but it is because Republicans, as I understand their policy, are in favor of protecting the industries of the whole country without regard to locality, and they do not believe in the so-called Democratic doctrine which the Senator from New York is supposed to advocate, that there is such a thing produced in this country as raw material, which ought to be admitted free of duty when it comes from other countries. We believe, as has been so often stated during the recent debate, that everything which the country produces and which the labor of American citizens has contributed to produce is a product worthy of a protective duty, and therefore we vote in favor of such a duty as we can get upon iron ore.

The New England Senators vote in favor of a duty upon iron ore, notwithstanding the fact that free iron ore and free coal were promised to us by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], and were the panacea of the Senator from Texas by which he proposed to increase the prosperity of New England. The manufacturers of New England have never accepted the promise of the Senator from Texas. It was medicine which the Senator from Texas proposed to force upon them against their will. They do not ask for it. They never have asked for it; and now it seems that the Senator from Texas is so utterly without influence in his own party, notwithstanding he has been fortified by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], that he is entirely unable to fulfill his promise or to secure any considerable number of Democratic votes in favor of the famous panacea which he so often prescribed to us for our endangered and prostrate industries.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from New York to paragraph 109½, as to which the Senator moves to nonconcur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole and asks for a yea-and-nay vote on that motion. I desire to call his attention to paragraph 518, on page 105 of the bill, in the free list, to show that the statement of the Senator from Iowa that the regular way would be to take a vote squarely on the question of concurring in the amendment inserted as paragraph 109½ is correct. Then, when we come to the free list, the Senator will have an opportunity of inserting iron ore or nonconcurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole to strike it out of the free list.

Mr. HILL. All I desire to do is to save the trouble of calling the roll twice. What possible objection can there be to embracing the two motions in one, nonconcurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole and placing iron ore on the free list?

Mr. KYLE. I desire to know whether nonconcurring in the amendment leaves the McKinley act in force, imposing a duty of 75 cents a ton on iron ore.

Mr. FAULKNER. It leaves it in the control of the Senate to do with it as it chooses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, on which the Senator from New York demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR].

Mr. CAREY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL], and withhold my vote.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I take the liberty of transferring my pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and vote "yea."

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON]. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has been called from the Chamber by sickness. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Arkansas, and vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], and withhold my vote.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. DAVIS (when Mr. QUAY'S name was called). I was requested to announce for the day the pair of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SQUIRE (after having voted in the affirmative). I wish to state in this connection that I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I understand that if he were here he would vote the same way I do. Otherwise I should not have voted.

The result was announced—yeas 58, nays 5; as follows:

YEAS—58.

Allison,	Frye,	Lodge,	Ransom,

So the amendment was concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, line 20, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, added at the end of paragraph 124 the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That barbed wire, commonly used for fencing, shall be admitted free of duty.

Mr. CULLOM. I suggested awhile ago that as my colleague is absent that amendment be passed over, hoping he would come in during the day, or before we get through with the bill. I ask that that amendment be passed over, as my colleague has not yet come in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over and the next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, paragraph 134, in line 11, after the word "plates," the Senate as in Committee of the Whole struck out "and irons" and inserted "andirons;" in line 13, after the words "iron," it struck out "not finished parts of machinery and," and in line 14, after the word "act," it struck out "25 per cent ad valorem" and inserted "eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound;" so as to make the paragraph read:

134. Cast-iron vessels, plates, stove plates, andirons, sadirons, tailors' irons, hatters' irons, and castings of iron, not specially provided for in this act, eight-tenths of one cent per pound.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PEFFER. I have reserved an amendment in section 134. Perhaps the vote had better be taken on my amendment first. My amendment is to insert after the word "act," in line 14, the words "shall be admitted free of duty." It is better to take the vote on that amendment first.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 30 the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out paragraph 138, in the following words:

Penknives or pocketknives of all kinds, or parts thereof, and erasers, or parts thereof, wholly or partly manufactured, razors and razor blades, finished or unfinished, 45 per cent ad valorem.

And inserted:

Penknives, pocket-knives, or erasers, of all kinds, valued at not more than 30 cents per dozen, 25 per cent ad valorem; valued at more than 30 cents per dozen and not exceeding 50 cents per dozen, 12 cents per dozen; valued at more than 50 cents per dozen and not exceeding $1 per dozen, 25 cents per dozen; valued at more than $1 per dozen and not exceeding $1.50 per dozen, 40 cents per dozen; valued at more than $1.50 per dozen and not exceeding $3 per dozen, 75 cents per dozen; valued at more than $3 per dozen, 50 per cent ad valorem; and in addition thereto, on all the foregoing valued at more than 30 cents per dozen and not more than $3 per dozen, 25 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That blades, handles, or any other parts of any or either of the articles named in this paragraph, imported in any other manner than assembled in penknives, pocketknives, or erasers, shall be subject to no less rate of duty than herein provided for penknives, pocketknives, or erasers valued at more than 30 cents per dozen.

Mr. PEFFER. I have proposed an amendment to the committee's amendment on page 31. Beginning in line 17, after the semicolon, strike out the remainder of line 17 and all of lines 18, 19, and 20.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out of the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, on page 31:

And in addition thereto, on all the foregoing valued at more than 30 cents per dozen and not more than $3 per dozen, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PEFFER. My amendment merely proposes to strike out the added ad valorem duty where specific duties have already been laid on cutlery.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, paragraph 145, after the word "steel," the Senate as in Committee of the Whole struck out "twenty-five" and inserted "twenty-two and one-half;" so as to make the paragraph read:

145. Cut nails and cut spikes of iron or steel, 22½ per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. PEFFER. In paragraphs 145, 146, 147, 148, 149 I move to put nails, spikes, tacks, etc., on the free list.

Mr. HALE. The Senator moves to strike them all out here

Mr. PEFFER. My motion is to strike them all out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out paragraph 165, in the following words:

Lead ore and lead dross, 15 per cent ad valorem upon the lead contained therein, according to sample and assay at the port of entry: Provided, That all ores containing silver and lead, in which the value of the silver contents shall be greater than the value of lead contents, according to sample and assay at the port of entry, shall be considered silver ores.

And inserted:

Lead ore and lead dross, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound: Provided, That silver ore and all other ores containing lead shall pay a duty of three-fourths of 1 cent per pound on the lead contained therein, according to sample and assay at the port of entry. The method of sampling and assaying to be that usually adopted for commercial purposes by public sampling works in the United States.

Mr. HILL. The vote upon concurring in the committee's amendment will sufficiently bring up the question of the propriety of placing this article upon the free list. Those who are in favor of lead ore being free of duty will, of course, vote against concurring in the amendment. I do not propose to reiterate anything that I have stated on this subject heretofore. The House of Representatives in its wisdom and in the fulfillment of the pledges of the Democratic party placed lead ore upon the free list.

Mr. VEST. The Senator is mistaken in regard to that. It put a duty of 15 per cent on it.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Missouri says that the other House placed a duty of 15 per cent upon it, and he seems to be right about it. The rate proposed in the amendment is three-fourths of 1 cent per pound. Will the Senator inform me what rate that is ad volorem?

Mr. ALDRICH. About 37 per cent.

Mr. VEST. I will have to look.

Mr. ALDRICH. About 36 or 37 per cent, I think, the Treasury Department figures show.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course, the price will vary, but it is an increase over 15 per cent.

Mr. HILL. The Senator says it is of course an increase over 15 per cent, and I have no doubt that he is correct. I do not care about detaining the Senate with any remarks on the question, but I will call for the yeas and nays on concurring in the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, on which the Senator from New York demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I asked that this amendment might be reserved, expecting to submit some remarks upon the subject of lead and its methods of manufacture and the cost of the product to the consumer in this country. But I am in favor of the protection, notwithstanding, and I shall not, therefore, make the remarks at this time. However, if I have occasion to do so, I shall do it before the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I will announce for the day my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR].

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. I should vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 63, nays 3; as follows:

YEAS—63.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Lindsay,	Pugh,
Allen,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Ransom,
Allison,	Faulkner,	McLaurin,	Roach,
Bate,	Frye,	McMillan,	Sherman,

So the amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next reserved amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, Schedule D, wood and manufactures of——

Mr. CHANDLER. I supposed the amendment in paragraph 166, to insert "such ores and" was considered as concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, paragraph 165, line 26, after the word "upon" insert the words "such ores and."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Schedule D, wood, and manufactures of, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out paragraph 178, in the following words:

178. Lumber of any sort, planed or finished, for each side so planed or finished, 50 cents per thousand feet, board measure; and if planed on one side and tongued and grooved, $1 per thousand feet, board measure; and if planed on two sides and tongued and grooved, $1.50 per thousand feet, board measure; and in estimating board measure under this schedule no deduction shall be made on board measure on account of planing, tonguing, and grooving.

Mr. HALE. That is the amendment which was reserved at my request. I wish to state to the members of the committee and to the Senate that the whole lumber schedule from the beginning to the end has been stricken out of the bill and has been placed upon the free list. All sawed lumber, all shooks, staves, shingles, planks, deal, everything, notwithstanding the protest which was made on the part of this great industry, have been placed on the free list. It never occurred to the lumber interests or to the Senators representing them here——

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator's pardon. He is mistaken about shooks being placed on the free list. Look at paragraph 180.

Mr. HALE. Staves, I meant to say. Sugar-box shooks are retained on the dutiable list, but I mean the general staves which are a large part of the manufacture. The manufacture of sugar-box shooks is very much limited.

No Senator representing the lumber interest expected that this comparatively little item of lumber in an advanced manufactured form, planed and grooved, would also be selected and put upon the free list. The House of Representatives did not do that, but left the item in as found in paragraph 178. It is the farthest form of the manufacture of crude lumber. The other House left it at a moderate duty, as it was left before. The Committee on Finance itself did not report the pending amendment. The committee left it, and to that extent the lumber interests and the Senators representing that interest felt themselves to be secure.

But the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] came in—the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] characterized it as one of the amendments which the Senator from Nebraska demanded as the price of his support of the bill; whether that is true I do not know and do not care—and moved even to strike this out and to put it upon the free list, where it is to be found in another place. That amendment was adopted.

Now, I make a last appeal to restore these articles to the dutiable list. I am going to call for the yeas and nays upon this question and see whether, considering how the bill has been made up, considering what concessions have been given to other interests, considering how all through the bill ten times as much has been done for other interests as is done for this little portion of the lumber interest, the Senate on conclusion will strike out the paragraph, will override the House of Representatives, will override its committee, simply because the Senator from Nebraska has moved to crown this fell swoop by taking in this last item. Upon concurring in the amendment, not taking up any more time, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I desire to say just a few words. I think there was some resentment on the part of the committee having the bill in charge, because it was alleged in debate that this was an enormous duty. The question was asked what it cost to plane on the one side and two sides and tongue and groove lumber, and an answer was given which seemed to convey the idea that the duty provided was a large one. But in that answer it was forgotten entirely that this lumber can not be planed on the one side or on the two and tongued and grooved until it has been thoroughly dried and seasoned. That takes a long while. Lumber must be stacked and remain in stacks six months or a year, or else it must be kiln dried before it can be tongued and grooved, and in the estimate of the cost that item was entirely left out.

I assert that the duty is preëminently a fair duty, and I assert further that the entire country, North and South, demands this duty on dried lumber, planed on both sides and tongued and grooved. The reason essentially for it is that it is very difficult to transport on railroads green lumber on account of the enormous cost, because of the weight of the lumber itself in its green state. Probably two-thirds of all the lumber transported on the railroads of the United States of America is dried lumber, planed on the one side or the two, and tongued and grooved.

Now, you are affecting the entire country, every man who deals in lumber, by putting this article on the free list. The House committee was preëminently right, and so was the Senate committee when it reported an agreement with the other House in the matter of this kind of lumber. I sincerely hope that the Committee on Finance itself will reverse its action and allow this kind of lumber to remain on the dutiable list, where it was placed by the House committee, and where the committee placed it originally.

Mr. HALE. What did my colleague state was the ad valorem duty on grooved lumber, or did he not state it?

Mr. FRYE. I stated that in the progress of the discussion the question was asked what was the cost of planing lumber on one side and of planing lumber on two sides and of tongueing and grooving. A statement was made as to the cost, that it was from $1 to $1.50, and then it was asserted that this was an enormous duty for only that increased amount of cost. I say that in that estimate there was not taken into consideration at all the fact that the lumber must be stacked and piled and seasoned and dried for at least a year before it goes to the planing mill, or else it must be dried in a kiln. That was entirely left out of that estimate. This duty is only a fair duty on lumber.

Mr. HALE. I can supplement that by saying that the processes which my colleague has described not only add to the amount of the duty here, but double the price of the lumber.

Mr. FRYE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HALE. Lumber treated with these processes, kiln dried, and then planed and tongued and grooved, commands about double the price that the raw lumber does, so that the percentage of increase is very small indeed. I hope that under these circumstances the committee will agree that this little boon to the lumber interests shall remain in the bill.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, I feel greatly interested in the matter of planed lumber. Michigan lumbermen bring from Canada upwards of 300,000,000 feet logs annually. This timber is manufactured in Michigan, thereby giving employment to thousands of people in Bay City, Saginaw, and many other places in our State. Many persons engaged in that industry write me that if there is no duty on lumber, planed and tongued and grooved, it simply means the transfer to Canada of the mills now operated in Michigan. Nothing is easier to move than a lumber mill, as has been proved over and over again in the history of Michigan lumbering. Such removal will be the result if the duty is taken off. Our laboring people protest against it. I have received telegrams and letters asking that I do my best to have the duty as fixed in the House retained, and I join the Senators from Maine in urging the committee to retain the House provision.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I do not know that it is necessary that anything further be said. I wish, however, to emphasize the statements made by the Senators from Maine and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN] on the subject of lumber. I think it is very unfair to the people of the States of the Northwest, whose great industry is lumber, who pay their share of indirect taxes in all other directions, whether for protection or for revenue, that their principal industry should be struck at in this manner. They have comparatively few kinds of manufacturing business to engage in on a large scale. There is not such a diversity of employment in all the varied lines of great production that exist in a populous and well-developed section of the country as in the East. The greatest industry in the State of Washington is that of lumber.

The sawing of lumber and all that relates to the production and shipment of lumber in its rough state is the principal industry aside from tilling the ground. Then, in the same industry comes the planing, tonguing and grooving of lumber. Next in order comes the production of coal. I claim that it is not fair to the people of these new communities, who have such a small number of important industries, that they should especially bear the burden of this reduction of the tariff. It is favoritism in the bill or on the part of those managing and controlling this question to discriminate so strongly against the interests of these few States so particularly. I denounce this favoritism. Nowhere else in this bill is it so pronounced and unfair.

I wish to state on this point that I have received very many petitions, memorials, and letters on the subject of the reduction of the duty on lumber from all sorts of people, without reference to political parties. They are united on this subject. It would be a serious blow to the people of the State of Washington should there not be maintained a reasonable duty upon lumber. The duty should be proportional to the work done and the capital employed. There ought to be a duty of at least $1 on the rough lumber, and a duty of $2 on lumber planed and grooved, or planed on both sides. But if you can not concede that, then do something less. Give us at least $1 on the planed, tongued, and grooved lumber, and a half dollar on the rough lumber. If you do not do something for these people you will make them suffer severely, and it is not fair or right to them. There is nothing consistent about such legislation.

Then further let me add, in connection with the subject of shingles, that the State of Washington does a very large business in shingles. At one time recently the western superintendent or manager of the Great Northern Railway wrote me from Seattle, Wash., that there were fifty carloads of cedar shingles coming East each day from that vicinity. Of course there is an enormous expense in the way of freight, and it is desirable that we retain that industry without the competition from across the Canadian border. I hope the committee will see fit to put a duty upon shingles and not admit those from Canada free of duty. That is all I wish to say on the subject, as I have already discussed it fully heretofore in this body; and from conversations with Senators of the dominant party I have not yet abandoned all hope.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, Senators on the Finance Committee who are considering the question whether lumber shall be dutiable or shall be free, both here in the Senate and in the committee, will bear in mind that, as the bill now stands, with only one exception, there is no other industry that is being dealt so deadly a blow as that of lumber. The raw material—to use that term—comes in free and will continue to come in free from Canada and from British Columbia. The business of sawing and planing and otherwise working up lumber is an enormous industry, as the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has well shown to the Senate. It can not be that Senators, when they come to take final action on this subject, will keep all these forms of manufactured lumber upon the free list.

Senators will also be kind enough to bear in mind that, after all, this is no sectional question. The lumber interest is not only in New England, in Michigan, in Oregon, and in Washington, but it is at the South, and there are Southern Senators upon this floor who are as anxious as Northern Senators to have a duty put upon sawed lumber, planed lumber, and otherwise finished lumber, that will allow the industry to survive. The industry will not survive unless Senators change their plan to resist all entreaty not to make this invidious distinction against lumber, and put upon it some duty that will keep the business of sawing and treating lumber from being entirely extinguished in the United States.

I join with the other Senators who have spoken in beseeching the most candid and careful and just consideration of this subject in the final deliberations of those Senators whose decisions are so potent that they govern this Senate and this Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 179, on page 40, line 2, before the words "per centum," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the word "seven" and inserted "ten;" so as to make the paragraph read:

179. Osier or willow, prepared for basket-makers' use, 20 per cent ad valorem; manufactures of osier or willow, 25 per cent ad valorem; chair cane or reeds, wrought or manufactured from rattans or reeds, 10 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next reserved amendment is in "Schedule E—Sugar," on page 40, line 20, after the word "effect," to strike out "July" and insert "January;" in the same line, after the words "eighteen hundred and" to strike out "ninety-four" and insert "ninety-five;" in line 21, before the words "it shall be," to strike out "thereafter," and in line 23, after the word "act," to insert "after January 1, 1895."

Mr. KYLE. I reserved paragraphs 182 and 182½ for amendment. I should like for the present to have paragraph 182 passed over, with the privilege of offering an amendment to that a few moments later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that paragraph 182 be temporarily passed over. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I shall not object to passing over the paragraph at this time, but I wish to give notice now that I can not consent to passing over these paragraphs, and leaving the bill all unsettled as we are going along. I hope no other Senator will propose anything of the kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next reserved amendment is on page 40——

Mr. MANDERSON. Paragraph 182 was reserved.

Mr. KYLE. I have had that passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent paragraph 182 was temporarily passed over at the request of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. MANDERSON. For what purpose? I do not know why we should not take up the sugar schedule in its order. If there is any good reason for passing over the paragraph, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stated the request of the Senator from South Dakota distinctly and fully, and heard no objection to the request.

Mr. MANDERSON. I did not hear it.

Mr. PEFFER. Does that also include section 182½?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not so understand.

Mr. MANDERSON. I object to passing over paragraph 182. I have certain amendments that I intend to propose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that unanimous consent has been granted that paragraph 182 be temporarily passed over.

Mr. MANDERSON. But certainly neither the Chair nor the Senate will take advantage of the fact that a Senator seated in his chair and engaged for a moment in conversation did not hear the request stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again submit the request to the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator from South Dakota state any good and satisfactory reason why the sugar schedule should be passed over now?

Mr. KYLE. I will state a reason which is satisfactory to me, and that is the condition of paragraph 182 and the amendments to it will depend upon what disposition is made of paragraph 182½. That is the idea I had. I have certain amendments to offer to paragraph 182.

Mr. FRYE. Then, the Senator does not propose to pass it over any longer than it will take to dispose of the next paragraph.

Mr. KYLE. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota to passing over paragraph 182?

Mr. MANDERSON. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. KYLE. Let the Senator from Nebraska offer his amendment, then.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that paragraph 182 be now taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Paragraph 282 is now before the Senate, and the Chair recognizes the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. MANDERSON. I offer as a substitute for the paragraph what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 182, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That until July 1, 1905, the provisions of the act entitled "An act to reduce revenue, equalize duties, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, authorizing the issue of licenses to produce sugar and for the payment of a bounty to the producers of sugar from beets, sorghum, or sugar cane grown in the United States, or from maple sap produced within the United States, contained in paragraphs 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, and 236 of said act, shall continue in full force and effect.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, this is a proposition to strike out of paragraph 182 the clause repealing the bounty of the McKinley law and continuing it in the language of that law.

I do not propose to take up the time of the Senate now with any argument upon this proposition, except simply to say that, anxious as I am for the protection of the sugar industry, I greatly prefer, for the abundant reasons which have heretofore been stated in argument, that that protection should take the form of a bounty rather than that of a duty. I believe that is infinitely better for the interests of the great mass of the people of this country. By pursuing that course, the price of sugar to the consumer would not be increased; by pursuing that course there is a direct outlay of perhaps from ten to fifteen million dollars during the time of the running of the bounty, as against an indirect outlay by the people of the United States of from fifty to eighty million dollars annually.

There is no argument that can be adduced worthy of a moment's consideration that a duty is preferable for the people of the United States to a bounty.

A few days ago the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] referred to the subject of his vote upon the sugar schedule. He made a very excellent, concise, cogent, and well-reasoned argument in favor of the continuance of the bounty of the McKinley act. As I recall what he said, he went so far as to say that he believed there rested upon the Congress of the United States and upon the people of the United States, not only a moral obligation to live up to the requirements of the contract made between the sugar producer and the Government of the United States, but that he believed there was a legal obligation so to do; and, as I recall, he declared his intention of voting in favor of the continuance of that bounty under that contract. Mr. President, here is the opportunity to do that thing; here is the opportunity to honestly stand by the contract of the McKinley act, and I hope the Senator from South Dakota and those who voted against this amendment when it was proposed as in Committee of the Whole, will see their duty clear to vote for it now.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the question, if I understand it, now arises upon concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole to paragraph 182?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is correct. The first question before the Senate will be to perfect the paragraph.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] has offered a substitute, as I understand, inserting the bounty provision of the McKinley act. I desire to offer an amendment to paragraph 182 to perfect the text, and I understand that will be first in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be first in order.

Mr. HILL. My amendment is to strike out "January 1, 1895," where it twice occurs, and insert the words "upon the passage of this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New York will be stated from the desk.

The SECRETARY. In lines 20 and 21, of paragraph 182, it is proposed to amend the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, by striking out the words "January 1, 1895," and inserting "upon the passage of this act;" and in line 23, after the word "after," by striking out "January 1, 1895," and inserting "upon the passage of this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HILL. Is the question to be first taken on the substitute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote on the substitute can not be taken until after the clause is perfected. The question will first be on the amendment of the Senator from New York to amend the amendment adopted as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HILL. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. My colleague [Mr. MANDERSON] offered a substitute for this paragraph, and before that was acted upon the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] offered an amendment. It is my understanding that the vote should first be taken upon the substitute offered by my colleague, for if that be adopted it takes out of the paragraph the necessity of any further amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Nebraska that according to parliamentary usages and rules the part proposed to be stricken out must first be perfected before the motion to strike out is put, and action upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] will be suspended until paragraph 182 is perfected.

Mr. ALLEN. I was just suggesting to the Chair that it would facilitate business by first voting upon the substitute offered by my colleague. I do not know whether or not it is parliamentary, and I do not care anything about its being parliamentary.

Mr. MANDERSON. The vote on the substitute proposed by me will come properly after the text of the paragraph has been perfected.

Mr. ALLEN. If the substitute of my colleague is adopted, that destroys the entire paragraph 182, and renders it absolutely unnecessary to amend it at this time. If the substitute is not adopted, then it strikes me that will be the time to offer an amendment to the paragraph. I suggest to the Senator from New York that the date when the bill shall go into effect has been passed over, and a change of that date is liable to necessitate a change in this paragraph. Why not let both go over and be considered at the same time?

Mr. HILL. I have no objection to its going over to oblige the Senator from Nebraska; but I am not authorized, of course, to consent to it. The date at which this act passes, if it ever passes, is immaterial; because I fix no precise date, I simply say "to take effect upon the passage of this act," whenever that shall be. I am inclined to agree with the Senator, that it would be better, before voting upon my amendment, to vote upon the substitute, if that could be done by unanimous consent. I think that would bring up the question in a better shape.

I ask unanimous consent that the substitute of the Senator from Nebraska be voted upon before my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska shall be voted upon before paragraph 182 is perfected. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think we had better proceed in the ordinary way and follow the usual parliamentary rules in disposing of these questions. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The Secretary will call the roll on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR].

Mr. CAREY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL]. For the present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). Again I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], and vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL] desired me to state, when his name was called, that he is temporarily absent from the Chamber, and is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

Mr. SQUIRE. I desire to say that I voted because of an arrangement of pairs between the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS]. I am ordinarily paired with the Senator from Virginia, and an exchange of pairs having been made, I voted "yea."

Mr. BRICE. I am paired with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—35.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Lodge,	Power,
Allison,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Pugh,
Chandler,	George,	Manderson,	Quay,
Coke,	Hale,	Mitchell, Oregon	Sherman,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Patton,	Shoup,
Davis,	Hill,	Peffer,	Squire,
Dixon,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Teller.
Dolph,	Irby,	Pettigrew,	Washburn.
Dubois,	Jones, Nev.	Platt,

NAYS—32.

Allen,	Gibson,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Bate,	Gordon,	McLaurin,	Smith,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Martin,	Turpie,
Blanchard,	Harris,	Mills,	Vest,
Caffery,	Hunton,	Morgan,	Vilas,
Camden,	Jarvis,	Murphy,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Pasco,	Walsh.

NOT VOTING—18.

Berry,	Carey,	McPherson.	Stewart,
Brice,	Daniel,	Mitchell, Wis.	Wilson,
Butler,	Gray,	Morrill,	Wolcott.
Call,	Hansbrough,	Palmer,
Cameron,	Higgins,	Proctor,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs upon the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, as amended.

Mr. FAULKNER. There is a substitute offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] to that section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest that this amendment comes first, it being to perfect the text.

Mr. FAULKNER. I understood the amendment of the Senator from New York was to strike out the committee's amendment and insert. That has been done.

Mr. FRYE. Now the question is on the substitute.

Mr. MANDERSON. Now, the paragraph being perfected, I call for a vote upon my substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The substitute proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 182, and insert:

That until July 1, 1905, the provisions of the act entitled "An act to reduce revenue, equalize duties, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, authorizing the issue of licenses to produce sugar and for the payment of a bounty to the producers of sugar from beets, sorghum, or sugar cane grown in the United States, or from maple sap produced within the United States, contained in paragraphs 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, and 236 of said act, shall continue in full force and effect.

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to add but a word or two to what was said by the Senator from Nebraska.

When I had occasion to address the Senate before upon this subject, Mr. President, I showed with perfect clearness that whether or not a bounty as a system or practice is better than a duty system or practice, in this particular case the duty proposed in the bill, if laid upon the consumption of sugar in the United States until 1905, at the rate of increase which has gone on during the last ten years, we will say, would cost the people of the United States nearly $400,000,000 more than the bounty now provided by law if that were continued during the same years. That being true, the bounty plan would be an actual saving to the people of the country of nearly $400,000,000. It would cost us that much less than the duty proposed in this bill; and in addition to that, the bounty would terminate in ten years, while the duty would run on perpetually.

I am for free sugar, and when I say that I mean all that the words imply—with or without bounty. But I agree with my political colleague from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] that the Government having agreed to pay the sugar manufacturers a bounty of 2 cents a pound during a certain number of years, that contract ought to be complied with; if the word "contract" is putting it too strong, I will say that the obligation ought to be complied with, that the promise ought to be made good. But whether the committee and the Senate agree to a bounty or not, I want free sugar. I think a great deal more of the poor people of the United States than I do of the sugar-makers. As I have before shown, a duty on sugar bears most heavily on the poor. More than one-half our people own no more than about 5 per cent of the country's wealth.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I simply desire to say, in addition to what I have already stated, that the pending bill throughout its entire length, wherever it has reached an item which might be called of Canadian interest or importance, has seemed to protect it rather than the productions of the United States. We have taken pretty good care of Canada in this bill and in other legislation which has passed the Congress of the United States. We seem to be more in love with our neighbor than in love with ourselves. But Canada makes no mistake. Canada does not legislate for her great rival upon the south of her border; she looks out for herself carefully, persistently.

The Canadian law treating upon this subject of sugar, places a bounty upon the production of beet sugar in that country; and Canada can, beyond question, produce beets of great saccharine strength and give to herself, and perhaps to the world in the way of exportation, in a short time a very large amount of sugar. The new Canadian law gives a bounty of 2 cents a pound upon all sugar produced within Canada for five years. From July 1, 1894, to July 1, 1899, 2 cents per pound is to be paid by the Canadian Government, and from July 1, 1899, to 1904, a bounty of 1 cent per pound is to be paid, making a continuing bounty for ten years of 2 cents a pound for the first five years, and 1 cent a pound for the next five years.

Canada saw the great increase in this country under the incentive that the United States gave to sugar production by the bounty of the McKinley act, and she was quick to take the benefit to herself by the example that we gave her.

I simply ask that, living up to the contract of the Government, and living up to our own interests, watching for ourselves rather than for our neighbor, we should continue the bounty, which will permit this great industry to grow, to the benefit of the entire people of the United States, not to the benefit of a few producers, but the great and substantial benefit of the farmers of the West, giving to them about the only boon which they ask at the hands of Congress in this bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to ask the Senator from Nebraska before he takes his seat—my attention was otherwise occupied for a moment—did I understand him to state that the new Canadian law provided a bounty on sugar?

Mr. MANDERSON. I stated that the Canadian law gives a bounty of 2 cents a pound on beet sugar for the first five years, and a bounty of 1 cent a pound for the next five years.

Mr. GALLINGER. I so understood.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the Senate having very wisely, as it seems to me, on due deliberation and after discussion in the country and elsewhere, concluded to reverse its previous action as to the time when this unwise duty, if imposed, shall take effect, I sincerely trust that the Senate may also conclude upon the vote which we are about to give to reverse its action, and to cling to the bounty on sugar contained in the law of 1890.

It is very evident to me, I think to the Senate, and undoubtedly to the country, that had the two Senators from Louisiana and all the Populist Senators from the beginning adhered to a demand that the contract made in the law of 1890, whether wisely made or unwisely made, should be fulfilled according to its letter, should be fulfilled because it was the pledge of the public faith to the men who invested their capital in this production of sugar, the result would have been that that bounty would have been saved, and the unnecessary imposition of a tax upon sugar of from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000 a year would have been prevented.

It is not too late to undo the wrong which has been done, to reverse the mistake which has been made; and I appeal to the Senators from Louisiana to go back to their original position, before this subject was acted upon by Congress, and to stand for the bounty, the contract with their people, a bounty which, if it is destroyed by the action of this Congress, will never be restored, while it is entirely probable that the duty which is imposed by this act will be repealed within two years.

I also appeal to help reverse this mistake to those who are called the Populist Senators in this Chamber. We were deceived or mistaken before as to the votes of the Populist members of this body. We had reason to suppose that they would stand by the bounty as a contract of the United States made with the producers of sugar. We especially had reason to suppose that the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] would stand by the bounty which had been given by the act of 1890, and which was accomplishing so much good, so much for the prosperity of his people, so much for the development of the sugar industry in his State.

Mr. President, I propose to call the attention of the Senate to the reason why, for one, I was mistaken as to the vote of the junior Senator from Nebraska. I have been an attentive reader of the New York Press, and I now read from the New York Press of February 16, 1894, page 3, column 2, the following dispatch from Washington:

Senator ALLEN, the Populist Senator from Nebraska, authorized the statement this morning that the beet-sugar industry of Nebraska had been called into life by the bounty feature of the McKinley law, and that to place sugar on the free list would mean the extirpation of that industry in his State. He added that he would cheerfully support the bill if it gave protection to sugar, but that the duty on raw and refined sugar must be the same. If the sugar trust were given the slightest advantage, even so much as a mill per pound, he would vote against the bill, and he would carry the other Populists with him.

So, upon reading that paragraph, it was felt that without doubt the vote of the Senator from Nebraska would be against giving any discrimination in favor of the refiners of sugar, and it was hoped that his vote would be given in favor of the retention of the bounty on sugar.

On Monday morning, the 26th of February, the Democrats of the Senate went into caucus. The Washington correspondent of the New York Press of February 27, in writing about this caucus, says:

While this was going on in the caucus Senator ALLEN of Nebraska, the leader of the Populists, stated to the Press correspondent that he would certainly vote against the tariff bill unless it provided for a bounty on domestic sugar. Mr. ALLEN said that he would vote against the bill without a bounty, even if it contained an income tax. He added that he spoke for himself alone and not for other Populist Senators.

Now, Mr. President, it seems to me that here in the interviews which I have read and which are attributed to the Senator from Nebraska in quotation marks in the newspaper from which they were copied by my direction the Senator from Nebraska was on good ground; he was on hopeful ground; he was on just ground, and he was on popular and patriotic ground. He was against any discrimination between raw and refined sugars, and he declared that in asserting that there should be no discrimination he would carry with him the other Populist Senators. The Senator also is recorded as having declared that he would stand by the bounty on domestic sugar and that he would vote against the bill unless the bounty was secured.

The Senator may not remember these interviews; he may say that he was not correctly reported at that time, but the views which the Senator then expressed were wise views, and they were judicious sentiments for his party to adopt. There is now an opportunity to secure the sugar producers of Nebraska the bounty which was promised them by the contract of 1890. The Senate has already reversed its prior action upon the first clause in the sugar schedule, showing that after all wisdom grows by delay and debate; and I sincerely trust that the Senator from Nebraska will conclude to vote in accordance with the sentiments which he was reported in the New York Press as entertaining; that he will accept those sentiments as the sentiments which ought to actuate him, and that we shall have the Populist party on both sides of the Chamber voting in favor of the plighted faith of the United States in the bounty contract and against any discrimination between raw and refined sugar. I await with the utmost confidence the vote of the Populists upon this floor.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I have glanced hastily over the articles read by the Senator from New Hampshire. They seem to be copies of some extracts taken from the New York Press. The Senator from New Hampshire read from what purports to be an extract from the New York Press of February 16, 1894, in the following language—it seems to have been a dispatch from Washington:

Senator ALLEN, the Populist Senator from Nebraska, authorized the statement this morning that the beet-sugar industry of Nebraska had been called into life by the bounty feature of the McKinley law—

I wish to say that Senator ALLEN never authorized a statement of that kind; that he never uttered words to any reporter or to any representative of a newspaper, or any other man, of that character or purport.

And that to place sugar on the free list would mean the extirpation of that industry in his State.

I never used that language, nor do I believe that the placing of sugar upon the taxable list will result in the extinction of the sugar industry in my State. This article says further:

He added that he would cheerfully support the bill if it gave protection to sugar, but that the duty on raw and refined sugar must be the same.

That statement is false in limine. I never said that I would support the bill if it gave protection to sugar, and that I would vote against it if it did not, nor did I ever use the words, "But that the duty on raw and refined sugar must be the same." This article says further:

If the sugar trust were given the slightest advantage, even so much as a mill per pound, he would vote against the bill, and he would carry the other Populists with him.

Mr. President, I never found myself conscious of the egotism of supposing that I had any influence over my Populist colleagues or that I could carry them with me in the accomplishment of anything. The statement, therefore, is untrue. It is simply the result of a disordered or diseased imagination that desired to have an item with which to supply its paper.

A desire to placate Senator ALLEN whose powers of obstruction——

Mr. CHANDLER. The paragraph which the Senator is about to read I did not read. I stopped at that point.

Mr. ALLEN. I think I will read the whole of it.

A desire to placate Senator ALLEN, whose powers of obstruction were so signally exhibited in his record-breaking speech during the fight for unconditional repeal, made the committee fix the same impost upon both sugars.

I suppose that is a deduction of the reporter. It does not profess to come from me.

Mr. President, the entire statement is untrue. I have picked up papers that have been sent me from time to time attributing to me remarks upon the sugar schedule that I never made, that I never thought of, and that I never entertained. I am not blind to the purpose of those publications. They were made for the purpose of indirectly whipping me into the traces of some party or to support some scheme that it was supposed I otherwise would not support. The statement read by the Senator from New Hampshire from the New York Press of February 27, about the Democratic caucus is as follows:

While this was going on in the caucus, Senator ALLEN of Nebraska, the leader of the Populists, stated to the Press correspondent that he would certainly vote against the tariff bill unless it provided for a bounty on domestic sugar.

Mr. President, I never made that statement. What reason should I have to take some beardless, callow youth here, who is reporting for one of these papers and give him my confidence upon this or any other subject? I have no confidence to give to the people of the United States upon this question before it is reached and before the bill is finally formed upon which I am to cast a vote for or against its passage. I am not pursuing these young men to tell them what I am intending to vote, and thus inform the country of my opinions. So the statement here is not true. There is not a word of truth in it.

Mr. ALLEN said that he would vote against the bill without a bounty, even if it contained an income tax.

Mr. ALLEN never said a word of that character nor intimated anything of the kind to anyone.

He added that he spoke for himself alone, and not for other Populist Senators.

I did not add that, because I had no conversation with this correspondent or any other person, and what I do say is always for myself and not for other Populist Senators.

This much for the statements that have been read by the Senator from New Hampshire with reference to my attitude upon the sugar schedule or what the New York Press says it has been.

Mr. President, I believe that as to a new industry that has been developed upon the strength of a bounty given for a given length of time, where that bounty may be said to be the mainspring of its existence, good faith on the part of the Government requires that the promise should be lived up to; but I recognize that the cane industry and the sorghum industry of this country were not developed upon the strength of the bounty. The only sugar industry that has sprung up in this country since the passage of the McKinley act is the beet-sugar industry.

The cane industry was developed years before the act of 1890 was passed, and therefore it could not be claimed in any sense that it is entitled to any special consideration at the hands of Congress. As to the beet-sugar industry, that was developed in a certain measure—mark you I do not say that it was developed upon the strength of the McKinley act, and that alone, for I do not believe it was, but it can be said to have been developed to a certain extent upon the strength of that promise among others—I believe that the Government ought to live up to its promise. I have no doubt in my own mind that the Government ought to live up to that promise. But, sir, I recognize the fact that the Congress has the power to repeal the bounty act. I recognize the fact that the bounty system in the United States in all of its ramifications is doomed.

In what little I have said to those who have talked with me upon this subject I have said that I recognized the fact that the bounty system of this Government is doomed to death. The people will not tolerate it. Congress can not sustain it any length of time and sustain itself.

Therefore, when the substitute of my colleague was offered in the Committee of the Whole, I voted against it. I shall vote against it again. When my colleague introduced an amendment looking to the gradual extinction of the bounty, one-tenth each year, I voted for it. If it is offered by him or by any other Senator in this Chamber, I shall vote for it again.

When it was offered to substitute 1 cent instead of 2 cents a pound and extinction in that form promised, I voted for it and I shall vote for it again. But I desire to say that I know of no reason why sugar should not be honestly and legitimately taxed for revenue purposes. The feeling that sugar should not be taxed, that there is something sacred about it, that it should not be taxed for revenue, I do not entertain.

I am perfectly willing to submit the question to the good judgment of the American people, that if a certain amount of revenue must be raised for purposes of conducting our Government and to pay our national indebtedness, there is no more reason why a portion of it should not be raised upon sugar than a portion should be raised upon clothing or upon other form of property or by any other methods of taxation.

The sentiment seems to have gone out—it prevails in this Chamber to some extent—that it is extremely unpopular to talk about a tax on sugar. If that makes a man unpopular, I prefer to be unpopular. I am not afraid to face the American people when you appeal to their good sense and their good judgment on this subject, and say that a ratable portion of the taxes should be raised upon sugar. They will approve this when they understand it. They will understand that if this Government must raise a certain amount of revenue it is just as proper to put a reasonable tax upon sugar as it is to put a reasonable tax upon a hat, a coat, a pair of shoes, or any other necessary article of consumption.

I may say to my friend from New Hampshire who has just spoken, that I am not to be induced to vote contrary to my judgment or to cast a vote I ought not to by means of indirect pressure in newspapers or by any other means, and whenever the Senator wants to reach me he wants to reach me by words of kindness, and not by indirect pressure and indirect threat.

Mr. President, I do not like the sugar schedule that is in this bill. I propose to move to strike it out and to substitute one which I have sent to the desk to be read, and I should like to have the Secretary read that amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The amendment will be read in the absence of objection.

The SECRETARY. Strike out paragraph 182½, and insert as paragraph 182½ the following:

All sugars, tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, testing by the polariscope not above 89 degrees, shall pay a duty of 1 cent per pound, and for every additional degree or fraction of a degree above 80 and not above 90 degrees shown by the polariscope test, shall pay one-hundredth of a cent per pound additional, and above 90 and not above 92 degrees, or every additional degree or fraction of a degree shown by the polariscope test, shall pay a duty of two one-hundredths of a cent per pound additional; and molasses testing not above 56 degrees by the polariscope shall pay a duty of 2 cents per gallon, and molasses testing above 56 degrees shall pay a duty of 4 cents per gallon: Provided, That the provisions of the treaty of commercial reciprocity concluded between the United States of America and the King of the Hawaiian Islands on the 13th day of January, 1875, as well as the provisions of any act of Congress heretofore passed for the execution of the same be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided also, That for the year 1894 manufacturers of sugar from beets, cane, or sorghum grown in the United States, shall be paid a bounty of one and sixty-one hundredths of a cent per pound and no more.

Mr. ALLEN. There are three vicious features in the sugar schedule of this bill. The first is that portion which I will read, on page 41:

And upon all sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color and upon all sugars which have been discolored there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of one-eighth of 1 cent per pound in addition to the said duty of 40 per cent ad valorem.

There is not the slightest reason for that provision. There is no reason why the sugar refining companies of the United States should receive any protection. Yet I am confident that that provision will stand in the bill. Mr. Theodore Havemeyer testified before a committee of Congress a few years ago that if every form of protection was removed from sugar the American sugar refiners could refine sugar against the world and make money out of it, a confession—and we know it to be true—that the American sugar refiners do not need protection; and when this feature of the sugar schedule was placed in this bill it was a bowing to the demand of the sugar trust or obeying their representatives in this branch of Congress.

I have been told that this bill can not be passed with this provision out. I have also been told that there are Senators in this Chamber who will vote against the bill if the feature in the interest of the sugar trust is removed from it. It does not seem possible that the sugar trust owns the vote of any Senator. It does not seem possible that the claim that the bill will be defeated unless the sugar trust has protection can be true. It does not seem to me that any man in this body has so far forgotten his obligation to the people of the country as to bring about a result of that character. Therefore, this portion of the bill ought to go out. The portion of the bill which gives the differential tax of 1 mill, which is also for the benefit of the sugar trust, should go out for a like reason. I read this proviso:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to abrogate or in any manner impair or affect the provisions of the treaty of commercial reciprocity concluded between the United States and the King of the Hawaiian Islands on the 30th day of January, 1875, or the provisions of any act of Congress heretofore passed for the execution of the same.

This should go out of the bill. The testimony taken before the investigating committee appointed by this Chamber shows that the American sugar trust and Claus Spreckels own jointly the Western Sugar Refining Company, at San Francisco; and that at the same time Mr. Spreckels is a $10,000,000 shareholder in the American sugar trust. Then they are partners in the American Sugar Refining Company, and also in the Western Refining Company. The evidence also shows that 140,000 tons of Hawaiian sugar are annually brought to San Francisco and there refined and sold throughout the extreme Western States.

Mr. MANDERSON. Will my colleague permit an interruption?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. MANDERSON. I quite agree with him as to the Hawaiian treaty if this schedule shall pass as it passed in Committee of the Whole. It is practically giving one cent a pound bounty on all sugar produced in the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. ALDRICH. At least a cent.

Mr. MANDERSON. Perhaps more than a cent; it is at least a cent, as suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island. But I notice in the amendment proposed by my colleague that he seems to adopt the language of the present schedule as though he desired to continue the Hawaiian treaty. I may be mistaken in its reading.

Mr. ALLEN. If my colleague will look at the schedule that I have offered he will see that it directly repeals the Hawaiian treaty.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am very glad to hear it. I thought it followed the language of the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. No, sir; it directly repeals it. Now, this sugar trust puts 140,000 tons of sugar annually into this country which it refines at the Western Refining Company, San Francisco. Under the treaty with Hawaii that sugar comes in free, and since 1875. This bill proposes to extend the treaty. It proposes to admit all sugars imported from other countries and other islands, and impose a duty on them for revenue purposes. Why not repeal this treaty and put it upon Hawaiian sugars as well for revenue purposes? Why thus permit 140,000 tons of sugar to come into this country absolutely free of duty? Is it not fair to put it upon an exact equality with the sugar that comes from Germany, France, Belgium, and other countries? Is it not a practical fraud upon the revenues of the country to suffer this sugar to come here duty free?

Mr. President, I will vote for an honest duty upon sugar. I do not entertain any of the sentiment that sugar can not be properly taxed, but an advantage should not be given to the American sugar trust to bring sugar from the Hawaiian Islands into this country free of duty when sugars from the balance of the world that are brought here pay duty. Not only that, but I am satisfied that sugars can be shipped from other countries by way of the Hawaiian Islands into this country, claiming that they are Hawaiian sugars when they are not, and by such shipment a fraud can be committed upon the revenues of the Government.

Mr. President, that portion of the sugar schedule ought to be stricken out. You can not go to the American people and justify the introduction of a provision of that kind. It may be that the sugar trust has power to remain in this bill. It may have power to defeat the bill unless the committee comply with their request, but I believe when the question is put to the Senate as to repealing the Hawaiian treaty it will be done.

Mr. President, this bill is wrong in another respect. It is wrong in so far as it introduces the Dutch color test instead of the polariscopic test. I am satisfied that the only way to prevent fraud on the Treasury Department and on the revenues of the Government is by introducing the polariscopic test in place of the Dutch standard. I do not propose to now go specifically into the facts that lead me to believe that frauds will be committed and can be committed on the revenues under this bill. In 1889 it was found necessary, in order to prevent fraud, to introduce the polariscopic test, notwithstanding the then law provided for the Dutch color test.

The rankest kind of frauds were committed. The Government was defrauded of hundreds of thousands of dollars by the introduction and application of the Dutch standard. The senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], at that time Secretary of the Treasury, was compelled in order to preserve the revenue from frauds to introduce the polariscopic test.

Mr. President, these three provisions are in my judgment fatal to this bill. These three things ought to be stricken out of the bill. The amendment which I offer in regard to the polariscopic test in place of the Dutch standard test takes the sugar refiners' interest out of this bill. It repeals the Hawaiian treaty and makes a direct tax upon sugar, every mill of which goes into the Treasury.

Mr. President, when the people of this country understand that the bill has been framed in a manner that puts a light and reasonable tax upon sugar, of every dollar of which they get the benefit by its being applied to the discharge of the national indebtedness and the current expenses of the Government, they will be satisfied.

So far as the sugar industry in my own State is concerned, I say that the policy of a bounty can not continue. The time is speedily coming when it must go out of existence, and the only policy that can be permanent, the only policy that can be of substantial benefit, is the incidental protection arising to that industry from a reasonable tax imposed upon sugar.

Mr. President, I do not suppose it is possible to continue the sugar bounty. I will vote for a gradual extinction of the sugar bounty because I believe that it is due to this new industry. I will vote for a half reduction, as offered by my colleague the other day; but I will not vote for this amendment, from the fact that I know that the entire system is doomed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

Mr. MANDERSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HILL. That is a substitute which restores the McKinley duty.

Mr. ALDRICH. It restores the existing law so far as the bounty is concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] for the day, and I vote "nay."

Mr. McPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRICE. I am paired with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. SQUIRE (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted "yea," because I understood the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] was paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS]. If that arrangement still exists I will let my vote stand. If not I will withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Washington that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS] has voted.

Mr. SQUIRE. Then I shall be obliged to withdraw my vote.

Mr. MURPHY (after having voted in the negative). Has the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. MURPHY. Then I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Lodge,	Platt,
Allison,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Power,
Carey,	Hale,	Manderson,	Quay,

Butler,	Gray,	Proctor,	Wolcott.
Call,	Hoar,	Pugh,
Cameron,	McPherson,	Squire,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANDERSON. I offer an amendment as a substitute for paragraph 182.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

182. That until July 1, 1900, the provisions of the act entitled "An act to reduce revenue, equalize duties, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, authorizing the issue of licenses to produce sugar and for the payment of a bounty to the producers of sugar from beets, sorghum, and sugar cane grown in the United States or from maple sap produced within the United States contained in paragraphs 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, and 236 of said act shall continue in full force and effect, and thereafter the bounty provided to be paid in said act shall be reduced 25 per cent each year until it shall cease and determine.

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire to state that the amendment continues the payment of the bounty of the McKinley law until the year 1900; and thereafter, for the remaining four years of the period, it reduces it 25 per cent each year.

Mr. PEFFER. Each year?

Mr. MANDERSON. Each year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. MANDERSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and taken.

Mr, McPHERSON. I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. CULLOM (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I voted without noticing that he is absent from the Chamber. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. SQUIRE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. He is not present and I understand that if he were here he would vote "nay." I voted "yea." I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. BRICE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] which, if satisfactory to the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE], I will transfer to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. SQUIRE. That arrangement is satisfactory.

Mr. BRICE. I vote "nay."

Mr. SQUIRE. I vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY. I desire to announce for the day the pair of my colleague [Mr. CAMERON] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 37; as follows:

YEAS—33.

Aldrich,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Quay,
Allison,	Hale,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Carey,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Oregon	Shoup,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Patton,	Squire,

NOT VOTING—15.

Berry,	Cullom,	McPherson,	Stewart,
Butler,	Daniel,	Martin,	Wilson,
Call,	Gordon,	Morrill,	Wolcott.
Cameron,	Gray,	Proctor,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANDERSON. I offer an amendment as a substitute for paragraph 182. I will state, before it is read, that it is a diminishing bounty of one-tenth each year for the remainder of the term of the McKinley act, so far as it relates to the bounty. I call the particular attention of my colleague to the fact that this seems to be the amendment for which his heart yearns, and gives a deduction of one-tenth each year. I hope it will receive his vote.

Mr. ALLEN. My colleague, when we considered the bill as in Committee of the Whole, offered two amendments, for which I propose to vote when they are offered in the Senate. One of those was a diminishing bounty of 10 per cent each year.

Mr. MANDERSON. This is it.

Mr. ALLEN. And the other was a bounty of 1 cent a pound instead of 2. For those two amendments I shall vote to-day as I did then. As to the others I shall vote "nay."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out paragraph 182 and insert in lieu thereof:

That the bounties authorized to be paid to producers of sugar by section 231 of the act entitled "An act to reduce revenue, equalize duties, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, shall be reduced one-tenth part of their respective amounts, as prescribed in said act, each year, beginning with July 1, 1895, and extending to July 1, 1905, inclusive, and shall thereafter cease and determine, and with this modification paragraphs 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, and 236 of said act shall continue in full force and effect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

Mr. MANDERSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SQUIRE. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], as I before announced. My pair has been transferred to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], so that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE] and I may both vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PROCTOR. Has the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am paired with the Senator from Florida. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to change my vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 37; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Lodge,	Quay,
Allen,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Allison,	Hale,	Mitchell, Oregon	Shoup,
Carey,	Hansbrough,	Patton,	Squire,

NOT VOTING—14.

Berry,	Cullom,	McPherson,	Wilson,
Butler,	Daniel,	Martin,	Wolcott.
Call,	Gordon,	Morrill,
Cameron,	Gray,	Proctor,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANDERSON. I give notice that some time during the pendency of the bill I shall move to reconsider the vote by which this amendment was lost. I have one more amendment in the nature of a substitute for paragraph 182. The amendment is a continuance of the McKinley bounty act until 1905, the date of the expiration of its term giving a bounty of 1 cent a pound to sugar produced from beets and sorghum cane only.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out paragraph 182 and insert in lieu thereof:

182. That until July 1, 1905, the provisions of the act entitled "An act to reduce revenue, equalize duties, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, authorizing the issuance of licenses to produce sugar and for the payment of a bounty to the producers of sugar from beets, sorghum, or sugar cane grown in the United States, or from maple sap produced in the United States contained in paragraphs 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, and 236 of said act, shall continue in full force and effect: Provided, That the said bounty so provided to be paid shall be but 1 cent per pound and shall be paid to the producers in the United States of sugar from beets and sorghum only.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I withhold my vote in his absence.

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TELLER (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to inquire whether the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. TELLER. Then I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—32.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1759) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 307) granting a pension to Earnest C. Emerson; and

A bill (S. 920) granting a pension to Mary Brown, of Berlin, Vt.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 953) to increase the pension of Mary P. Broughton;

A bill (H. R. 1110) to correct the military record of Calvin Daniel;

A bill (H. R. 1461) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Andrew L. Grugett as a former member of Company E, Sixth Tennessee Cavalry, in the war of the rebellion, and to grant him an honorable discharge therefrom;

A bill (H. R. 2108) to perfect the military record of Warren Alonzo Alden;

A bill (H. R. 2726) to remove the charge of desertion standing against the name of Edward J. Butler;

A bill (H. R. 3033) granting a pension to Amanda J. Lane;

A bill (H. R. 3065) to increase the pension of James Lane;

A bill (H. R. 3147) granting an honorable discharge to Wilson Kale;

A bill (H. R. 6902) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Susie Conway.

AMENDMENTS TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege. During the session on Friday I submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by me, which have been printed as documents, but the fact of their presentation was not noticed in the RECORD. I ask that the RECORD be corrected in this respect or, at least, that the amendments appear in to-morrow's RECORD as having been introduced to-day. One amendment is in relation to the leasing of lands held by Indians in severalty, and the other is in relation to carrying out agreements with some Indian tribes. They are amendments intended to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the order requested by the Senator from Washington will be granted. The Chair understands that the amendments have been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and printed.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The Secretary read paragraph 182½, as follows:

182½. On and after January 1, 1895, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all sugars and on all tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, a duty of 40 per cent ad valorem, and upon all sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color and upon all sugars which have been discolored there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of one-eighth of 1 cent per pound in addition to the said duty of 40 per cent ad valorem; and all sugars, tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete or concentrated molasses, which are imported from or are the product of any country which at the time the same are exported therefrom pays, directly or indirectly, a bounty on the export thereof, shall pay a duty of one-tenth of 1 cent per pound in addition to the foregoing rates: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to abrogate or in any manner impair or affect the provisions of the treaty of commercial reciprocity concluded between the United States and the King of the Hawaiian Islands on the 30th day of January, 1875, or the provisions of any act of Congress heretofore passed for the execution of the same. That on and after January 1, 1895, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on molasses testing above 40° and not above 56° polariscope, a duty of 2 cents per gallon; if testing above 56° polariscope, a duty of 4 cents per gallon.

Mr. KYLE. I move to strike out from the beginning of line 5 down to and including the word "rates," in line 15. This includes the one-eighth of a cent on sugar above 16 Dutch standard, and also the discriminating duty of one-tenth of a cent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out beginning with line 5 down to and including the word "rates" in line 15, as follows:

And upon all sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color and upon all sugars which have been discolored there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of one-eighth of 1 cent per pound in addition to the said duty of 40 per cent ad valorem; and all sugars, tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete or concentrated molasses, which are imported from or are the product of any country which at the time the same are exported therefrom pays, directly or indirectly, a bounty on the export thereof, shall pay a duty of one-tenth of 1 cent per pound in addition to the foregoing rates.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. HILL and KYLE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. LODGE. I desire merely to make a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to offer an amendment to the first line of the paragraph. I do not understand that I am debarred from taking up the paragraph further on.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. KYLE. In justification of the amendment I will state that there may be some excuse at the present time for placing a duty of 40 per cent ad valorem upon raw sugar, but there is to-day absolutely no excuse in the eyes of the American people for placing one-eighth of a cent on sugars above 16 Dutch standard for the benefit of the refiners. I believe here that it might be safely predicted that it means a death blow politically to the man who will cast his vote in favor of retaining this duty of one-eighth of 1 cent. I believe it will mean the death blow of the party which passes the bill with the duty of one-eighth of a cent retained in it.

Since we had this portion of the bill under consideration before it has been stated by those who are interested in the sugar trust that they can refine their sugar to-day without the one-eighth of a cent, and therefore if we now give it to them it is an absolute gift from the pockets of the American people. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will carry and that the duty of one-eighth of a cent will be stricken out.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. President, when the bill was in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole the argument upon this proposition was had in extenso. The statement just now made by the Senator from South Dakota was then refuted, as I hope to refute it now. It is not true in any sense that this one-eighth differential duty between raw and refined sugars is in the interest solely of what he calls the sugar trust. I showed in the former debate upon this proposition that we raised in Louisiana during the last year 600,000,000 pounds of sugar, and that about 85 per cent of it was centrifugal sugars, and from one-half to three-quarters was refined sugars in the sense that they were sugars testing at and above 16 Dutch standard in color. The one-eighth differential duty is directly in the interest of the sugar producers of Louisiana and of the beet sugar producers of the United States.

It must be known to the Senator from South Dakota that all sugars made from beets, or nearly all, are refined sugars, and when I tell him that of the 600,000,000 pounds of cane sugars raised last year in Louisiana, about two-thirds were refined sugars, then it must come home to the Senator that the one-eighth of a cent specific duty is in the interest of the sugar producers and manufacturers of the United States and not altogether in the interest of the trust.

Mr. KYLE. I will state to the Senator from Louisiana that the beet-sugar manufacturers and refiners of the West do not care for the duty of one-eighth of a cent.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will inform the Senator from South Dakota that I have been in communication directly, in person, with some of the largest beet-sugar manufacturers, and I have yet to hear from one of them that they care nothing for the one-eighth of a cent differential duty.

Mr. KYLE. I will state that I also have been in communication with them. They are willing to take it. Of course they will take it if you give it to them, but they say they can get along very nicely without it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. That is begging the question. The Senator said the duty of one-eighth of a cent was placed in the bill in the interest solely of the trust, and now when that is denied and the contrary is shown, he takes refuge behind the statement that the beet sugar manufacturers of the United States can get along without it, but would like to have it. Of course they would like to have it.

The one-eighth differential duty between raw and refined sugars is in the interest of a sound public policy, for it is an encouragement held out to the sugar-producers of the United States to make refined sugars instead of raw sugars.

Mr. President, after this question was fully argued in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, the Senate agreed to maintain the one-eighth of a cent differential, and I trust the action of the Senate in open Senate will be in consonance with the action of the Senate at that time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I can convince the honorable Senator from Louisiana that he is mistaken in his proposition. The paragraph as it will stand if the amendment is adopted will still give the sugar-raisers of Louisiana the protection of 40 per cent ad valorem as against all sugars which come into competition with Louisiana sugars. As the refined sugar is worth 1 cent a pound more, or nearly 40 per cent of the value of ordinary sugar, he gets the benefit of the 40 per cent on all refined sugars brought into this country in competition with Louisiana sugar or sugar produced from beets.

The striking out of the next proposition will not help him at all, so far as the Louisiana makers are concerned. The one-eighth per cent is only intended as a discriminating duty in favor of the refiner in this country, and it is an addition to the 40 per cent upon all sugars that are brought into competition from abroad with the sugars of Louisiana. Therefore, if raw sugar is worth 2½ cents a pound, then the duty is about 1 cent a pound, but if refined sugars are brought into this country, they are worth 3½ cents a pound, and the duty of 40 per cent is equivalent to the protection to the Louisiana planters of 1½ cents a pound. So that if the Senator will rely only upon the 40 per cent ad valorem duty, he will have an ample protection for the refined sugars of Louisiana.

There is nothing in the Senator's argument. The one-eighth of a cent is the bounty paid to a trust in the United States which has already been exposed here to the condemnation of the people of the United States, and it inures to their benefit only. The duty of 40 per cent already in the bill, and which was retained in the bill under the proposition of the honorable Senator who offered the amendment, is a protection to the sugar interest, while the one-eighth is a protection which will only inure to the process of refining by a single corporation in the United States. It can not in the slightest degree benefit the maker of sugar in Louisiana. He gets the full benefit of 40 per cent on all sugars, whether refined or unrefined, which come into competition with him, and the bounty given herein is not intended to nor can it operate in favor of the Louisiana sugar planter. He is already amply protected by the first clause of the paragraph. This is only a special discrimination in favor of a special interest, which we should repudiate rather than approve by our legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask a division of the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks a division of the question. The first clause of the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out in paragraph 182½, page 41, after the words "ad valorem" in line 4:

And upon all sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color and upon all sugars which have been discolored there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of one-eighth of 1 cent per pound in addition to the said duty of 40 per cent ad valorem.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the first question to be taken, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. SQUIRE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. By an arrangement with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], who is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], I have transferred my pair to the Senator from Colorado, so that the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Colorado will stand paired. I shall not again announce this arrangement during the day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TELLER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY]. My pair has been transferred for the day to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], so that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] and I may vote. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] is not present, and I shall not vote. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Aldrich,	Dubois,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew,
Allen,	Frye,	Kyle,	Platt,
Allison,	Gallinger,	Lodge,	Power,

Berry,	Daniel,	McPherson,	Stewart,
Butler,	Gordon,	Morrill,	Teller,
Call,	Hansbrough,	Palmer,	Wilson,
Cameron,	Harris,	Proctor,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALDRICH. Now, let the second branch of the amendment be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The second part of the proposition will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "ad valorem" in line 9, on page 41, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "rates," in line 15, as follows:

and all sugars, tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete or concentrated molasses, which are imported from or are the product of any country which at the time the same are exported therefrom pays, directly or indirectly, a bounty on the export thereof, shall pay a duty of one-tenth of 1 cent per pound in addition to the foregoing rates.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not intend to delay the Senate by calling for the yeas and nays, or even by asking for a division; but I wish to enter my protest, which has been heretofore entered once or twice, against this provision in favor of the Hawaiian Islands.

There was no reason of public policy which demanded the enormous payment that has been made for the benefit of the Hawaiian Islands to induce the production of sugar. The United States has derived no benefit whatever from it. We have paid $55,000,000 to the Hawaiian Islands. I believe that provision contained in the treaty was wrong in the beginning, it is wrong now, and never should be allowed until the Hawaiian Islands become a part of the United States of America.

There is no reason of public policy, there is no reason whatever that can be given in favor of a discrimination to one foreign country as against all other foreign countries. We have no right to give to foreign people, who are 2,000 miles distant from us on the Pacific Ocean, so enormous a sum as we have already paid to the Hawaiian Islands for the privilege of introducing sugar free from those islands. Fifty-five million dollars has already gone, and every year hereafter there will be a loss to the Treasury of the United States by this provision of from five to ten million dollars, without any good ever coming to us or any good being likely to come to us by reason of it.

Though I shall, perhaps, vote for this provision as amended, I simply wish to file my protest against this proposition.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I desire to enter a protest against the protest of the distinguished Senator from Ohio. We made a reciprocity treaty with the Sandwich Islands; made it with our eyes wide open; we lived under it for ten years; we obtained under it all of the trade of the islands, and in addition to that all of the carrying trade of the islands, and the Senator from Ohio does not give one cent or one mill of credit to that which the Sandwich Islands gave us for this provision in their favor.

It is the only provision that was worth anything to the Sandwich Islands when that reciprocity treaty was made; it is the only provision that we gave them that is worth anything to-day, and when the last reciprocity treaty came before the United States Senate, and came before the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, the Senator from Ohio joined with the Senator from Vermont in placing in that reciprocity treaty by amendment a provision that Pearl Island Harbor, the most important, the most available, the securest harbor in all the Pacific Ocean, should be ceded by those little islands to this great country, and they were compelled to accept it.

They accepted it; the cession was made, and now the Senator from Ohio says that nothing is given to us in return for this exemption from the duty on sugar. Why, Mr. President, suppose the Senator's view should obtain in the United States Senate to-day, what condition would this Republic be in? We have just had an inspection made of Pearl Harbor and of the entrance to it by United States engineers, and they report that the entire mouth of it can be opened to vessels drawing 30 feet of water, at an expense of not over $200,000.

What does the Senator suppose England would give to-day for that harbor if these islands should transfer it to her—the paltry sum of $5,000,000 a year? She would give $50,000,000 a year to have Pearl Island ceded to her. Now, suppose we take from the Sandwich Islands all we ever gave for her trade and for this harbor, in what condition are we left? Will we maintain, will the Senator from Ohio maintain, or undertake to say that that was a cession complete, that Pearl Island harbor is ours, and that they can not retire from that cession?

That was the view of the Senator when the amendment was made; it was the view of the distinguished Senator from Vermont that it was a complete cession; but our Secretary of State, in replying to an inquiry made in writing by the then minister from the Sandwich Islands, declared that it was a cession that went pari passu with the treaty and no further. Could we undertake to maintain in the eyes of the world that it was a cession completed, that it was ours, when we had deprived, under the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, the Sandwich Islands from all the benefits received for that cession? How long could we stand in the eyes of the world and make that claim?

Mr. President, I enter a protest against the protest of the Senator from Ohio as solemn as his.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, a few moments since I was called from the Senate and failed to hear the ring of the bell indicating that the yeas and nays were to be taken, and during my absence there was a yea-and-nay vote, I understand, upon the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE]. I simply want to put on record that if I had been present I should have voted "nay."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I should vote "yea" if the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], with whom I am paired, were present.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. RANSOM. I announce my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If he were present I should vote "nay," and he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Aldrich,	Dubois,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew,
Allen,	Frye,	Kyle,	Platt,
Allison,	Gallinger,	Lodge,	Power,
Carey,	Hawley,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Chandler,	Higgins,	Mitchell, Oregon	Shoup,

NOT VOTING—18.

Berry,	Daniel,	Manderson,	Stewart,
Butler,	Gray,	Morrill,	Wilson,
Call,	Hale,	Palmer,	Wolcott.
Cameron,	Hansbrough,	Proctor,
Cullom,	McPherson,	Ransom,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KYLE. I have one more amendment to offer, and then I shall be through. In line 22, on page 41, after the word "that," I move to strike out "on and after January 1, 1895," and insert "upon the passage of this act."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 22, on page 41, after the word "that," it is proposed to strike out "on and after January 1, 1895," and insert "upon the passage of this act;" so as to read:

That upon the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid on molasses testing above 40°," etc.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. An amendment having been made to paragraph 182 that these provisions shall go into effect after the passage of this act, it would seem to be proper that all the provisions should take effect at the same time. If this amendment is agreed to, there will be an amendment necessary to insert on page 40, line 25, to the same effect. I move that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is that proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I accept the Senator's amendment, or I suggest that he modify his amendment by putting in mine.

Mr. KYLE. I will accept that. It was an oversight. I had intended to include both in the same amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. After the word "rates," in line 15, on page 41, I move to insert what I send to the desk, which has been suggested by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 15, on page 41, after the word "rates," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the importer of sugar produced in a foreign country the government of which grants such direct or indirect bounties may be relieved from this additional duty under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe in case said importer produces a certificate of said government that no indirect bounty has been received from said sugar in excess of the tax collected upon the beet or cane from which it was produced, and that no direct bounty has been or shall be paid.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. After the word "Provided," at the end of line 15, on page 41, I move to insert the word "further."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move to strike out all of section 182½ as far as the proviso just inserted by the committee, coming in in line 15, and to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of paragraph 182½ down to and including the word "rates," in line 15, on page 41, and insert:

All sugars, tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses testing by the polariscope not above 80° shall pay a duty of 1 cent per pound, and for every additional degree or fraction of a degree above 80° and not above 90° shown by the polariscope test, shall pay one one-hundredth of a cent per pound additional, and above 90° and not above 98°, for every additional degree or fraction of a degree, shown by the polariscope test, shall pay a duty of two one-hundredths of a cent per pound additional, and upon all sugar testing above 98° by polariscope test, or above No. 16 by the Dutch standard in color, there shall be levied and collected a duty of one-eighth of 1 cent per pound in addition to the duty imposed upon sugars testing above 98°.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this amendment proposes a graded specific duty instead of the ad valorem duties now standing in the bill. They are the duties first reported by the Finance Committee in the first draft of the tariff bill that they presented to the Senate.

The great struggle of the refiners of sugar and of the representatives of the sugar trust was to beat these specific duties and get in their place ad valorem duties. Some of them testified that that ad valorem duty did not of itself give them a differential; others testified that it did; but there is no manner of question that every effort was put forth by the refiners of sugar to secure ad valorem instead of specific rates as reported from the committee.

They were resisted in that attempt by the producers of raw sugar. The producers of Louisiana and the beet-sugar producers favored specific rates. These ad valorems were inserted in place of the specifics on the representation of the refiners of sugar.

I desire, Mr. President, simply to obtain a vote on that direct question, whether the Senate will take the graded specific rates as first reported by the Finance Committee, or whether they will substitute for them ad valorem rates, demanded by the refiners, and by no one else.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, in order that my vote on this amendment may not be misconstrued, I repeat that I am in favor of free sugar and am opposed to all duties on sugar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DANIEL. I was about to vote, but I understand an arrangement had been made whilst I was out of the Chamber temporarily that I should stand paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], and, being so informed, I decline to vote.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 44; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Hoar,	Power,
Allen,	Dubois,	Jones, Nev.	Proctor,
Allison,	Frye,	McMillan,	Sherman,

Cameron,	Lodge,	Platt,	Wolcott.
Daniel,	McPherson,	Stewart,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 182½, on page 41, line 15, it is proposed to strike out all after the word "rates," down to and including the word "same," in line 22, and insert:

That the treaty concluded January 13, 1875, and proclaimed June 3, 1875, and the convention extending the duration of said treaty concluded December 6, 1884, between the United States and the King of the Hawaiian Islands, is hereby abrogated, repealed, and annulled, to take effect one year after the passage of this act.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, this treaty was concluded in 1875 to continue for seven years. After the expiration of seven years, it could be abrogated on twelve months' notice. In 1884 the treaty was continued for seven years more, with the same provision in regard to annulling the treaty. Therefore, upon twelve months' notice this treaty can be annulled by the United States. I can think of no argument which would justify us in continuing it. It is paying a bonus to the people of the Sandwich Islands of over $4,000,000 a year, and it is taxing the American people to do it.

There is not an American laborer upon those islands, and there are only 636 Americans, or people of American descent, who are registered voters. The remainder of the population is composed of natives, Japanese, Chinese, and Portuguese. They are contract laborers, almost as low as if not lower in the scale of civilization than slave labor.

I can see no reason why the people of my State or the people of any State of this Union should be taxed for the purpose of furnishing the people of those islands more profitable employment.

Mr. KYLE. If the Senator will allow me, I will tell him that if he will refer to the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], who sits within a very few feet of him, that Senator will give him a hundred arguments within ten minutes why that treaty should not be abrogated.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to hear from my colleague. Perhaps he will give me the reasons.

Mr. KYLE. I have plenty of reasons in my own mind why the treaty should not be abrogated.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to hear them stated.

Mr. KYLE. The reasons have been already prepared by the Senator from California, who will give them to the Senate.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The total number of Americans upon those islands—men, women, and children—is less than 2,000. The Portuguese who are there are not from Europe, but they are from the islands of the sea. They are partially black, and are very low in the scale of civilization.

This treaty has already cost the people of this country over $50,000,000, and we have derived no benefit whatever from it. Senators say we will secure a valuable harbor. Pearl Harbor is 2,100 miles from our coast, 4,800 miles from the coast of Asia, and 4,000 miles from Australia. There are no coal mines upon those islands, and the harbor is absolutely useless and worthless to anybody.

The commerce of the Pacific Ocean does not pass those islands, except that which goes to Australia. If we wish to destroy that commerce, it is the commerce of Great Britain from Vancouver, and we can destroy it from Puget Sound, from our own coast, where we can resupply our ships from our own coal mines; but if we undertake to send ships to those islands we must carry the coal there, and then we are in no position to attack any country after sailing such a distance, for we should be out of coal. So I can see no reason whatever for continuing this wonderful benefit to those people, a population entirely worthless, while taking away from our own people the bounty upon sugar.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to place before the Senate the exact historical facts with regard to our acquisition of a coaling station in the Hawaiian Islands and the treaty relations we have with those islands. By a convention concluded on the 30th of January, 1875, we stipulated:

For and in consideration of the rights and privileges granted by His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands in the next succeeding article of this convention, and as an equivalent therefor, the United States of America hereby agree to admit all the articles named in the following schedule, the same being the growth and manufacture or produce of the Hawaiian Islands, into all the ports of the United States free of duty.

Among those articles was sugar, then produced in a comparatively small quantity in the Hawaiian Islands. That treaty, containing reciprocal provisions, was to expire at the end of seven years, at any time on the demand of either government. At the end of the seven years, when the treaty had expired, an effort was made to extend it seven years longer. That was contested severely in the Senate Chamber, and there was much opposition to the extension of the treaty, because the statistics showed that we had then lost $26,000,000 more than we had gained during the seven years by the free admission into our country of sugar and other articles. Then a new treaty was made, entirely separate and distinct from the old treaty, and that treaty contains this stipulation:

Mr. DOLPH. When was that made?

Mr. SHERMAN. In 1884. It provides:

Whereas a convention was concluded between the United States of America and His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands on the 30th day of January, 1875, concerning commercial reciprocity.

Then follow the recitals about the provisions of the treaty. Then it proceeds:

The high contracting parties agree that the time fixed for the duration of the said convention shall be definitely extended for a term of seven years from the date of the exchange of ratifications hereof, and further, until the expiration of twelve months after either of the high contracting parties shall give notice to the other of its wish to terminate the same, each of the high contracting parties being at liberty to give such notice to the other at the end of the said term of seven years or at any time thereafter.

When this treaty was before the Senate there was great opposition to it for the reasons I have stated. Therefore, in order to find a consideration to be paid by the Hawaiian Islands to the United States for this enormous bounty, the Senator from Vermont, if I remember correctly, offered this additional consideration; and, in my judgment, the second treaty would have been beaten at the time it was pending, but for the provision he offered. Here is the provision, and here is the absolute grant in perpetuity, according to the legal language of the grant, which gives us these islands for these purposes as one of the considerations for extending the treaty seven years more:

His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands grants to the Government of the United States the exclusive right to enter the harbor of Pearl River, in the island of Oahu, and to establish and maintain there a coaling and repair station for the use of vessels of the United States, and to that end the United States may improve the entrance to said harbor and do all other things needful to the purpose aforesaid.

Here is an absolute, unconditional, unqualified grant that has been paid for by $23,000,000 already, and we agreed to extend the term seven years longer. Thus we have given a double consideration for this right. I have no doubt the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] will estimate the value of that privilege far more than I, but certainly we have already paid a large sum, and we have agreed to pay another sum equivalent to twenty-five or twenty-six million dollars, and we now possess by virtue of this treaty an exclusive right to enter upon and improve that harbor.

The provisions of the treaty as to the seven years applied only to the admission of articles entered into the several countries named therein, but this special provision was, standing by itself, an absolute and conclusive conveyance, so far as one government can convey to another the absolute and exclusive right in perpetuity to occupy that place for a coaling station and for other naval purposes.

So it seems to me there is nothing in the argument of the honorable Senator from Maine. We have paid, and doubly paid, for that harbor. We own it now; it is now in our possession, and we have the right to improve it.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio says that when we renewed this treaty we concluded to put in what would be, in the estimation of the committee, an adequate consideration for reciprocity again for seven years, and that was the cession of Pearl Island Harbor. He forgets to state to the Senate that that treaty had not run more than four years before we deliberately repealed all benefits which the Sandwich Islands received from the reciprocity treaty by removing all duties from sugar. We would not have done that to any nation on earth except this little nation of the Sandwich Islands.

The Senator forgets to tell the Senate that we went one step further, and paid a bounty to the people of the United States producing sugar and paid none to the Sandwich Islands, thus enacting a law which was discriminating against the Sandwich Islands, when we had actually received from them, as the Senator says, a full equivalent for this extended reciprocity treaty.

For the last three years the Hawaiians have been living without any benefit whatever from reciprocity. Their sugar not only has not been admitted free from duty, but, in addition to that, our sugar-growers have had a bounty, and thus were enabled to compete with them, at a disadvantage to them.

Yet the Senator says that that is an absolute cession and that Pearl Island Harbor is ours, that we must keep it, and we must deprive the Sandwich Islands of it. Why? Not because of the treaty of seven years before, which had been running during that length of time, under which they had actually received a benefit of $23,000,000. What had the old treaty to do with the new? Does the Senator say that Pearl Island Harbor was a consideration for the old treaty, which was dead? Certainly it was not.

It was a consideration for the new treaty of seven years, and I stated when I was on the floor before, that on a written communication from Mr. Carter, the minister from the Sandwich Islands, addressed to Secretary Bayard on this very question of whether or not that was a complete cession, Secretary Bayard replied in writing that it was not, that it went pari passu with the treaty. Whether it was or not, I ask the Senator from Ohio if to-day, after we have deprived the Sandwich Islands of all benefit of reciprocity with the United States for three years, and we have received our full benefit during the three years, we propose to put a duty on sugar and deprive them still further, during the balance of the seven years, of all the benefits from reciprocity?

I ask the Senator from Ohio if he would face the nations of the earth and in their presence declare that "notwithstanding we have deprived you of all of the benefits which we gave for Pearl Island Harbor, we demand that Pearl Island Harbor shall be ours, and that the cession shall be treated as a perpetual cession"? Would the Senator dare do that? Could he morally stand before the peoples of this earth and say that? I say this Republic could not stand a minute on that doctrine, and would not stand a minute on it. It would be disgraced in the eyes of all the civilized nations of the earth if it undertook to stand on it a single moment.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator's argument would have a good deal more of force if it had the facts behind t. In the second treaty, it must be remembered that the second article was inserted in the Senate Chamber. It was accepted, and according to the note here, "this article is an amendment of the Senate which was accepted by the Hawaiian Government." It has no limitations, no qualifications. This was agreed to on the 6th day of December, 1884. The McKinley law took effect some time in 1890; so that the McKinley law took effect only for a part of the year 1890. My impression is that a consideration was made; but whether or not, it makes no difference.

Mr. FRYE. Yes, it does. Facts make a difference. There was no consideration.

Mr. SHERMAN. There were only six months——

Mr. FRYE. Have we not been living under it from the date of the McKinley act taking effect down to the present time?

Mr. SHERMAN. Suppose we have.

Mr. FRYE. That is more than six months.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have by the McKinley law admitted sugar free from other countries as well as from Hawaii. There was no stipulation that we should not do it. They had the full benefit of seven years, lacking six months.

Mr. FRYE. That is not so. The Senator charges me with speaking without facts. I repeat the charge that he is now deliberately addressing the Senate without facts.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator said within three years.

Mr. FRYE. How long is it since October, 1890, when the McKinley law took effect?

Mr. SHERMAN. This treaty took effect on the 6th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1884.

Mr. FRYE. How long is it, if the Senator will pardon me, since the McKinley law took effect? How long has it been in effect?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know exactly.

Mr. FRYE. From October, 1890, up to July 1894. I admit that that is not quite four years.

Mr. SHERMAN. Instead of three years, it is six years and some months.

Mr. President, as to the contention made by Mr. Bayard, in the Senate I know we have generally disagreed with his opinions, and Mr. Edmunds, of Vermont, who drew this article, has contended over and over again that this was as absolute a conveyance of the property as any language could make it.

Mr. HIGGINS. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. HIGGINS. I ask the Senator if the fact that that utterance was made solemnly to the Hawaiian Government by Mr. Bayard as Secretary of State did not commit this Government to that construction of the treaty?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is very certain that the present Administration do not take that view of it, because they are making a new survey, and are claiming for the people of the United States the right to possess and improve the harbor.

Mr. HIGGINS. But that is with the entire assent of the Government of the islands. They are agreeing to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Who is complaining?

Mr. FRYE. Is not the treaty still in operation?

Mr. SHERMAN. No.

Mr. FRYE. No treaty between us and the Hawaiian Islands?

Mr. SHERMAN. We are receiving these goods under the general provision of the McKinley law, and sugar comes into our country duty free.

Mr. FRYE. Have we no treaty with the Sandwich Islands to-day?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think we have upon this subject except as to these two treaties. I know of no other. I do not wish to make any contest with the Hawaiian Islands. I know the effect of this treaty has been bad, and that it has induced an abnormal development of those islands. It has added largely to the fortunes of a single man, but it has not added one dollar to the wealth of the people of the United States. The whole mass of the accretion from this treaty has accrued to persons who are foreign to our country and foreign to our institutions. Therefore I am opposed to the treaty; but I have no desire to debate the question further.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss this question. I am ready to vote upon it; but I do not like the question propounded by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS] to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to go without further answer. That question was substantially whether the statement of Secretary Bayard to the Hawaiian minister concerning the construction of the treaty did not bind the United States. If such a statement bound the United States, the treaty-making power would be taken from the Senate and the President and transferred to the Secretary of State.

I undertake to state that a treaty, like any law, stands by itself and must be interpreted as it stands, and can not be interpreted, and should not be interpreted, by constructions put upon it by the Secretary of State.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, I was a member of the House of Representatives when the Hawaiian treaty was first made in 1876. I voted against it, because at that time the treaty was not only submitted to the Senate of the United States, but to the House of Representatives, as it was releasing the revenues of the Government. I have spoken against it, I have tried from that day to this to have it repealed.

After it had run its length of seven years, it was proposed to renew the treaty again, and the House of Representatives was opposed to it. Those who negotiated that treaty knew that the House would never consent to its renewal. It was made by the Administration and it was ratified by the Senate, but it was never submitted to the House of Representatives a second time.

It released the revenues of the Government without consulting that branch of Congress to which the Constitution especially confides that subject. When that treaty was made the second time and ratified by the Senate and put into operation, I introduced a resolution and had it referred to the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, of which J. Randolph Tucker of Virginia was chairman, to inquire whether it was competent for the President of the United States and the Senate of the United States to negotiate a treaty releasing the revenues of the Government without the consent of the House of Representatives.

If I remember aright, that committee reported unanimously that they had no such power. I know that was the report of the majority, a very able report, made by Mr. Tucker, one of the ablest lawyers in the United States.

Mr. President, we have released over $50,000,000, taken out of the pockets of the people of the United States and given to the corporations which dominate those islands, and we are now proposing to continue that business of depleting the pockets of the people of the United States of $5,000,000 a year and placing it in the pockets of the corporations that control the sugar lands of the Hawaiian Islands. They are owned, as I understand, by the sugar trust of the United States.

I am glad to have the opportunity to vote to terminate this treaty, and to take back and keep in the pockets of the people of the United States the $5,000,000 a year which we are taking out and giving to the Hawaiian sugar-producers.

I see no earthly reason for a continuance of this treaty. It is simply a bounty of $5,000,000 which we are giving out of the pockets of our own people, year by year, into the pockets of foreigners.

It is useless to talk about the negotiation of the treaty for Pearl Island Harbor or any other harbor. That harbor belongs to us. It has been held by one of the ablest lawyers who ever sat in this body that the treaty by which the Hawaiian Islands ceded Pearl Island Harbor invested a fee-simple title in this Government. But even if it did not, we can get the whole islands if we want them, by simply saying that we are ready to take them. Why give $5,000,000 year after year to these people, when the islands are willing to come to us and we are not willing to receive them?

I hope this provision of the bill will be stricken out. It should not be in it. It raises the price of sugar to our own consumers in this country, and gives the Hawaiian producers the benefit of $5,000,000 of bounty. I want to vote for the amendment to strike that provision out of this bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, this bill came over from the House of Representatives with a proposition in it to exempt the Hawaiian treaty from the operations of the repeal of the duties on sugar. In doing that, the House of Representatives, I suppose, followed a statute which was enacted on the 3d of March, 1891, as follows:

That nothing in the act approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," shall be held to repeal or impair the provisions of the convention respecting commercial reciprocity concluded January 30, 1875, with the King of the Hawaiian Islands, and extended by the convention proclaimed November 9, 1887; and the provisions of said convention shall be in full force and effect as if said act had not passed.

So that, after the passage of the McKinley law, which admitted sugar free into the United States, and, of course, admitted it free from Hawaii, it was provided that nothing in that act contained should be construed as in anywise affecting the convention which had been made with Hawaii and extended for a second period of seven years. The conscience of the Congress of the United States seemed to feel some reproach that they had dealt with the Hawaiian Islands, then a kingdom—and doubtless being more tenderly regarded at that time by some gentlemen than it is now that it is a republic—somewhat with cruelty and impropriety and unbecoming legislative tyranny.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] said a moment ago that we should not have dealt with any other power in the world as we have done with Hawaii. After having made a convention of reciprocity, without repealing that convention and giving notice of its termination, we passed a law by the Congress of the United States taking away from that little kingdom all the benefits of that convention of reciprocity, whilst still holding on to those advantages which Hawaii gave to us in admitting our goods into those islands duty free—a very large, extensive, and valuable list.

The Congress of the United States, therefore, evidently seemed to think that it was necessary to put upon paper in the form of a statute some apology for this act of rude outrage upon that little kingdom. Therefore they enacted the statute which I have just read to the Senate. That statute has been entirely meaningless so far as practical business is concerned: that is to say, we have not permitted Hawaii to have advantage of either the bounty in the McKinley act or the advantages that she claims under the treaty. We have robbed her of those, and have gone on in the assumption of our superiority, based upon nothing in the world but our want of conscience and our possession of strength. That is the situation.

The people who are referred to by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] as being foreigners and as being a sugar trust in Hawaii are as respectable citizens as any in the world. They went mostly from the United States; some of them were born there of American parentage. They have contrived to civilize those islands and beautify them, to improve them in a way that would cast credit upon any people in the world, and I dare say that there are few spots in the United States to-day which have a higher degree of culture than Honolulu and its surroundings, and other towns of Hawaii.

That has been the work of Americans who have gone there—the missionary people first, and their successors. As high a state of education per capita obtains in Hawaii as obtains in any State of the American Union; I might say a higher state, for there is not a child 10 years of age in Hawaii who can not read and write in the English language.

All that could be done by the genius and enterprise of American people has been accomplished in the islands of Hawaii. The great sugar estates in those islands are not held and owned by a sugar trust. Thirty million dollars and more have been invested there by the people in properties which are of very great value, the production of which has all come to the United States, which has built up a carrying trade between Honolulu and San Francisco and other ports of the United States which is almost exclusively American. It is indeed the only foreign carrying trade in the world that we have under our national control—a very valuable carrying trade and one that our seamen on the Pacific have found to be very much to their advantage.

The Senator from Ohio speaks about the disparity between the duties on sugar that we might have collected and the duties which the Hawaiians might have collected out of us under this reciprocity arrangement. He puts the figure very high. He thinks we made a bad bargain with Hawaii, and that has always weighed on the Senator's mind. The Senator hates a bad bargain unless he is on the right side of it. He loves a bargain that is bad, provided that he has the good end of it, but he has great contempt for a bargain, whether private or public, I suppose, which has any disadvantage in it to the contracting party that the Senator represents.

Now, we did not make any bad bargain with Hawaii. We made a better bargain with Hawaii than was made in any of the reciprocity treaties that we have expressly preserved in this proposed act. The committee that have had charge of this bill here, and who have given out to us their views of what is correct, and which we have followed so faithfully and without question, have seen proper to preserve all of the reciprocal arrangements now existing which arose and were completed under the McKinley law, although it is very well known that not one of those arrangements has the characteristics of a treaty, and it is perfectly well known also that none of them has the slightest treaty obligation. Nothing but a moral obligation exists there at all.

Now, when we are preserving reciprocity with other governments where the advantage is either present with us or may become an advantage to us, it seems to me we ought not to draw a very fine line of calculation between the United States and Hawaii. We ought at all events to be somewhat just, or if we are not just, we ought to have self-respect enough to proceed about this matter as if it were one of controversy, say with Canada or with England.

If we had a reciprocal treaty with Great Britain like this, we would not think for one moment of putting upon a tariff bill a law to abrogate and annul that treaty after a year's time. We would certainly, following the language of the treaty and the injunctions of it at least, have self-respect enough to perform the duty required by the treaty of giving notice that we intended to abrogate it. But this amendment tears the treaties to pieces by a legislative act without inquiring of Hawaii what she intends to do about it. It is a very improper thing for us, in view of our treaty relations with foreign countries, to seize them and tear them to pieces by the acts of mere legislation on our part, without consulting or in any wise giving the other government an opportunity to show why it ought not to be done.

The Senator from Ohio spoke about a consideration that passed for this first extension, the second term of seven years of the treaty. Whom did that consideration proceed from? From Hawaii. What was it? The grant, as the Senator says, in perpetuity and in fee simple of very important rights in the harbor called Pearl Harbor on the island of Oahu, 11 miles distant from Honolulu, and commanding it absolutely in a military sense.

If the Senator's argument is correct Hawaii gave us that in consideration of our agreeing to this reciprocity; the contract stands until the consideration is surrendered; and it is startling to me that the argument should be made in the Senate of the United States that because Hawaii paid us for this treaty and paid what the world will consider a very valuable consideration, therefore it is our duty to abrogate it. That is a very peculiar attitude for us to occupy here.

It is one that if I were characterizing I do not know what strength of adverbial or adjective phrase I would use. When the consideration proceeds from Hawaii to us and we admit its value, and that consideration is supposed to make up whatever of deficiencies there might be in the mutuality of dollars and cents in the transaction and we accept it and are to hold on to it, it is a paltry thing for us to do to turn around and say we will hold to the consideration and abrogate the contract.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to know whether the amendment would be more acceptable to him if we gave back Pearl Harbor?

Mr. MORGAN. I would not give up Pearl Harbor if Great Britain with her guns or her navy were to demand it, because I am satisfied that Pearl Harbor is the key to the military control of the Pacific Ocean. When we put that very important provision in there we acquired more than Hawaii. We acquired the right to put a naval station there and to fortify it—to plant ourselves in defiance of all the nations of the earth without question—obtaining our title from the acknowledged sovereign authority there; and we planted a Gibraltar in the heart of the Pacific Ocean which is stronger and better and more useful than the Gibraltar that commands the Mediterranean Sea. Therefore I would not give it back if every gun of the British navy were trained to-day upon the cities of the United States.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me to ask a single question? Were not the naval officers and the army officers of the United States almost entirely unanimous in their testimony that the possession of that harbor was an absolute necessity to the United States?

Mr. MORGAN. There was but one man who testified to the contrary, and he earned the reputation before he came before us, as I am informed, of a crank.

Mr. MILLS. Is it more important that we shall have a harbor in the Pacific Ocean than in the Atlantic Ocean?

Mr. MORGAN. We have not any in the Atlantic Ocean.

Mr. MILLS. Precisely; but you are now seeking harbors in the midst of the Pacific Ocean; all the officers of the Army and Navy testify to its importance to this country; and we have not one in the Atlantic Ocean over which nine-tenths of our commerce floats.

Mr. MORGAN. More is the pity, Mr. President, and more is the shame upon the American people, that when they came to close the Revolutionary war we did not close it by accepting and receiving that which they could easily have gotten, every outpost from Nova Scotia around to Honduras. Let me ask the Senator from Texas what are those places, those hovering points around us but picket posts, armed at an enormous expense by the Government of Great Britain especially and by Germany and by France?

For what purpose? Not to protect England; not to protect France; not to protect Germany, but to hold the United States in constraint. There are armaments of the most magnificent and costly character where in naval stations and fortresses they have treasured up the munitions of naval warfare in amounts that we can simple conjecture, for we do not know how much is there. We know how it was in the late war. I do not mean the war of the rebellion; I mean the war of 1812.

We know how those hovering picket posts were ranged, as I say, from Nova Scotia to Honduras and kept our coasts continually embroiled and always in danger; how from each one of those fortresses there was a near line upon the most important sea posts of the United States; and, Mr. President, we can imagine nothing more to the glory and safety of this country than that we shall occupy now and hereafter in our power all of those military picket posts whose guns are put there merely to be turned in upon our shores. That is all of it.

I do not wish that to occur in the Pacific Ocean. Through the sagacity of the former Senator from Vermont we put into the treaty, and Hawaii consented to it, that we should have Pearl Harbor in the Pacific Ocean, the only point where we can obtain the same advantages in the Pacific that Great Britain has over us in the Atlantic. So I congratulated myself and the country, too, that we were making some start at last toward a policy which when it was aimed at us was threatening if not destructive, and some day may be destructive, and which, when we adopt it, will fence off the nations of the world from any attack upon the western coasts of this country, reaching a thousand miles to the westward of the Hawaiian group.

Our possessions by lines of longitude are more than a thousand miles to the west of the Hawaiian group and these islands, situated th ere in the center, the focal point of the great circle that radiates around, commencing at San Diego, in California, and running around our Aleutian archipelago, command every foot of that sea; and Pearl Harbor is the key to it all.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] seems to think we have no harbors on the Atlantic, and therefore we should have none on the Pacific. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama how much in his judgment the United States would be justified in paying to-day for all the armed posts in the Atlantic Ocean that Great Britain controls?

Mr. MORGAN. I am a poor hand on figures, but a tolerable one on imagination. I suppose that if we were to pay $2,000,000,000 we would not lose any money by it. I should not think so.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to ask the Senator another question. Russia is completing her railroad across Siberia. When that is completed, if we have Pearl Island Harbor and should conclude under necessity to fortify it at any time, would not Russia and the United States have complete control of the whole North Pacific?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, only those men in the United States who have grown antique in their prejudices fail to look into this subject in a proper light. The younger generation who come on, from a 10-year old boy up, understand it, and they are going to have it that way, no matter what objections we may urge or the little dickering we may have upon a tariff bill here to equalize a supposed difference in sugar between Louisiana and Hawaii.

The fact is that the frauds with sugar on the Pacific coast, as the Senator from California will bear me out in saying, are greater than the advantage this tariff of 40 per cent ad valorem is to the sugar-growers of the United States.

But I rose, Mr. President, really without the intention of arguing this case. I rose to ask the Senate to allow this case to go where it belongs, to the Committee on Foreign Relations, that it may be investigated there quietly, and it may be examined into in a way that becomes the delicacy—I will repeat the word, the delicacy—of our situation in regard to this very important matter.

Now, I will suppose that this bill is passed and the treaty is abrogated. Hawaii is released from all of it that is not obligatory upon her. I believe that Hawaii is not released from that fee-simple title, as I understand it and read it, which is contained in the treaty extension to Pearl Harbor, and which was said here to be the consideration of that extension. Nevertheless, at the time the ratifications of that treaty were exchanged and contemporaneously with it, as a part of the question of the exchange of ratifications, Mr. Carter, who was then minister to the United States from Hawaii, insisted that if the treaty of reciprocity was determined according to its terms, upon giving a year's notice thereupon the Pearl Harbor would revert to Hawaii. He insisted upon it.

The subject was drawn up in the form of a protocol and brought to Mr. Bayard, who participated in the exchange of the ratifications. Mr. Bayard said:

> I have not any authority to subscribe that paper. I have no authority to accept it as a protocol of explanation of the treaty. I have no authority to qualify the exchange of ratifications by signing that paper; but I say to you that I understand the treaty that way.

The Government of the United States, represented by that great man, announced on that occasion that he understood the treaty to mean in the event we abrogated the treaty according to its terms or in any other form, Pearl Harbor would revert to Hawaii.

Now, Senators question that. Senators deny it, and I deny it. But, Mr. President, as a moral obligation, as a question of diplomatic understanding and duty between the United States and Hawaii, it is very hard to exclude the blush from the cheek of this nation and yet deny what Mr. Bayard solemnly stated at the time. It is very hard to do it. We passed the other day a very drastic resolution, to the effect that Hawaii should have her own way about fixing up her institutions according to her own free will, that no other nation should interfere with her in any respect, and if it did so it should be regarded as an unfriendly act toward the Government of the United States.

What is an unfriendly act toward the Government of the United States? One that justifies the Government in going to war. It can not be anything else. We may go to war if we choose to do so. We therefore declare in regard to this little kingdom or republic—republic as it is now—if it shall become a republic that any interference of foreign governments, wheresoever they might be, with Hawaii would be an unfriendly act to the Government of the United States. I participated in that declaration. I was very glad to vote for it. It suited me exactly, and that is exactly what it has been all the time, traditionally and diplomatically, and that is as a matter of fact a declaration on the part of this august tribunal here.

Now, Great Britain alone is negotiating with Hawaii for the possession of certain rocks lying in the northwestern part of this chain of islands. What does she want with them? She wants them for a station for a cable to be brought from Australia to that point and from that point to Vancouver, and she is about to acquire the right unless the United States prevents it. But a question is very likely to arise whether that is an interference with Hawaii of such a character as would be an unfriendly act to the United States. We are not out of the woods about this matter; we are getting deeper into it every day, and it becomes us to be very chary and very cautious and very circumspect and particular in all that we do in regard to it.

Now, I will suppose that Hawaii makes that concession, I will suppose that we repeal this treaty, break it up, tear it to pieces and throw it in the faces of Hawaii and the world, and then we go on to attempt to carry out the survey which was made recently by order of the Secretary of the Navy and commence fortifying Pearl Harbor according to the stipulation of the extension treaty. Hawaii will say to us, "At the time we signed that treaty, when the ratifications were exchanged, your Secretary of State informed us that whenever you saw proper to abrogate that treaty Pearl Harbor will return to us." "Well, but Mr. Bayard had not any authority to do so." "But he did do so."

That was the understanding; there is no one who can deny that he did say so. Now, this little kingdom, or this little republic, appeals to the moral sense of the whole family of the nations of the earth, and asks them to say whether we are justified in claiming that Pearl Harbor reverts to them under the declaration of Mr. Bayard.

I ask what is the moral attitude of this question? Are the nations of this earth going to remain quiet and allow a little republic to be run down by this great Government of the United States like the City of Paris would run down a canoe in the water, and say nothing when Hawaii is claiming her rights, her moral rights, confessed rights, indisputable rights?

Are we not in some trouble about this business, if instead of allowing this treaty to expire, which it will do inside of three years, we tear it to pieces by this act, which in itself has burdens enough to bear? What are we to do and what are we to say to all mankind, to the great nations of the earth, all interested in interfering with us, in support of our declaration "You shall not interfere with Hawaii" and "You shall not sustain Hawaii in her clearly demonstrated right of having Pearl Harbor to revert to her?"

I merely want to suggest that question. Senators will understand that this is not the time and place to discuss those questions. We can not settle questions like that properly on the discussion of a tariff bill.

Sir, there are facts by the hundreds that ought to enter into this consideration; and if I had the strength or the disposition to retard the bill long enough to state what I know about it even my humble self I would be able to engage your attention upon it for many hours, and not one word of it would be uninstructive perhaps, or at least unworthy of consideration. It is not the place or the time to consider a question of that kind. It is too large a question. It has too great a bearing upon our attitude and relations with all the nations of the earth for us to undertake to settle it upon this bill, and I am very sorry that any Senator saw proper to do this.

Hearing that this matter was going on, I wrote to the Secretary of the Navy and asked him some questions on the 18th of June about the exploration that is going on out there. He says

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, June 18, 1894.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of the 11th instant, asking for information regarding the examinations made at Pearl Harbor, is received.

The Secretary did not answer my letter fully. I asked him under what order Admiral Irwin was sent there and what was his purpose in going. He does not answer upon those propositions. He says:

The only official information in the possession of the Department on this subject is contained in a communication from Rear-Admiral John Irwin, of date May 10, in which he states that an examination of the waters, shore line, and bar, as ascertained by repeated soundings, convinced him that it was nothing but coral sand, and he proceeded to have a boring made to ascertain definitely the character of the bottom. The result of the boring is stated in a report of the admiral's flag lieutenant, C. A. Adams, and shows that a boring was made to a distance of 13 feet from the surface of the bottom, with the following result: "First, about 3 feet of soft coral sand, evidently silted on top of a light crust of dead coral, below which is again soft coral sand, easily yielding to the pump."

Lieut. Adams further states that a depth of 31 feet at low water can easily be obtained, and that, in his opinion, no blasting would be necessary.

In addition to the above, Rear-Admiral Irwin states that a thorough examination of the shore lines of Pearl Harbor was made, and a site for a drydock selected. This was done by Rear-Admiral Irwin without any special orders to that effect.

I have, as yet, no information from Rear-Admiral Walker as to the explorations he is making.

So there are two rear-admirals there who have been exploring.

He had no special directions in that regard.

I will communicate to you full information when I obtain it.

Very truly yours,

H. A. HERBERT.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN,
United States Senate.

Mr. President, I have here (and I should like to give it to the Senate or to a committee of the Senate if I had an opportunity) a drawing of Pearl Harbor and its soundings, which shows that the bar leading across the entrance to Pearl Harbor is not more than one-quarter of a mile wide. It all of it yields readily to the pumping dredge, being soft coral sand. I have two specimens in my possession of the soft coral sand. It has been stated on this floor time and again that it would take $700,000 to dredge out the channel.

It turns out that it will cost less than $70,000 to do it; and Hawaii is repenting of her bargain that ever she gave up a harbor which she is perfectly able to dredge out herself to the United States in consideration of this reciprocity. She is repenting of it. If I were an Hawaiian I would repent of it worse than she does, for if I were an Hawaiian I never would claim annexation to the United States—never.

I would make Hawaii the Switzerland in the Pacific Ocean that Switzerland is in Europe, protected by all the nations of the earth, perfectly able to take care of herself under all circumstances and the heaviest population that can go there. I would take that little republic that has now been built up into perfectness and beauty, without the shedding of a drop of blood, by American genius, skill, and statesmanship and moral courage, and I would build in that Pacific Ocean, as I say again, a Switzerland protected by all the nations of the earth. But Hawaii wants to come to us, and there are gentlemen here who want her, some by inducing her to come and some by starving her into coming. The Senator from Texas seems to want to starve her into coming.

Mr. MILLS. I want to keep her out.

Mr. MORGAN. The way to do it is just to make her independent enough to claim her Pearl Harbor from you and have the nations of the earth back her up and she will stay out; but where we will stay will be a different question.

Mr. MILLS. She will never come here except to get a bounty on sugar.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Texas has a poor opinion of Hawaii. I should not wonder if it was not reciprocated fully by as respectable a set of men as live in the world.

Mr. MILLS. I should hope it was by Mr. Dole, the representative of Hawaii.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Dole is an honorable, and I believe a trustworthy man.

Mr. MILLS. He is a robber.

Mr. MORGAN. He is a gentleman, and not only a gentleman but a man of extraordinary ability, great courage, and beauty of character.

Mr. MILLS. He is a tool of the United States marines.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for information what is the general depth of the basin?

Mr. MORGAN. There are 13 feet of water on top of the basin.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the general depth of the basin?

Mr. DOLPH. After you get over the bar.

Mr. PLATT. Inside the bar.

Mr. SHERMAN. Inside the bar.

Mr. MORGAN. The measurement is given here.

Mr. FRYE. It is deep enough and large enough to float today all the navies of the whole world.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to know whether it is four or five hundred feet, like the waters of the Northwestern coast.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, no.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a volcanic country, and there may be great depth.

Mr. MORGAN. It is from 40 to 70 feet deep. I can send to the Senator the map and the statement in it. It is from 40 to 70 feet deep inside the bay. The bay is about 11 miles long, and a tongue of land runs down into the center of the bay until you get within 6 miles of the sea line outside of the bar. The water on either side of this tongue of land is from 40 to 70 feet deep. Gen. Schofield went there and made a very elaborate survey of it. Senators can get his survey here in the document room of the Senate.

Mr. SQUIRE. I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks it is consistent with the policy of the United States in building up a great naval establishment to neglect so reasonable an opportunity to get coaling stations on the waters of the Pacific as well as the Atlantic? Is it of any use to have great fleets without having coaling stations? Is it not suicidal to neglect procuring suitable coaling stations and still go on spending millions of dollars for a navy? I was told by a prominent officer of the United States Navy that a United States naval vessel loaded with coal in Honolulu; that she took all she could carry in her hold and several hundred tons on deck, and was barely able to get to San Francisco with the coal she carried.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Boston had been required to fight a British or German ship or any other ship and had got within 100 or 500 miles of the Golden Gate she would not have had coal enough to have fought the battle. She would have been as helpless as a baby, and would have been of no service to the country. I have been told that in the little flurry we had with Chile it cost us about $3,000,000 to attempt even to coal that fleet. The figures have not come out on it. Perhaps there is some Senator here who will correct me if I am in error, but I understood it cost the Navy about $3,000,000 to coal the fleet.

It is true we got something back when we sold the coal that was not consumed there; but if we had gotten into a fight with Chile it would have been almost as expensive a war as the war of the rebellion. We would have had to carry coal on steamships around the cape to supply the Navy with coal. There is no other way to get it. But I am wandering over the subject. I ought not to be even permitted to speak to-day, because I am almost physically unable to stand on my feet.

However, I rose, Mr. President, for the purpose of presenting in outline merely—the considerations which ought to induce us to abstain on this side and on this occasion from touching this subject. Let us leave it where the other House left it. At the outside it is not quite three years I believe that the treaty will run in the event we do not find it necessary to abrogate it, but when we come to give notice of the abrogation of this treaty let it be with a perfect understanding of the whole case and all its bearings, then we can do it intelligently. We can not do it intelligently on this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not understand that there is any statement in the bill as passed by the other House respecting this provision of the treaty.

Mr. MILLS. There is none. They leave sugar clear out.

Mr. FRYE. There was no need of it.

Mr. MILLS. It was free sugar.

Mr. ALLISON. It was because sugar is free? Is that the reason?

Mr. MILLS. That is right.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator from Alabama if we strike out what is inserted here and leave the bill with a duty upon sugar whether it does not leave the question open as to the abrogation of the treaty, at least pro tanto, and whether the Hawaiian people will not have a right to say that we have by indirection abrogated the treaty. If that be true, would it not be wiser for us in dealing with this mere question of tariff duties to so arrange the bill as that the Committee on Foreign Relations, which seems to be somewhat divided upon this subject, can take up the whole question, not as it affects revenue alone but as it fixes all our relations with Hawaii and with the world besides? What I fear is that if these provisions are struck out now and no mention is made of this subject in the bill and still a duty is imposed upon sugar it will be regarded, or at least the question will be raised, that the treaty is abrogated indirectly by the operation of this law.

Mr. FRYE. Has not the Senate Committee on Finance fixed this just as it should be now?

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose it has. It has stated that nothing in this act shall be construed to abrogate or in any manner impair or affect that treaty.

Mr. FRYE. What more do you want than that?

Mr. ALLISON. I understood the Senator from Alabama to say that he wanted to leave it as the other House left it. I should be glad to leave it that way, but I fear it would not do.

Mr. MORGAN. Not at all. I was mistaken in supposing that the provision now found in the bill came over from the other House.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a Senate resolution.

Mr. MORGAN. So I found in the course of my remarks.

Mr. FRYE. It is a Senate provision, and now we are acting on an amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota to strike out the provision reported by the Senate Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORGAN. But the gentlemen who have charge of the bill on this side have certainly been legislating here with due respect to our own contract with other countries. They have said we will not in this bill repeal or abrogate a treaty, we will not legislate against it. Let that matter come up in its due form and before the proper tribunal, but not upon this bill. They did exactly right to put this provision in and I hope it will stay.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I have listened to the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] with much interest and have gleaned instruction from his remarks. The sentiments that he uttered are worthy of the patriotic American that he is, and chairman of our Committee in the United States Senate upon Foreign Relations.

The question under consideration before us is one of great moment, not only to the whole country, but especially to that of the Pacific coast. Our relations with the Hawaiian Islands are different from any other foreign nation on God's footstool.

It was the American missionary who was the first pioneer on these islands of the Pacific. He there raised the banner of the Cross. There he raised the star spangled banner. There he entered upon his mission of good will and love to man. He took those semibarbarous people from their state. He built churches and schoolhouses and educated them. He taught them the golden rule to do unto others as we would wish others to do unto us.

When the Senator from South Dakota and the Senator from Nebraska speak as they do of those people in the islands, they simply advertise that they have no personal knowledge or acquaintance with the people of the Hawaiian Islands or their institutions.

I speak of my own personal knowledge, from my associations with the people upon the islands; I speak of our commercial and social relations with them; and I echo the words that have been so beautifully expressed by the senior Senator from Alabama when I say that there are a class of people there, and a large percentage of the population, who are equal in education, in moral integrity, and everything that goes to make the good citizen, to any other people of whom I have any knowledge.

I would not trespass upon the Senate for more than a few minutes had there been any reference made to our commercial relations with those islands. I think I can demonstrate to my friends from South Dakota that it has not been a bad bargain financially to us or to our people. I believe the treaty has been one, pecuniarily speaking, of benefit to our whole country, and it will continue to be so until we raise all the sugar that we require for our own consumption.

Last year we imported 33,000,000 pounds of sugar from foreign countries. I, for one, would rather have business relations with the Hawaiian Islands than with China, and the Indies, and the Islands of Sumatra and Java, and others of the Indian Ocean. It is to me exceedingly gratifying when I think that there is one place outside of an American port—and it is the only one in the whole world—where the Stars and Stripes are seen more frequently than the flags of other nations. That port is Honolulu.

There is to be found the extraordinary spectacle (extraordinary in these days, I mean) when Old Glory is flying from the peaks of more ships in the harbor than it is in any other port of the world. It is the one foreign spot where our flag is not belittled into insignificance and where the Yankee sailor can go ashore without being crowded into a corner by the superabundant tars of other nations.

I hailed the star-spangled banner when I went into Honolulu, because it took me back to my boyhood days when I went to foreign port and saw in the ports of Liverpool, Havre, Bremen, and other European ports the old Stars and Stripes waving at the peak of our vessels there, transporting the commerce of the world. But that is in the past. England has superseded us and she stands ready to do so to-day in the Hawaiian Islands, and would have done so, in my opinion, if it had not been for the wise commercial treaty that was made with these islands; and I will demonstrate by figures that it has been to our advantage.

Mr. President, the Hawaiian Annual, published in Honolulu, of unquestioned statistical authority, states that the total tonnage of vessels which entered the Hawaiian Islands during the calendar year 1891 was 284,155 tons, of which 224 vessels, of 173,191 tons, carried the American flag; 34 vessels, of 54,361 tons, carried the British flag, and the balance was distributed among other nations.

There seems to be a proneness to forget, or at any rate to overlook the fact that in the comity of nations mutual commercial integrity should hold first place. When we made the treaty with the Hawaiian Islands it was because of our then appreciation of the advantages that would accrue to us from more intimate and friendly relations with these islands.

As I understand it, in the original treaty and in the amendments thereto we were not actuated by any philanthropic impulse; we were not granting a boon to a beggar; the proceedings were carried out on the basis of reciprocity; we got what we asked for, and did not scruple to press our claims. It was a clear case of quid pro quo. The treaty was formed with the plain understanding that it was to be to the mutual benefit of both nations. Nor has this anticipation miscarried.

It has been the custom to say, and it has been repeated here to-day by the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from South Dakota and others, that in our so-called reciprocal trade with the Hawaiian Islands it has been mostly take with very little give, or rather that we have added to our stock of purchased material without correspondingly disposing of our home products; but, like many other things which it has been the custom to say, the facts do not altogether bear out the assertion. Taking the commerce of the Hawaiian Islands with this country by periods of nine years, we see a very remarkable condition of things.

We see that in the nine years immediately preceding the treaty year—that is, from 1867 to 1875, inclusive—the exports from this country to the islands were valued at $6,732,179, while the imports to this country from the islands were valued at $10,626,440. In the next nine years—that is from 1876 to 1884, inclusive—our exports to the islands were valued at $21,668,083, while our imports from there were valued at $43,813,948. In the next nine years a still more wonderful increase is shown, and from 1884 to 1893, inclusive, our exports to the islands were of a value of $32,491,433, while their exports to us amounted to $95,925,552.

It is true that during the twenty-seven years, whose figures I have just quoted, the islands took from this country goods amounting in value to $60,891,675, while they found a market in our country for goods valued at $150,365,940. There is undoubtedly a vast difference in the value of what they sent us and what we sent them, but this discrepancy is due entirely to the laws of supply and demand. For while it is true that their exports to this country have risen from an average annual amount of $1,180,716 in the antetreaty days to a present average annual amount of $10,658,395, it is also true that our exports to the islands have risen from an annual average of $748,020 to an annual average of $3,610,159.

That the increase of our exports to the Hawaiian Islands does not keep pace with the increase of our imports from the Hawaiian Islands is due to this simple fact: That in the one case the purchasers number 65,000,000, while in the other case the purchasers number 90,160. It almost seems to me shabby to talk of the Hawaiian Islands having the best of the bargain. I can not help quoting here an extremely pertinent and valuable statement to which I call the special attention of those Senators who look upon this treaty as such a bad bargain, being all as they claim upon one side.

That while the total value of all imports from everywhere into the Hawaiian Islands during the calendar year 1892, as reported in their statistical statement, was $7,439,483, of this amount $5,294,279 came from the United States; $1,201,329 from the United Kingdom; $384,145 from Germany; and $559,628 from all other countries. That is, the Hawaiian Islands took from this country goods amounting to $3,149,177 in excess of what they took from all other countries of the world combined. As a matter of fact, the Hawaiian Islands would gladly take from us every atom and scrap which they require, and it has only been by the extreme energy of the representative of Great Britain, and by the wonderfully increased commercial push of the Germans that those countries have succeeded in getting any kind of business foothold on the islands.

As we have seen, the entire population of the islands is only a trifle over 90,000, and they raise everything in the nature of supplies; in a word, as purchasers they take from us all they can. When, too, we come to consider how much other countries take from us, we find some very instructive comparative figures. In the fiscal year 1892 the five Central American States combined took goods from us which in the aggregate were only worth $827,767 more than those which the Hawaiian Islands took of us; the Argentine Republic took little more than half, our exports to that country being $2,927,488; Chile was not a purchaser to an equal extent by $1,749,572, while Peru was only a purchaser to the extent of $1,007,035. Our exports to Japan amounted to but $3,290,111, while even to China they were only $5,663,497, while we imported from China three times the value, for which we paid them our gold and silver. These figures only strengthen my opinion that the Hawaiian Islands are a very good purchaser.

The exports from the United States to the Hawaiian Islands have been a class of merchandise that has given employment to our mechanics and greatly benefited our people. We have sent them the product of the cotton loom of Georgia and Massachusetts. The iron from the mines and furnaces of Alabama and Pennsylvania has been by American mechanics fashioned into machinery for crushing cane and manufacturing sugar, furnishing hundreds of miles of large iron pipe that is rolled in the rolling mills of Alabama, while the factories of Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, and other States have furnished the planters their wagons and agricultural implements; and California, Oregon, and Washington have furnished them lumber, grain, flour, horses and mules and other live stock, and built for them their steamboats and other vessels that navigate among and around the islands.

The report shows that they have in the islands forty-two steamers and sailing vessels, and out of those forty-two vessels that are registered there are thirty that have been built in the United States; eight were built by the Hawaiians themselves out of material furnished by our people; one was built in Japan, and the other three in Great Britain, thus bringing home to us the benefits of building these vessels in our own country, placing the cost of them into the pockets of our American mechanics.

So much, Mr. President, in brief for our side of the question. But the Hawaiian side of the question was more beautifully and more logically presented by the distinguished Senator from Alabama than it is possible for me to present it. To the Hawaiian Islands the solemn bound treaty has been the breath of life. The commerce of the Hawaiian islands may be said to be the child, the product, the direct result of the commercial relations established by treaties between the two countries of the Hawaiian Islands and the United States.

In the two years prior to the making of that treaty the Hawaiian Islands exported 49,646,793 pounds of sugar, of which 41,955,984 pounds were sent to the United States; and 2,761,725 pounds of rice, of which 2,347,481 pounds were sent to this country. In 1891 the Hawaiian Islands exported 274,983,580 pounds of sugar, of which all with the exception of 285,000 pounds were sent to this country; and 4,900,450 pounds of rice, of which only 5,698 pounds went elsewhere than to this country.

In fact, the Hawaiian Islands for the seven years, 1885 to 1891 inclusive, exported only 49,811 pounds of sugar to all other countries than to the United States, or 6,323,560 pounds less than they exported to all other countries in the one year 1874; and but 44,116 pounds of rice in the same seven years to all other countries as against 302,340 pounds in the one year of 1874. The commerce of the country is thus, it will be seen, practically with the United States and with the United States only and, I repeat, it has developed as the direct result of the treaty which it is now sought to abrogate.

To claim that that trade would continue to flourish under other conditions is, it seems to me, most chimerical and most improbable. Trade is the distinct result of conditions; change your conditions and you change the result. Supply and demand are two great regulators, it is true, but there can be no continued supply where there is a continued loss, and demand will soon cease if there is an utter absence of the compensatory principle. There is nothing in all this that offers the faintest violence to the most advanced ideas of protection. Free trade is one thing and reciprocity is another. One is an individual contract and the other is a general invitation. They offer the commercial parallel of domestic chastity and promiscuous compliance.

Another point is involved—the less elevated one of selfish interest. Apart from closing up a market and giving the cold shoulder to a good customer, the abrogation of this treaty will imperil our own interests and discount our own investments. There are 40 corporate and 27 unincoporated sugar plantations and mills on the islands, representing an aggregate investment of $33,347,690, and of this amount $24,735,610, or 74.17 per cent of the whole, is owned by Americans. British investments, by the bye, represent 18.11 per cent of the total, and German, 6.02.

Like the unique example offered by Honolulu of the supremacy of our flag, so, I believe, this is the only example on record of our monetary investments in one particular, exceeding those of other nations in a foreign land; with the exception, perhaps, of our interests in Mexican railroads. Yet it is this very supremacy of interest that the Senator from South Dakota would seek to imperil, if not destroy. Again, in our trade with the Islands we employ 68 steamers and sailing vessels having 49,900 tons of registered tonnage and giving employment direct and indirect to 1,000 people.

This fleet has grown up with the necessities of this branch of our international trade, and will lose its livelihood by the diversion of the trade that will surely result from the change in our relations. It is all very well to say that this trade need not be diverted, or that if it is the fleet can be employed in some other trade. The essence of the treaty was that so long as it remained in force the Hawaiian Government would make no similar treaty with any other nation, and that the privileges and rights which under the treaty we enjoy should be ours and ours only. It is this clause of the treaty, and this clause alone, which has kept the British merchant from swamping us out there as he has swamped us in every other foreign port, and the abrogation of the treaty would as surely mean our loss of prestige as punishment follows sin.

Canada and British Columbia stand ready to-day to make a treaty with the Hawaiian Islands. Their agents and their emissaries have been pleading during the past year for them to make a commercial treaty, but they have declined to do so up to the present time, because in this contract with us they declare that they would not entertain a similar proposition with any other country. But the moment it is cancelled they stand ready to do it.

On the question treated by the Senator from Alabama as to whether the cession of Pearl Harbor would fall with the abrogation of the treaty of reciprocity, I do not propose to enter. Like every other question of diplomatic policy there seems to be quite as much to say on one side as on the other. What would appear to be indubitable evidence exists that Secretary Bayard held during President Cleveland's first Administration that the cession and treaty were coterminous; and though the manner of looking at things may have changed, the things themselves can not have altered.

We may construe one way in 1885-1889 and another way in 1893-1894, but it might be as well if we remembered, during this process of construction, that some of the very worst of national reputations have been gained by the insistence of strong powers in exacting from weaker nations what they have been pleased to style "vested rights," as the residue of canceled treaties. And closely in connection with this fact lies that other extremely significant fact, that the present head of the Hawaiian Government has not hesitated to express his opinions that Pearl Harbor reverts to the Hawaiian Islands on the cessation of treaty relations. The very dissonance of opinion upon this section of the question lends an additional gravity to the situation and bids us beware.

The way of abrogation, indeed, is beset with danger signals which it would be criminal to ignore. The loss of the friendship of a neighboring power, small but important; irreparable injury to a treaty-fostered trade; the fall of our flag; the wretched suspicion of a powerful nation stooping to entertain a grudge against a weakling; the possible loss of a strategical point, as has been pointed out by the Senator from Alabama, whose serious value every other government understands, and whose loss we may some day bitterly regret; the insensate play into the hands of grasping competitors—all these things stand as the signs of the times whose meaning we should be most blind and most unpatriotic to misinterpret.

Let us then stand by the counsel of that able, that wise, that diplomatic Senator from Alabama who has given us these wise words of counsel to-day. Let the Republicans join with the Democrats upon one proposition and give a unanimous vote to retain this provision in the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota on the table.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I hope the Senator from Tennessee will not insist upon that motion at this time.

Mr. HARRIS. In view of the fact there have been two arguments against the amendment and that it is the Senator's amendment, I can not resist his appeal. But I give notice that if I can get the floor upon the conclusion of such remarks as the Senator may submit, I shall renew the motion.

[Mr. PETTIGREW addressed the Senate. His speech will be published hereafter.]

Mr. HARRIS. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota on the table.

Mr. CHANDLER. I appeal to the Senator from Tennessee to withdraw his motion in order that I may make a short speech.

Mr. HARRIS. I should readily do it for any other purpose, but not for that.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. JARVIS in the chair]. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. HOAR. I move to indefinitely postpone the bill. That is a debatable motion, and takes precedence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that the immediate motion before the Senate is the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HOAR. I take an appeal. The rule is as distinct as it can be put into words as to the order of the motions. I ask that the rule be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion to lay on the table takes precedence to the motion to indefinitely postpone.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the rule be read. The motion of the Senator from Tennessee is not a motion to lay the bill on the table, but merely a motion to lay an amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the rule.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE XXII.

PRECEDENCE OF MOTIONS.

When a question is pending no motion shall be received but—
To adjourn.
To adjourn to a day certain, or that when the Senate adjourn, it shall be to a day certain.
To take a recess,
To proceed to the consideration of executive business.
To lay on the table.
To postpone indefinitely.
To postpone to a day certain.
To commit,
To amend;
which several motions shall have precedence as they stand arranged; and the motions relating to adjournment, to take a recess, to proceed to the consideration of executive business, to lay on the table, shall be decided without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Massachusetts to appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. HOAR. The order of motions stated in Rule XXII relates to a motion to lay the entire measure upon the table, as I conceive. But a motion to lay a single amendment on the table, which does not carry the bill, and relates only to the amendment, does not, in my judgment, take precedence of a motion to indefinitely postpone the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Massachusetts to appeal?

Mr. HOAR. It is so easy to make another motion that I shall not detain the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. CHANDLER (at 5 o'clock p. m.) I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire that the Senate do now adjourn. [Putting the question.] The noes have it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has announced the result of the vote on the question. The question recurs on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. CHANDLER and Mr. DOLPH called for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to lay the amendment on the table, on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

Mr. LODGE. The motion is to adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to withdraw his motion in order that I may withdraw mine. That is the shortest way out of this trouble.

Mr. CHANDLER. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I withdraw my motion as the shortest way out of the trouble.

The PRESIDING PFFICER. Does the Chair hear any objection to withdrawing the motions? The motions are withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota.
